VISCOUNTS Fujinami and Kano, Lieut.-Generals Okura and other notables of Tokyo intend to establish a race-course at Ikegami, near Tsurumi. Some civil engineers of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce are inspecting the site. The expense is estimated at two hundred thousand yen.

It is reported by a Moji telegram that fifty Japanese female stowaways were found on Oct. 9th on board a Norwegian steamer while off Mutsure island on her way from Moji to Singapore. The captain of the ship called at the island and handed them over to the authorities.

At 5.530 a.m. on Oct. 6th, fire occurred on board the steamer Setoku Maru off Niigata on her way from Otaru and Fushiki. Subsequently, the ship sank. The crew, 22 in all, and twelve passengers saved themselves in boats and reached Niigata. The accident originated in the coal store.

THE steamer Banri Maru which, owing to stormy weather went ashore on Sept. 27th at Alexandrofska, has been floated. She will be brought to Yokohama about Oct. 15th for repairs. The other steamer Koto Maru, which had the same experience, is still aground. Her damage is reported to be severe.

THE Fuji Paper Mill (Kobe) intends to raise a loan of two million yen abroad. The directors of the mill are conducting negotiations with the Kobe agent of a foreign syndicate. The Japanese firm asks for yen 96 per yen 100 with interest at 5 per cent. per annum while the foreign capitalists propose yen 95.

ON October 21st at noon, in the tea-house Koraku-in, Koishikawa, Tokyo, General Terauchi, Minister for Army, will entertain Lieut.-General Burnett and other foreign officers, about forty in all, who have arrived in Tokyo from the front. On this occasion, foreign ministers and their staffs will be present.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON IN JAPAN.

Friday, October 6.

According to intelligence received by the Kokumin Shimbun the British Squadron's lights were not sighted from Kobe until 6.30 p.m. on the 5th and at 7.50 p.m. the ships, 5 in number, entered the harbour, amid loud cheering. The prefectural building and the offices of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha were illuminated; fireworks were sent up from Wada Promontory and the town resounded with shouts of banzai. The Kokumin's special correspondent boarded the Diadem, with some other Japanese, and received her captain's congratulations on the victorious war and on the extension of the alliance, as well as his expressions of pleasure at the welcome given to the ships. He explained that since the night of the 4th the sea had been very rough, so much so that torpedo-craft found navigation very difficult and 6 destroyers had been sent by the Inland sea with the Bonaventure. It was probable that they would not reach Kobe before the 6th. While this conversation was going on Commander Funakoshi arrived, and consulted with the British staff officers. Admiral Noel now appeared and declared that it gave him the greatest joy to come to the allied country. He greatly regretted the delay that had occurred, and he expressed much gratification when he was shown the programme of entertainments. It was arranged that the Squadron should leave Kobe on the morning of the 10th, and steaming at highspeed, should reach Yokohama on the forenoon of the 11th.

Saturday, October 7.

The six destroyers who, together with the Bonaventure, took the Inland Sea route, arrived safely in Kobe at 3.30 p.m. on the 6th. Owing to the inclement weather on that day the intended celebration was postponed until the 7th. The squadron was to have been met by four Japanese ships, but two of these, the Iwate and the Takachiho, pushed on direct to Yokosuka, and only the Kasagi and the Tsukushi visited Kobe.

The Squadron seem to have had a great reception at Dalny, where it called on the 26th of September. Every house hung out the British flag—manufactured in many instances for the occasions—and there was a garden party on shore, when an abundant interchange of expressions of good-will and friendship took place. "Alliance Swings" were among the machinery of entertainment, and Admiral Noel is said to have declared that he had never seen his men enjoy themselves so much.

Sunday, October 8.

The Nichi Nichi says that the British Squadron which is to come to Tokyo Bay will consist of 13 ships, namely, 4 first-class cruisers, 2 second-class, 1 despatch boat and 6 destroyers. This is on the supposition that the Alacrity joins, which is not certain.

Kobe had the same beautiful weather on the 7th as that which prevailed in Tokyo and Yokohama. There appears to have been a very busy routine of entertainments, of which the principal were a garden party given by the Municipality, a welcome party by the same, a banquet by the Prefect, and a ball in the prefectural building. Admiral Noel, speaking at the welcome party, said that he had visited Kobe forty years previously and that he now found the place changed beyond recognition. Its growth had been almost inconceivable. Loud cheers were given for the King of England and the President of the United States.

Tuesday, October 10.

Admiral Noel and his staff landed at 1 p.m. in Kobe and proceeded to the residence of Mr. Kawasaki at Nunobiki, where the art collection of Mr. Kawasaki seems to have been much admired by them. Thence they proceeded to Kyoto where, it is needless to say, they had a great reception. We gather that the Stars and Stripes occupied a not less conspicuous place than the Union Jack and the Rising Sun. In the evening at 6 o'clock, the Municipality's welcome-party took place. The Admiral made a brief speech acknowledging the great honour done to him and his officers, recalling the kindness he had experienced in the same place on the occasion of a visit more than thirty years previously, and expressing sincere thanks for the hearty welcome now given. A Japanese entertainment followed. On the same day at 11 a.m. a special train carried 779 blue-jackets to Kyoto, where they were enthusiastically welcomed and most hospitably treated. They returned to Kobe in the evening.

Wednesday, October 11th.

The following details regarding some of the officers of the British fleet now visiting Yokohama may prove of interest:—

Vice-Admiral Sir Gerard Henry Uctred Noel K.C.B., the Commander of the British Squadron in the Far East, is the son of the late Rev. Augustus W. Noel, Rector of Stanhoe, Norfolk, and was born on March 5th, 1845. He entered the navy in December, 1858, and was promoted Lieutenant in April, 1866, Commander in 1874, and Captain of the Royal Yacht in January, 1881. He was in command of the naval guard to Lord Wolseley at Cape Coast Castle in the Ashanti War, 1873, and was awarded the medal with Kumasi clasp. In 1875 he gained the gold medal of the Royal United Service Institution. In 1893 he was appointed Director of Naval Intelligence, and in the same year became a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty. For three years Captain Noel was a naval A.D.C. to the Queen, and in May, 1896, he attained Flag rank. In February, 1898, he hoisted his flag on H.M.S. Revenge in the Mediterranean, and took charge of the English squadron in Cretan waters. The discontent amongst the Mahomedans in Candia broke out in open violence in September, 1898, the collection of tithes being the cause of the actual outbreak, in which nearly a hundred British soldiers were killed, and about a thousand Christians massacred. The Turkish troops did nothing to aid the British, but assisted the Mahomedans against them, and joined in pillaging the town. Admiral Noel then ordered a bombardment of the place, and afterwards presented an ultimatum to Edhem Pasha, commanding the Turkish troops, and demanded the delivery of the ringleaders of the outbreak within forty-eight hours, the transmission of the tithes collected since September 3rd, and the surrender of the forts and ramparts commanding the town. The ringleaders were given up, and the other terms were ultimately complied with, owing to the uncompromising attitude of Admiral Noel, whose firmness on that occasion went far towards a pacification of the islanders, and a settlement of the Cretan question. He received a K.C.B. for his services. Sir Gerard Noel is the author of "Gun, Ram, and Torpedo" and an "Essay on Naval Tactics." He is a J.P. for Norfolk, and married, in 1875, Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Mr. F. Cresswell.

Capt. W. L. Grant, of the first class cruiser Sutlej, was a midshipman of the Tourmaline during the Egyptian War, 1882 (Egyptian Medal, Khedive's Bronze Star) was landed from the Doris as Commander and was specially promoted to Captain in November, 1900, for services rendered during the Boer War, 1899-1900, when he commanded a detachment of guns operating in the Orange River Colony; was mentioned in Lord Roberts' despatch of 31st March, 1900, and has been Naval Adviser to the Army Council.

Capt. L. G. Tuftnell, of the second class cruiser Astræa, is the inventor of a system of instructing signalmen, which obviates the necessity of using full-sized flags, and which has been patronized by the Admiralty since 1900.

Capt. H. H. Torlesse, of the second class cruiser Bonaventure, was Lieut. of the Minotaur during the Egyptian War, 1882 (Egyptian Medal, Khedive's Bronze Star); Commander of the St George, Flagship of Rear-Admiral H. H. Rawson, C.B.; was present on the occasion of the bombardment and capture of the Sultan of Zanzibar's palace, on the 27th August, 1896, by the Squadron of Rear-Admiral H. H.

Rawson, C.B.; served in the punitive naval expedition commanded by Rear-Admiral Rawson, C.B., and landed from the squadron to punish the King of Benin for the massacre of the political expedition, 1897, ending in the capture of Benin City, 18th February, 1897; was mentioned in despatches (General Africa Medal, Benin Clasp).

Thursday, October 12.

The British squadron arrived in Yokohama on Wednesday forenoon. The torpedo squadron were reported in the morning as passing Kannonsaki and about 9.30 they steamed up the bay followed half an hour later by the cruisers. Their arrival was witnessed by many foreigners and large crowds of Japanese. A number of Japanese torpedo boats and destroyers had previously aroused public attention by coming in and mooring on the Kawasaki side of the anchorage. The Bonaventure and Astræa led the squadron up the bay, being easily distinguishable by their twin funnels, and the Diadem, flying at the fore Vice-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel's flag, followed, leading the main squadron, all four funnelled ships—the Sutlej, Hogue, and Andromeda. They came up the bay in this order, single column of line ahead, but at the Lightship they changed their formation and steamed up to their moorings (the Japanese authorities had buoyed the different stations) in line abreast, the second class cruisers to windward.

The usual salutes were fired, and the routine duty calls were paid, the Bund being crowded by appreciative sightseers while these things were going on.

The Japanese warships in port were under the command of Rear-Admiral Shimamura and consisted of the cruisers Yayeyama, Takao, Takachiho, Iwate (flag-ship) and the converted cruiser Taichu and four torpedo-boats Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 62. Governor Suifu, Mayor Ichihara, and other officials, left the English Hatoba by the steam-launch Asahi and subsequently visited the Diadem. Admiral Sir Gerard Noel met the Japanese officials and thanked them for their visit. As they were leaving the flag-ship, the naval Attache and the Secretary of the British Legation in Tokyo, Mr. Barclay, came on board.

Yokohama was naturally en fête all day. From an early hour British and Japanese flags were, flying in every street and the long vistas of colour which many of the narrower thoroughfares presented will remain as beautiful pictures in the memory for many a long day. A sharp shower of rain fell about half-past nine, but after that the skies cleared and the sun shone forth with a fervency recalling early September. Business was suspended at 12 o'clock; all the foreign stores and many offices in the settlement closing in honour of the fleet.

The garden party arranged by the Municipality was fixed to begin at 2 o'clock, but long before that time dense crowds were assembling in the vicinage of the recreation ground. Most elaborate preparations, had been made, kiosks, beerbooths, matsheds, stalls, and shelters being distributed all over the grounds, which were entered under a huge arch of greenery bearing the word "Welcome." At the sides of the cricket field itself were erected two big platforms from which exhibitions of dancing, conjuring, top-spinning, etc. took place during the afternoon. These stages had been erected by the proprietors of the Kiraku and Hagaromo theatres and some thirty young singers were engaged by them as dancers. The girls were attired in the costumes of Kyoto dancing girls. Their performances proved the centre of attraction, the visitors appreciating the show as much as the Japanese themselves. During the afternoon many foreign ladies put in an appearance and the scene with the bright dresses of the ladies, the naval uniforms and the fluttering flags and devices was very animated.

At 2.30 p.m. Admiral Noel landed at the English Hatoba, attended by his immediate staff, and he drove in a carriage from the Kencho to the recreation ground, where he was most warmly received by the officials of the Kencho and other Government servants and citizens. Governor Sufu, Mayor Ichihara, Rear-Admiral Shinamura, Commander-in-Chief of the Japanese squadron now in Yokohama, acted as the Admiral's ciceroni as he strolled about looking at the performances.

The British bluejackets were entertained to a cold collation in the garden while the British and Japanese officers, with other foreign gentlemen and Japanese notables were entertained in the upstairs rooms of the Shako Club. Mr. Barclay, representing Sir Claude McDonald, and Mr. J. Carey Hall, H.B.M.'s Consul-General, were present. Mayor Ichihara briefly proposed the health of the guests, and Admiral Noel proposed the toast of the Emperor of Japan. This was all the speech making. Two hundred British officers landed and about 1,300 men.

During the afternoon, the naval and city bands played selections and the usual daylight fire-works were sent up. There could be no mistaking the heartiness of the welcome extended to the British fleet, though some of the arrangements could have been improved upon with advantage. The party broke up at 5 p.m.

In the evening a grand dinner party was given in the Oriental Hotel when some twenty British officers including Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, and the commanders of all his ships, with about twenty-five Japanese officers, together with Governor Sufu, Mayor Ichihara, Rear-Admiral Shinamura and others were present.

The Department of Communications presented to the officers and bluejackets of the British fleet, sets of the new fourth series of illustrated war commemoration post cards, five sets to each of the former and a set to each of the latter, the cards being presented by Mr. Munesuye, Director of Posts, Yokohama.

The Japanese newspapers of Tokyo publish articles of warm welcome to the British Squadron. Some give portraits of Admiral Noel, some project the outlines of the Union Jack in over-shadowing dimensions on their pages, and one prints the verses of "God save the King" in a conspicuous position. It may well be imagined that there can not be much novelty in the utterances evoked by such an occasion. The thought naturally occurs to the Japanese to compare their country's naval strength to-day with what it was when Lord Elgin visited Japan's shores 40 years ago, escorted by the first formidable collection of foreign war-ships the people had ever seen. The thought also occurs to them to inquire what factors have contributed to bring about this signal change, and among these factors they count prominently the friendship and assistance of Great Britain. Her Squadron now comes to visit her in the hour of her victory, to celebrate not the latter alone but also the consummation of the most sincere mark of respect and esteem one nation can give another, namely, the conclusion of an offensive and defensive alliance. It is a strange coincidence, the Jiji Shimpō remarks, that this ceremony of congratulation and welcome should synchronise with the centenary of the battle of Trafalgar which made England mistress of the ocean, just as the Battle of the Sea of Japan gave Japan the command in Far-Eastern waters. There seems to be something more than chance in this concurrence of dates, something that draws the two countries very close together. Their union is enormously powerful; absolutely invincible at sea, and too strong to fear any enemy on shore. But it is not a belligerent union. Its purpose is solely pacific, and in the unreserved welcome Japan gives to the Squadron of her great ally, the leading nation of the renowned Anglo-Saxon race, the world should recognise not a desire for conquest or any thought of aggression, but thankful delight that by this clasping of strong hands peace has been assured.

At 9.20 a.m. on the 12th the British guests of Tokyo began to arrive and the last party reached Shimbashi at 10.12 a.m. The numbers were:—

By the 9.20 train	67 officers and 710 men.
" 9.45 "	67 " 710 "
" 10.12 "	Admiral Noel and his staff and 500 men.

Thus one half of the whole number (3,840) of blue-jackets of the Squadron reached the capital on Thursday, and the other half are to proceed thither to-day (13th). The weather was ideal on the 12th and the men seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly. The Park at Hibiya was the scene of entertainment, and as measures had been adopted to exclude all but the very limited number who were the recipients of special invitations, the spacious grounds would have presented an almost lonely appearance had they not been festooned abundantly with the flags of the allied Powers, and had not large spaces been occupied by marquees and booths for the purposes of the various entertainments and for refreshments. The order of entertainments was:—

Acrobatic feats	9.33 a.m. to 4 p.m.
Fencing	10.30 a.m. to 12 noon.
Ju-jitsu	10.30 a.m. to 12 noon.
Wrestling	1.00 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Fire-works soared upwards perpetually and refreshments of all kinds were equally perennial. At noon the Mayor of Tokyo addressed a few words of hearty welcome to the guests and thereafter the luncheon marquees were thrown open. The fun and hilarity never seemed to flag for a moment, and the Park rang continuously with laughter or cheers. Two special trains, the first at 4.50 p.m., the second at 5.30, carried the warrant-officers and men to Yokohama. As for the officers, electric tram-cars took them to the Maple Club at 4 p.m., where a Japanese dinner was served with accompaniment of dancing on a very large scale. The party broke up at 8 p.m. and proceeded to Shimbashi, where they took the train for Yokohama.

Japanese journals say that the great naval review will take place on some day subsequent to the 20th and while the British Squadron is still here. The place will be Kanagawa Bay, and as over a hundred warships are to take part, the ceremony will be unprecedented in the Orient. Preparations are said to be already commencing for the accommodation of the great crowds which may be expected to assemble. The Emperor will probably proceed in the Asahi. The railway service between Yokohama and Tokyo will be increased so that trains will run at intervals of from 15 to 20 minutes.

M. WITTE.

Japan will probably have much to do with M. Witte in the future. All nations will have much to do with him. It is a pity therefore that his mind should be cast in the petty mould it displayed at Portsmouth. What he is reported to have said to a representative of the Slovo is this:—

"You see what one gains by standing firm. I was in a frightful position. I had not the right to accept a compromise, and a rupture seemed likely to enlist the sympathies of all on the side of Japan. Mr. Roosevelt appealed to my patriotism, humanity, and good sense. Fortunately, I succeeded in holding out to the end. The Japanese could not read in my face what was passing in my heart. From the outset I assumed such an indifferent tone that it eventually carried conviction. When the Japanese presented their written conditions I laid the latter aside without looking at them and spoke of something else. On leaving the room I intentionally forgot the conditions lying on the table. When one of the Japanese plenipotentiaries drew my attention to this, asking if I did not wish to take away secret documents which some one might read, I put the papers carelessly into my pocket. It was thus to the last minute of the negotiations."

It really appears that M. Witte believes in the success of his feminine simulations and dissimulations. "When the Japanese presented their written conditions I laid the latter aside without looking at them." Of course he did, for the conditions were in English and M. Witte does not understand English. The Japanese are not by any means so childish as he imagines. They are, on the contrary, about as astute and quick-witted as any people in the world. They observed that M. Witte did not look at the written conditions and they ascribed the fact to his ignorance of English. It never occurred to them for an instant to suppose that he was acting a farce too transparent to mislead the least acute observer. "On leaving the room," continues M. Witte, "I intentionally forgot the conditions lying on the table." So he did, but the impression his conduct produced on the Japanese was one of nervousness. They saw that he was really and naturally in a great hurry to consult the document, for he quickly broke up the seance in order to return to his hotel and have the conditions translated. Therefore when he rose from his seat leaving the paper on the table, they merely thought that he was not fully master of his nerves. If any one had suggested that he was feigning nonchalance the Japanese would have deemed the suggestion very childish. As it was, they concluded that his position, which he himself describes as "frightful," had proved too much for his sang froid. Had he not made this revelation of silly self-gratulation, the Japanese would never have suspected him of such paltry tricks as those he exultingly ascribes to himself.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

The steamer Kanagawa Maru went ashore on the afternoon of October 6th in the neighbourhood of Kure.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha's steamer Sagami Maru (1,900 tons) met with a similar fate at 5 p.m. on October 5th off Kadzusa, Chiba prefecture. On the morning of Oct. 7th, the steamers Fukagawa Maru, Tsukijima Maru and Noge Maru were sent from Yokohama to the scene to assist in floating her.

A Moji telegram says that a Norwegian steamer which left Kiaochow on Sept. 15th for Vladivostok, with military stores is reported missing. Anxiety was entertained at Kiaochow as to her fate.

The steamer Nissho Maru (1,468 tons) having on board two hundred tons of coal, collided with a sailing vessel at 10 a.m. on Oct. 7th in Moji Strait. The latter was sunk.

THE PEACE TREATY.

The Tokyo newspapers are now expressing sympathy with Baron Komura. Several journals have published letters from Portsmouth, describing the course of events. These writers allege that Baron Komura again and again urged the Tokyo Government to allow him to break off the negotiations, and that the various postponements were mainly due to this cause. Ultimately, however, an Imperial order was transmitted to Portsmouth and in the face of it the Plenipotentiaries had no choice. The letters speak of the distress of Baron Komura and his associates as something "painful to witness, and the Asahi Shimbun returns to the charge that the interference of Baron Kaneko was fatal. But it is plain that if Baron Kaneko be held responsible then the Cabinet in Tokyo can not be blamed. The fact, however, of Baron Komura's strong attitude is very clearly indicated. These letters are too unanimous to leave room for any doubt. The Fiji Shimpō hints that if the disclosures were carried any farther they would affect the credit of the President of the United States.

All this kind of comment had to be anticipated. Though the course adopted by the Ministry was undoubtedly the wisest under the circumstances, it was assuredly a course profoundly disappointing to the bulk of the nation, and disappointment does not reason closely. The question whether the Russians would have yielded had the Japanese held out, must remain for ever unsettled and around it the waves of controversy will beat fruitlessly for many a day.

Several allusions are made in these letters to Dr. Morrison whose remarkable personality and profound insight seem to have greatly impressed the Japanese. At the first news of the concessions he showed great disappointment, but on the following day he spoke with great judgment, pointing out the immense advantages Japan had gained and the irreparable losses Russia had suffered. The Fiji Shimpō's correspondent, who transmits this news, says that Dr. Morrison showed himself a true friend to Japan, and that his ability and kindly sentiments were fully recognised. There is one thing not mentioned by this correspondent, namely, that Dr. Morrison has China always in view as well as Japan. His knowledge of China is extraordinarily thorough and he believes that the best hope for her lies in the guidance of Japan. Hence everything tending to impair Japan's prestige is unwelcome to him, not merely from the point of view of Japan herself, but also from the point of view of China.

The Fiji's correspondent relates that it was due to Mr. Denison's keen observation that the provision as to the non-armament of northern Saghalien found its way into the treaty. This condition had been entered in the draft with regard to southern Saghalien, but had not been extended to the northern half. When, however, the treaty had to be fully drawn up, Mr. Denison at once noticed the omission, and insisted on including the northern half of the island. Mr. Martens strenuously objected, declaring that the omission had been intentional. But Mr. Denison's views won the day, as might easily have been anticipated by all who know him.

Shanghai wires that according to the belief ruling in Russian quarters the ratification of the peace treaty will not take place before the 27th instant, but at this moment of writing (11th, a.m.) the belief in Tokyo is that the Tsar ratified the document on the 10th. Something will probably be known before we go to press.

Even into the columns of The Times the rumour has found its way that Baron Kaneko, acting under the guidance of Marquis Ito, was the real Plenipotentiary during the peace negotiations, and that the unsatisfactory result must be ascribed to his interference. The Fiji Shimpō takes some trouble to deny this. Baron Kaneko, we read, did not interfere at all and had no authority to do so. Neither was he in communication with Marquis Ito. As a matter of fact a certain divergence of opinion displayed itself between Marquis Ito and the Ministry, reinforced by the other Elder Statesmen with the exception of Count Matsukata, who was prevented by illness, diplomatic or real, from attending the various conferences in the last phase of the affair. Marquis Ito was for insisting upon the tenure of Saghalien in its entirety and for continuing the war rather than surrender the northern half of the island. But he was over-ruled at the final conference in the Palace. The Fiji, states all this very emphatically, and explains that though the proverbially accurate Times has been misled in the present instance, the error is accounted for by the confidence with which this false rumour was spread abroad from Portsmouth. Our contemporary offers no hint as to the person or persons responsible for the story.

Mr. Yamaza, speaking to a representative of the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, expresses unbounded astonishment at the utter disregard of truth and decency shown by American journalists. A crowd of these gentlemen (?)—127 is the number we have heard stated by one of the Embassy—had assembled at Portsmouth. They besieged Baron Komura for an interview, but he resolutely declined to meet any one of them. Mr. Yamaza conversed with them once or twice, and thereupon they published in the next issues of their journals long verbatim accounts of alleged interviews with Baron Komura. They even went so far as to describe how Baron Komura had bread and melon for luncheon. Nothing was too petty to be detailed by them, and the idea of respecting the privacy which is the right of every individual never seemed to occur to them. In short it is plain that their contact with American newspapers at first hand produced a most unpleasant impression on the members of the Japanese Embassy. We commend these facts to the attention of the critic who lately announced that deep-set dishonesty is a cancer at the heart of the Japanese nation. If this critic and others of his kind looked a little more carefully at home conditions before abusing the Japanese, they would hesitate to pen sweeping condemnations. For good solid lying there is no occasion to visit the East.

UNEMPLOYED AFTER THE WAR.

The war summoned from industrial pursuits and sent into the unproductive field a large number of youths. Their places were filled in the factory and the mill by hands hitherto unemployed, and since, at the same time, the war brought a largely increased demand for manufactured goods, the services of the previously idle were in additional vogue. But now the war is over. The young men will return in tens of thousands, factories will no longer find an abnormal demand for their products, and it is inevitable that a great number of men should be reduced to the "no-work-to-do" condition. For a time they will support themselves on their savings made during the past eighteen months, but the pinch of want must ultimately be felt, and it is possible that the pending winter may see a considerable access of crime. The Chuo Shimbun expresses this fear and goes into some particulars. The Tokyo Arsenal, the Itabashi, Meguro and Iwahama powder-mills—these are examples which at once suggest themselves as places where there will be a great and sudden diminution in the number of employees. They gave work to ten thousand hands before the war, but thereafter the total rose to thirty thousand. Concerning the Osaka Arsenal and the workshops at the naval ports as well as other factories, our contemporary gives the following figures:—

	Before the War.	During the War.
Osaka Arsenal.....	9,500	16,000
Yokosuka Works	6,150
Kure Works	12,837
Sasebo Works	4,288
Maizuru Works	774
Akabane Works.....	1,468
Shimose Powder Mill	238
Takeshiki Works	336
Ominato Works	79
Senju Cloth Factory	26,180	32,180
Army Provisions and Fodder Works	1,000	2,000
Army clothing and Boot Works	140	280
Sakura Company's Leather Factories	350	1,100
Shinagawa Woollen Weaving Factory	500	2,350
Seichu Kaisha (Button Factory)	1,000	1,000
Fugetsudo Biscuit Factory	350	500
	190

All the above are works palpably bound to suffer by the restoration of peace. They alone show a reduction of employed persons to the number of 30,000, and doubtless if the investigation could be extended to the whole country the figure would be very much larger.

DR. MORRISON.

The Fiji Shimpō publishes intelligence that Dr. Morrison is to replace Mr. Smalley as Washington correspondent of The Times. Two explanations are offered. One is that Dr. Morrison was originally sent to Portsmouth for the purpose of assisting Mr. Smalley and collecting news for the latter to transmit by telegram. In that capacity Dr. Morrison discovered that Japan had resolved to abandon the indemnity. He communicated the fact to Mr. Smalley 24 hours before the event, but Mr. Smalley did not telegraph it, not attaching sufficient credence to its provenance. Another explanation is that Mr. Smalley allowed his pro-Russian proclivities to colour his news, in spite of Dr. Morrison's remonstrances. But we believe that the true cause is to be found in Mr. Smalley's desire to resign the arduous duties of correspondent. He is nearly 80 years of age, and the time for rest has fully come. Before Dr. Morrison left the Far East for Portsmouth there was some fear that this exchange would be effected. We say "fear" because, although it is certain that Dr. Morrison will distinguish himself wherever he is posted, his permanent departure from China would be a lasting source of regret. He had made the Chinese sphere absolutely his own, mastering all its perplexing phases and acquiring a fund of information which was probably quite unique. How he is to be replaced we do not see. The Times has at Shanghai a correspondent of the highest ability who is also deeply versed in Chinese affairs, but it is uncertain whether he could be transferred to Peking.

POLITICAL NOTES.

The various sections of the Seiyu-kai met separately on the 6th instant, and in every case except one—the Shikoku section—a distinct declaration of hostility to the Ministry was adopted. Thus seven out of the eight sections have now joined the Opposition, and it is difficult to see how the Party, as a whole, can avoid following this lead. Each section appointed a committee, and these committees were to meet in Tokyo on the 7th instant to consult about measures for giving effect to their policy. It is not likely the Shikoku section will ultimately run counter to the majority.

On the 7th instant the agitation in the ranks of the Seiyu-kai continued. They seem to have quite broken away from their leaders' control and to be determined to oppose the Cabinet on the peace question. The only dissentients are the local sections of Shikoku and Yamaguchi. It is not certain, indeed, whether the Shikoku members dissent; they are merely on the fence. But from Choshu has come a definite remonstrance that this attitude of hostility to the peace terms is plainly at variance with the expressed views of the Party's leader, to whom the management of the business should be entrusted. The other sections—six out of eight—do not seem to pay any attention to this remonstrance, coming from a small minority. Everything indicates that they have determined to arraign the Ministry.

The Yushikai of the House of Representatives was composed from all the parties with the object of investigating the disturbance in Tokyo and adopting suitable measures in the sequel of inquiry. It has now been dissolved, its committee having reported that all expedient representations have been made in the proper quarters, but that the Authorities declined to adopt the Committee's resolutions, and nothing now remained except to treat these matters as political issues. The raison d'être of the association having thus disappeared, its dissolution necessarily followed.

The Tai-ro Doshi-kai, which had for its immediate object to prevent the ratification of the peace treaty, has been broken up. It recognises that its efforts are futile since the treaty has secured the approval of the Privy Council, in which body the hopes of the agitators chiefly centered.

Sixty-seven members of the House of Representatives belonging to the Seiyu-kai and calling themselves the Yushi Daigishikai, met on the 8th instant and unanimously adopted a resolution couched in very brief but emphatic terms. It said:—"The Government must be held responsible for the recent failure in the country's foreign policy." Messrs. Matsuda, Haseba and Sugita, as well as other prominent members of the Party attended the meeting, but Messrs. Hara Kei and Ooka Ikuzo were absent, and the Yamaguchi and Kyoto sections stood aloof, their contention being that such a resolution was directly opposed to the spirit of Marquis Saionji's speech. It would thus seem that the Seiyu-kai are split into two, and that the larger half is opposed to the Cabinet.

Subsequently Messrs. Haseba and Sugita proceeded to the residence of Marquis Saionji and submitted the resolution to him. The Marquis refrained from any comment. He merely said that he would receive the resolution "for purposes of reference," and he explained that he would have attended the convivial gathering of the Party, held after the above meeting, had he not been prevented by illness so sharp that it was impossible for him even to visit his uncle, Marquis Kikutei, who was lying at the point of death.

As to the meeting of the Diet, there appear to be now very little prospect of an extraordinary session. It could not be summoned until after the exchange of ratifications, and consequently the earliest date would be the end of November, thus rendering simultaneous the ordinary and the extraordinary sessions.

There appears to be a growing discontent about the special session of the Diet. The Tiji Shimpō adds its voice to swell this dissatisfaction. It must be admitted that the Prime Minister showed some lack of deliberation when he informed the leaders of the Seiyu-kai that Baron Komura would be in Tokyo by about the 5th of October and that a special session would be opened in the middle of that month. According to the Law of the Houses an interval of 40 days must elapse between the date of summoning a session and the date of opening it, but that period can be shortened by Imperial decree. It is true that Baron Komura's return was delayed by illness, but the delay has been a matter of only a fortnight, and had the originally announced programme been adhered to, the special session might have met at the end of October, whereas it is not now spoken of as likely to meet before the end of November. One does not clearly see what good objects are to be served by summoning a special session in such haste, and at a time when the nation is still seething with unreasoning excitement. A special session would merely furnish an opportunity for the agitators to renew their disturbance. But at any rate Count Katsura's promise was not discreetly given. It puts a new weapon into the hands of his enemies.

There is much bewilderment about the question of ratification and promulgation. No credence is now attached to the rumour that the Mikado ratified the Treaty on the 8th instant. The fact seems to be that Japan is waiting to hear of Russia's ratification, and news in that sense had not been received up to the evening of the 9th. Some journals appear to think that the Treaty will not be promulgated until the ratifications have been exchanged, but there is no valid reason for such a forecast. The exchange of ratifications will take place at Washington. Duly attested copies of the Treaty will have to be sent thither from Tokyo and St. Petersburg, and they will then be exchanged, Mr. Takahira handing to Baron Rosen the Japanese copy and Baron Rosen handing to Mr. Takahira the Russian copy. Even supposing that ratification were effected in time for the copy to be despatched by the Siberia on the 13th instant, the exchange could not take place before the end of this month, and if publication were withheld until then, heavy losses would be entailed on merchants and ship-owners, who are anxiously waiting until the present blockade is removed, to say nothing of the fact that pending promulgation there can be no withdrawal of troops on a large scale.

Tokyo journals state that the Emperor of Japan ratified the Treaty of Peace on the 8th instant, and that the fact was immediately telegraphed to the St. Petersburg Government, through the United States Representative in the Russian capital. The probability is therefore that the Treaty will be promulgated on the 10th at latest. Exchange of ratifications will subsequently take place at Washington, but so soon as ratification has been effected by both Sovereigns and the treaty has been promulgated, the withdrawal of the troops may commence.

The Tiji Shimpō has a telegram from London saying that the Continental newspapers are earnestly discussing a quadruple alliance between Russia, France, England and Japan. It is extremely problematical whether an actual alliance would be possible between these 4 Powers, but we see nothing to prevent an entente which would secure the world against any disturbance of the peace during the period of the entente's duration. At all events the mere fact that such an understanding is discussed is good news. It seldom or never happens that on the very morrow of a great war the belligerents can so far lay aside their animosity as to talk of friendship, yet that appears to be possible in the case of Japan and Russia. Throughout nearly the whole war the combatants succeeded in preserving a spirit of camaraderie which was as picturesque as it was admirable, and when we further recall the quite unexceptional temper shown by the Japanese throughout the struggle, their almost absolute freedom from excesses of every kind and their unwearied display of mercy and benevolence, it is not difficult to conceive that the Russians have emerged from the fight with a keen appreciation of their gallant and highly civilized foes. We say nothing of the conduct of the Russians, further than to echo most heartily the appreciation of the military expert of The Times, namely, that these soldiers of the Tear, though they never won a victory, displayed in their long period of adversity a tenacity of courage and a stubbornness of resolution not less honourable to them than were the successes of the Japanese to the flag of the Rising Sun. There is nothing unnatural or unreasonable in the speedy restoration of friendship between two such peoples. The Japanese, indeed, have already declared their readiness to clasp hands, and it is pleasant to see that a similar spirit is growing in Russia.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that Mr. Leonard Courtney has addressed to The Times a letter vehemently condemning the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, but The Times says that his arguments will not avail to change English public opinion, which has for years regarded the Anglo-Japanese alliance as the greatest achievement of British policy.

It appears that Russia is responsible for delay in ratifying the Peace Treaty. No explanation is offered.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, with reference to the recent rumour of the Prince of Wales' coming to Japan, that according to semi-official intelligence the King of England, wishing to signalize his appreciation of the close relations established between Great Britain and Japan by the Alliance, has decided to offer the Garter to the Mikado, and will send the decoration by the hand of the Prince of Wales, who will come here from India.

THE UNITED CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

The fourteenth meeting of the United Chambers of Commerce in Tokyo came to an end on the forenoon of the 6th. It had previously been decided to entrust to a committee the duty of collating the views expressed by the various Chambers and embodying them in a general resolution or representation. This resolution was unanimously adopted. Its preamble recalled the fact that at the 13th meeting of the Chambers in October, 1904, an Imperial message had been issued directing the nation to firmly persevere so as to secure a permanent result of the war. There had been no lack of earnestness and self-sacrifice on the part of the people. But now, at their 14th meeting, the United Chambers were constrained to express their regret that the terms of the peace just concluded were not in accord with the nation's desires and expectations. However, the situation could not now be altered, and the Chambers recognised that their duty under the circumstances was to apply themselves diligently to the prosecution of post-bellum measures of development so as to consolidate the national economy. These measures presented no small difficulty. The country had emerged from the war with a greatly increased debt and without receiving any indemnity. To deal with such a situation the nation must show the same spirit of united effort that had carried it successfully through the war. It must adopt a positive policy of progress; a policy tending not only to the growth of trade but also to the augmentation of production. There must not be any concentration of attention on one object alone, such as the expansion of armaments, but equal efforts must be devoted to commerce, production and distribution, and to civilizing and extending the opportunities now opened in Manchuria and Korea. It would be the Government's duty to give whatever aid the public resources permitted to the assistance of trade and industry, for no country could be really strong in arms that was not sound economically. This was the firm conviction of the United Chambers of Commerce, and their determination was to act in obedience to it. In pursuance of that purpose and persuasion, they submitted the following list of routes into which the energy of the public should be directed:—

I.—Measures relating to foreign trade, namely:—

- (a) Improvement of customs houses and harbours.
- (b) Appointment of commercial and industrial officials.
- (c) Extension of the Consular system.
- (d) Improvement of the system of despatching to foreign countries students of commercial, industrial and agricultural pursuits.
- (e) Despatch to various countries of vessels to serve as exhibitions of goods, and the establishment of exhibitions on shore.
- (f) Abolition of conventional tariffs.
- (g) Conclusion of a customs union between Japan and Korea.

(h) Satisfaction of the Chambers' wishes with regard to the new Russo-Japanese Commercial Treaty. (These wishes are not published.—Ed. J.M.)

(i) Reform of the customs duties.

II.—Measures relating to productive enterprises, namely:—

- (a) Enactment of measures for the protection of productive enterprises.
- (b) Increase of the number of industrial experimental stations, and encouragement to the erection of model factories.

(c) Increase of commercial and industrial schools and development of the system of apprentice schools (tokei gakkō).

(d) Opening of an international exhibition.

III.—Measures relating to national finance and the circulation of money, namely:—

- (a) Administrative economies.
- (b) Adjustment of taxation.

- (c) Repayment and adjustment of national debts.
 - (d) Prevention of the expansion of media of exchange, and raising of domestic loans.
 - (e) Improvement of machinery of monetary circulation.
 - (f) Establishment of a Bank of China and Japan.
- IV.—Measures relating to facilities of transport; namely:—
- (a) Building of railways.
 - (b) Reform of the regulations for the handling of goods sent by railway.
 - (c) Development of the telephone system.

The Chambers presented a separate representation with regard to changes in the time of transmitting telegrams and adjustment of the transportation of the returning armies so as to cause the minimum disturbance of trade. There were also motions with regard to the census and with regard to emigration, but exactly what form they took we can not gather from newspaper reports. In fact the above list is evidently a mere skeleton. It must have been accompanied by a much more detailed exposition of views. The latter, however, has not yet been made known. Before the chambers separated they entrusted to the Tokyo institution the duty of adopting and pursuing such steps as might contribute to the achievement of the above purposes.

On the motion of Mr. Soyeda Jukichi it was unanimously resolved that the Chambers should despatch Mr. Nakano Buyei as their representative to convey to the British Squadron a warm expression of the nation's profound satisfaction that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance had been renewed and extended.

The party given by the United Chambers of Commerce to celebrate the conclusion of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance was held in the Koshikawa Park on the afternoon of the 6th. Some two hundred persons were present, the only foreigners being the British Minister and about five members of the staff of the British Legation. The weather was eminently unpropitious, but it did not greatly interfere with the proceedings. Mr. Nakano Buyei, President of the Tokyo Chamber, made a brief speech on behalf of the United Chambers. Having expressed his sense of the great honour of addressing such an assembly, he described the Alliance as an instrument securing the tranquillity of the Orient and as the consummation of the wishes of the high contracting parties. The merchants and manufacturers of Japan, recognising that peace and equality of opportunities were thus safeguarded, would devote themselves to their avocations with renewed zeal and confidence. They sincerely hoped for the continued growth of friendship with England and the development of the trade of both countries, and they would neglect no effort to promote those ends. He concluded by proposing the health of the King of England. Sir Claude MacDonald replied as follows:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN,—It is not within the usual province of a diplomatic representative to make speeches, but on an occasion like this, and as I have been specially asked, I propose to say a very few words in answer to the remark of your worthy President. In the first place I beg to thank the United Chambers of Commerce of Japan for the honour they have done me and the members of my Legation in asking us here to-day to celebrate the new Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

This Alliance, as you know, has been entered into to uphold the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations, and above all to consolidate and maintain general peace in the Far East.

As you are aware the first Anglo-Japanese Alliance was also entered into for the purpose of maintaining peace, but unfortunately it failed in its object. Undeterred by this, the Island Empires of the East and West have now entered into a firmer, closer, and stronger alliance in the earnest hope that by its means the object for which the first alliance was made may at all hazards be achieved by the second.

That this may be so is, I am convinced, the earnest wish of all lovers of peace, progress, humanity and goodwill, amongst whom I am sure the members of the United Chambers of Commerce of Japan stand in the front rank.

Mr. Soyeda ably translated Mr. Nakano's speech into English and Sir Claude's speech into Japanese. The party broke up at half past four.

COUNT OKUMA AND THE UNITED CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

Count Okuma addressed the United Chambers of Commerce on the 5th instant. His speech lasted for an hour and a half, but we can give only a brief epitome of it. The Count pointed out how largely the country's expenditures and debts have increased during recent years. Prior to the war with China, the national outlays had been from 80 to 90 millions of yen and the national debts had aggregated 280 millions. During the 10 years subsequent to the war, the State's outlays had grown to 250 millions and its debts to 580 millions. And now, after the conflict with Russia, they found themselves spending from 350 to 400 millions annually, and their debt, when the cost of post-bellum measures was added, would probably aggregate 2,500 millions, or about 2,200 or 2,300 millions without these measures. Out of this total some 1,500 to 1,800 million must be regarded as foreign debt and some 700 to 900 million as domestic debt. The yearly interest on the debt would be some 125 millions, and if the system of repayment in 20 or 25 years were adopted, the total disburseable on account of interest and principal would be about 140 millions annually. Further, the pensions payable to military men and their families on account of the China-Japan war amounted to 2,400,000 yen yearly, and inquiries made in official quarters indicated that the corresponding payments in the sequel of this war would be some 22 millions annually. Thus the load on the Treasury would be something like 165 millions of yen. The burden of taxation had been 4 yen per caput before the war, and had now risen to 7 yen, while the national debt in the same time had increased from 12 yen to 50 yen. Undoubtedly there would be projects for increasing the national armaments after the war, but it had to be remembered that such things must be in proportion to the nation's finances. One of the great questions of the moment would be whether to continue the war taxes, or to modify them or to abolish them. They must remember that in six years from this time the country would recover its tariff autonomy. The Count then proceeded to express his own individual opinion on a few matters. He observed that in Europe the countries having the largest debts were those doing the largest export trade. It was not so in Japan's case. Her imports exceeded her exports. Even in the matter of her chief export staple, raw silk, its figure was excelled by that of the chief import staple, raw cotton. The country had sometimes to pay away its capital on this account. Again, the population of Japan was growing rapidly, and the consumption of food-stuffs was increasing in the same ratio. He did not regard this with so much concern as it gave some people, yet there were causes for uneasiness. They could not derive consolation from the record of a country like England. England produced only one-fourth of the food-stuffs consumed by her people, and was thus dependent upon foreign countries for three-fourths. But England had capital invested all over the world and was besides the maritime carrier of the nations. There were no such alleviating features in Japan's case. It was true that a much larger area of land might probably be brought under cultivation. At present the extent was only 75 millions of cho (187½ millions of acres) and the Department of Agriculture and Commerce was revolving plans for large development. But at the present rate of growth the population would be 100 million in the course of 48 years, and then the question of sustenance assumed a very pressing aspect.

Referring to the Fushun coal mine and the statement that it was worth 100 million yen, Count Okuma ridiculed the idea. He doubted whether the Fushun mine would return 10 per cent. interest on the capital sunk in developing it. The distance of the mine from the port of shipment, Dalny, was nearly 400 miles, and by the time the mineral reached that place it would scarcely have cost less than 6 yen a ton, which outlay would enable the Kyushu coal to compete with it. He strongly deprecated these optimistic views which tended to turn people's heads and to obscure the true situation. Concerning the Count's estimate of the country's foreign debt after the conclusion of present operations, he arrived at it thus:—

	Millions.
Ruined during the war.....	820
Owing before the war	160
Bonds held by foreigners	200
Required for withdrawing troops, etc.,	400
	1,580

Confronted by such obligations the managers of the nation's finance had a difficult task before them, and he warned his hearers against placing any reliance on rumours that the returning Plenipotentiaries would bring some valuable asset in their pockets, or that Saghalien would be sold for a great price, or that foreign capital would pour in. Such ideas had better be dismissed. The people must rely on their own exertions. They must bring to the solution of this problem the same courage and the same determination that they had brought to the conflict with Russia. The Count then dwelt upon the advantages offered to Japan by the markets of China, and upon the disadvantages of dear money, want of expert knowledge and deficiency of manufacturing and commercial machinery, but it might fairly be hoped that time would remedy all these defects. History furnished many instances of countries which, so far from benefiting by victorious wars, had dated their decline from armed successes. Japan must take care that such was not her lot. He called his hearers' attention to a saying made by an eminent American scholar in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on the previous day; the saying that civilization unaccompanied by morality was doomed to fail. Not infrequently it was alleged by foreign observers that the commercial conscience of the Japanese was inferior to that of the Chinese. If that were so the prospects of the country lost much of their brightness. They must remember that Japan's future was in their hands, and must never forget that morality alone could make civilization successful.

Miss Alice Roosevelt left Yokohama on the morning of Sunday for Nikko. At Shimbashi, she was met by the Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies and Mrs. Nagasaki, Count Terajima, Confidential Secretary to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Countess Terajima, etc. In company with them, she left Ueno by the 9 a.m. train. She is expected to return about October 10th.

CRICKET.

Some one sharing Rudyard Kipling's contempt for sports which occupy the attention of grown men, has obtained access to the columns of the Japan Times, where he freely airs his antipathy. His immediate theme is the interport cricket match and he finds it strange that "serious business men, having to do their share in the world's work, should abandon all their obligations for a week and travel hundreds of miles simply to play a child's game with a ball." It is a novel sensation to be introduced to cricket under the title of "a child's game." Such a description could come only from one entirely unacquainted with the sport, and in those that don't know, much is pardonable. The average Englishman will not greatly resent being told that he would not fail occasionally in times of trial were his craze for play less absorbing; that his officers would have made a better showing in the Transvaal had they not taken their ping-pong sets thither, and that "if Colenso was won on the playing fields of Eton, it would have been more practically useful to win at Colenso itself instead." Not many of us are disposed to deny that the love of Englishmen for athletic games is carried to excess. But what we all do emphatically deny is that a system is radically discredited by its abuses. Cricket is but one of many pastimes which must be considered not solely for their own sake but also and mainly for the sake of the manly tone, the keenly competitive instinct, the self-reliance and the spirit of enterprise that they awaken in their votaries. Taken all round, the Anglo-Saxon race, though it has many failings, need not be greatly ashamed either of itself or of the part it has played on the world's stage. Are the qualities that make for its success due in any respect to the training its youths receive on the cricket ground, in the racket court, in the foot-ball field and in the boat-race, or have they been developed in spite of that training? It is for the sake of its collateral bearing that we allude to the problem here. Our interest in such assaults on the manners and customs of our nation would be languid were they addressed solely to English ears, for assuredly it is not its love of manly pastimes that is going to drag down the Anglo-Saxon race to the dust. But our contemporary addresses itself to Japanese readers, and if the benefit of these were sincerely consulted they would be encouraged in their affection for the very sports which the writer in the Japan Times denounces. Not many years have passed since those most solicitous about the well-being of the rising generation in Japan were earnestly preaching to officials and educationists the vital necessity of awakening in schools and colleges a love for athletic pursuits. Anemic, spectacled youths, grappling with tasks which their own unresting application unfitted them to perform successfully, were a sight that suggested great uneasiness to all who believed virility to be as essential to a nation as learning. It was impossible not to sympathise with the desperate earnestness that drove the Japanese to this perpetual labour, but it was also impossible to ignore the fact that such mental labour if unrelieved by wholesome pastimes threatened to produce physical deterioration. So the cry was for field sports of all kinds, and everyone welcomed the responsive growth of a taste for base-ball, tennis, boat-racing and athletics. Have these things now become superfluous? Are the Japanese such a strong, robust race that they can afford to dispense with devices for promoting health and vigour, to say nothing of the fact, altogether ignored by Rudyard Kipling and his school, that the manly exercises so much affected by the Anglo-Saxon race constitute an excellent safeguard against excesses of a vicious nature? It does not seem to us that the sneers of the writer in the Japan Times are either timely or beneficent.

POST-BELLUM FINANCE.

We read in the Chuo Shimbun, a generally well-informed journal, that the Government intends to pursue a positive policy after the war, leaving nothing undone that may help to promote production directly or indirectly. Granting the thoroughness of such measures, however, and granting the exercise of the utmost industry on the part of the Japanese people, still there can not be any immediate prospect of restoring the balance of trade. Imports will continue to exceed exports for some time, and the necessity of a corresponding outflow of specie must be anticipated. Then there is the interest on the country's foreign debt and the interest on domestic bonds held by foreigners, all of which items make a formidable total which has to be provided for in next year's budget. The details are thus set down:—

Excess of Imports (average of the past 3 years)	Yen.
Interest on Foreign Debt (898,196,000 yen)	14,842,790
Interest on Foreign Bonds held by Foreigners	43,152,460
Payments (various) for Military Necessaries	6,000,000
Total	65,995,250

On the other hand, the prospective sources of gold supply are:—

Moneys spent in the country by foreign tourists and products of mines in Korea, &c.....	Yen.
Gold produced in Japan	27,000,000
Total	31,000,000

This leaves a sum of nearly 35 millions which must be found. In other words, 35 millions represent the probable outflow of specie, and the only apparent method of ultimately correcting this state of affairs is to develop the country's productive resources and thus increase the export trade. No doubt the yield of rice could be considerably increased by improvements in the parcelling out of farm-lands, a reform which Count Inouye strenuously endeavoured to promote between 1887 and 1890. The import of foreign rice is becoming a serious item of national outlay. Naturally one of the earliest steps taken by the Treasury will be to convert the high-interest debts contracted during the war. The four borrowings made and the sums of interest that have to be paid on them are these:

	Yen.	Interest Yen.
First 6 per cent. Loan of 97,630,000	97,630,000	5,857,800
Second do do ... 117,156,000	117,156,000	7,029,360
First 4½ per cent. Loan of 292,890,000	292,890,000	13,180,050
Second do do ... do	13,180,050
Totals	800,566,000	39,247,260

Even the 4½ per cent. loans will ultimately be changed to 4 per cent.

The Kokumin has a telegram from Peking that the Russian Government intends to issue a newspaper in the Chinese language, at Harbin. The capital is estimated at fifty thousand roubles. Senkisei, one of the Chinese compradores of the Russo-Chinese Bank, has been summoned by the Russians in Manchuria to attend to the business.

KOREA.

Friday, October 6.

Tokyo journals allege that Mr. Hayashi's imminent return from Seoul is in connexion with the negotiation of a treaty which shall give practical effect to Japan's protectorate over Korea. The Koreans are said to be arriving at a due appreciation of the situation and to be showing a corresponding access of docility, but not unnaturally they display some trepidation, being ignorant of what may be in store for them, and probably interpreting Japan's intentions by the standard they would themselves adopt in a similar situation. Rumour says that the British and Italian Representatives are about to withdraw from Seoul, and the event is of course regarded as the first evidence of Japan assuming complete control of Korea's foreign affairs, but we should judge these stories to be premature.

Saturday, October 7.

Rumour persists in attributing to the Japanese and Korean Governments the intention of immediately concluding a treaty which shall deal in a really practical manner with the present invertebrate situation, and shall enable the former Government to abandon the futile policy of attempting to direct without controlling. Mr. Hayashi is likely to return to Tokyo for 3 months, and the withdrawal of the British and Italian Ministers is spoken of as a part of the programme, which includes the transfer of Korea's foreign affairs to Japanese hands. It is further stated that the Chinese Representative is to be transferred to a post in Europe. In this context it may be stated that the text of the new Anglo-Japanese Treaty was communicated to the Korean Government on the 5th instant. It seems to have produced a great sensation. The Emperor became diplomatically sick and the Cabinet Ministers withdrew to their private residences to watch the turn of events. There will doubtless be an outcry on the part of the journals which, though published in the English language, devote themselves with diligent assiduity to multiplying the difficulties of the Korean problem. We can understand this attitude on the part of the local German organ. It reflects the feeling of certain Germans who have Kiaochow on the brain, and who regard every expansion of Japan's influence as a menace to Germany's political and commercial expansion in China. But it is more difficult to comprehend the reason of such a tone on the part of newspapers which, professing to be purely British, ought consequently to assist in promoting the policy which their own country has adopted.

The insurgents in Kanwong-do have apparently been suppressed, but fresh commotions are reported in the regions immediately north of Seoul and in Antung. These disturbances will have to be taken in hand by the Japanese military authorities unless the Korean Government displays greater vigour in dealing with them. Korea assumes a more and more striking resemblance to Egypt. A Far Eastern Arabi alone is needed to complete the analogy.

The Chuo Shinbun writes editorially on the subject of Korea. While predicting that a radical solution of the problem will soon be found, it does not deny that complications now unlooked for may supervene. Russia has effaced herself in the sequel of the war. England has consented to Japan's protectorate. France's entente with her over-sea neighbour will probably render her complacent. But it is very fresh in public memory that whereas the Morocco question seemed to have been virtually settled by the Anglo-French entente, Germany suddenly stepped in and re-opened the disturbance. As for the Emperor of Korea, however, he must have ability enough to comprehend that the day is past when he could make puppets of Russia and Japan, playing off one against the other to the disadvantage of both. He will be wise if he submits to the position Japan is about to take, a position guaranteeing the peace of the East and insuring to the unquestionable benefit of Korea herself. Thus at length a problem which has perplexed the Extreme Orient since the days of Jingo Kogo will be finally solved.

Sunday, October 8.

The disturbances continue in Korea and many voices are raised against the alleged dilatoriness of the Japanese Government, which refrains from directing a military force against the insurgents. But the Japanese Government is understood to explain that this duty must be left in the first place to the Korean authorities, whose failure to discharge it would be Japan's sole justification for interfering under existing international conditions. There is no disturbance whatever in regions where Japanese military sway is established. The area troubled by the rioters is remote from any centres of material interest, and their mischief is limited to smashing a few telegraph wires or post offices. If the time comes for taking them vigorously in hand, the Japanese will not shrink from doing so.

The Hochi Shinbun has a paragraph printed very prominently which alleges that the United States Government is not only prepared to withdraw its Representative from Seoul, but is also assisting Japan to bring about a similar withdrawal on the part of other Powers. We reproduce this information for what it may be worth, supplementing it by a telegram to the Nichi Nichi which says that the British Minister will withdraw in November. The Jiji Shimpō seems to credit the statement that all the foreign Ministers are to be withdrawn and so does the Nippon. The latter journal observes that the disposition of the various Powers towards Japan will be put to the test on this occasion. It expresses no doubt of the final result, but it thinks that any State which desires to be obstructive may find an opportunity at this crisis.

A disturbance is reported at Kason in connexion with the ginseng farm. On the 23rd of September a mob of some 500 men invaded the plantations and began to carry off the crop which was just maturing. A party of Korean guards was sent to the rescue, but they failed to restore order and merely succeeded in arresting two persons who are said to have been Japanese. A strenuous attempt to rescue these was subsequently made by the marauders and it ultimately became necessary to employ a force of Japanese gendarmes. The affair appears to have been actuated simply by motives of plunder, and it is stated that Japanese adventurers were among the ring-leaders.

Wednesday, October 11th.

With reference to the withdrawal of the Italian Representative from Seoul, the Jiji Shimpō, speaking with some show of authority, regards it as a distinct endorsement of Japan's policy, and expresses gratitude to Italy who has always shown herself a good friend of this country. Our contemporary thinks that the negotiations now going on at Seoul do not take the form of a direct proposal for the withdrawal of the Foreign Representatives, but that Japan merely formulates her intention of taking charge of Korea's foreign affairs and making Tokyo the seat of management, whence it follows as an obvious inference that legations in Seoul become a superfluity. The belief is that Great Britain, the United States and Italy have all fallen in with the Japanese project, and as Russia has not yet any treaty of commerce with Korea, the Powers remaining to be conciliated are Germany, France and Austria-Hungary.

Thursday, October 12.

Frost has become very severe in North-eastern Korea. The Tumen is said to be frozen to a thickness of three inches. General Hasegawa has gone to Gensan. Probably the object of his journey is to direct at first hand the negotiations for a truce. It appears that an agreement on this subject has not yet been reached by the Russian and Japanese commanders at the front, the Japanese finding it impossible to admit the Russians' contention as to the southern limits of the neutral zone. Nevertheless both sides have succeeded in avoiding collisions, which, after all, is the essential point of a truce.

Friday, October 13.

Mr. Hayashi left Seoul on the 11th without the audience which he had sought from the Emperor. We do not gather that any special significance attaches to the latter feature, though the abruptness of the Minister's departure may have been intended to wear a suggestive character. During Mr. Hayashi's absence his duties will be performed by Mr. Hagiwara. He is expected to remain some three weeks in Japan.

One of the leaders of the insurrection has been arrested by the Japanese gendarmes, but it does not appear that the insurrection itself is approaching an end. On the contrary the anti-Japanese agitation is described as increasing, and the newspapers are said to be publishing more and more incentive articles. The Jiji Shimpō compares this futile effort to the proverbial axe of the praying mantis (toro no ono), and expresses profound regret that the people of Korea should be betrayed into courses which can only lead them into trouble.

DEATH OF CHIEF NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR SASO.

Chief Naval Constructor Saso expired on the 9th instant in the hospital of Dr. Nagayo. He was a man of great eminence in Japan. Tokyo newspapers say that in 1868, when the Naval College (Heigakuryo) was first started, Saso, a native of Tosa, was among four students specially selected and sent up from the fiefs. He was subsequently sent to England, where he studied ship-building for 9 years. He returned in the Fuso, and was connected with the first building of Japanese men-of-war in Europe in the year 1883. The Naniwa, the Taka-chiho and the Unebi were the vessels then designed by Japanese naval officers, who were not by any one supposed to be yet capable of such work. Thenceforth the Japanese naval architects proved themselves most competent designers again and again, and at their head stood Mr. Saso. He it was who designed the docks at Kure, Sasebo and Maizuru. He leaves a great reputation. The disease that carried him off is said to have been an abscess in the stomach.

MANCHURIA.

It is now stated that Russia intends to station an army of three hundred thousand men on the Manchurian frontier. The explanation given by some observers is that she fears to bring home the whole of the huge force now under Linevitch's orders lest a large section of it should join hands with the insurgents who are disturbing, or threatening to disturb, the peace of Russia. This reason seems inadequate when side by side with it we place the difficulties and expense of stationing such a force in an out-of-the-way region where no preparations have been made for the men's accommodation and where provisions would have to be sent to them by rail from the home country. The danger of their joining the revolutionists appears an insufficient explanation of such a course. Some other consideration probably influences the St. Petersburg Government at least as powerfully as that thus assigned to it.

The Asahi Shimbun's correspondent with the Central Army in the field writes in a somewhat angry tone about the conditions existing in that part of the field. The truce nominally began on the 16th of September, but the ensuing state of affairs was much more onerous than that previously experienced. Under ordinary circumstances each side kept itself fully informed of the other's movements by sending out scouts. These, however, can not be employed since the truce was inaugurated, and inasmuch as the Japanese place no reliance on the enemy's good faith, they are obliged to keep up an exhausting and continuous vigil. Moreover, the Russians, according to this correspondent, do not respect the terms of the truce. They enter the neutral zone just as though no agreement existed with regard to it, and they deliberately behave in a manner which can not be read otherwise than as a defiance. The Japanese soldiers burn to retaliate but are kept in check by their officers, who point out that this treacherous conduct on the enemy's part is doubtless limited to one section of his forces and is not general.

This story is characteristic. It finds an exact parallel in the conduct of Count Witte himself during his sojourn at Portsmouth. Count Witte may be a man of great talent: undoubtedly he is. But his disposition has a very petty side. He loves display of all kinds, and just as the Russian soldiers opposite to General Nozu's divisions, indulge in cheap braggadocio under the protection of a truce, so Count Witte devoted the keenest attention to securing for himself the place of honour on every occasion. No photograph taken of any group including him shows him anywhere but on the right of the host or in the most prominent position, while Baron Komura, who attaches no manner of importance to such feminine pettinesses invariably stands on the left. The newspapers have told us also of certain other little manoeuvres on the part of this big, burly Russian which show plainly that he relied on trifles such as a really great man would wholly despise. They seem to have produced no effect on the Japanese, who misinterpreted some of them and ridiculed others.

It is stated that the withdrawal of the Japanese troops will commence in a few days. The order is to be in the sequence of the various armies' service. Thus the First Army, under General Kuroki, will have precedence, and the rest will follow in numerical order, since that also happens to be the order of their original despatch. The expectation is that the movement of the Fourth Army will commence in the middle of November. Talien and Liushutung will be the two points of shipment, Yingkow being necessarily excluded on account of the ice. Arrangements are being made for the despatch of 13 trains daily, but even with that service it will be out of the question to carry all the men by rail. Such a method would entail much delay. Therefore various corps will be marched to the coast, an operation demanding in some cases from 50 to 60 days. The divisions will not be moved in their entirety. The second reserves (kōbi) will take precedence; these will be followed by the first reserves (yōbi) and there will come the men serving with the colours (genyōki).

The Russians are said to have commenced withdrawing the reserves along the Changchun-Kirin line, and to be busy with preparations for withdrawing the rest. It will of course be impossible for them to march any of the men to Lake Baikal. Everything will have to be done by rail, and assuming that they can transport 2,000 men daily by that means, they will require from 200 to 300 days to get the whole force home. Probably there is some truth in the statement that large bodies will be drafted to the Siberian and Amur armies, and that Vladivostok will have a garrison of a hundred thousand men until they can be conveniently embarked for home after the break-up of the ice next year.

"BUSHIDO."

The Athenaeum has a review of Professor Nitobe's work on Bushido, which has now reached its 10th edition. It is a well written review, and its ex-cathedra style can not fail to enhance its authority with persons—and their name is legion—who prefer to accept a dogma on the authority of the pulpit rather than to take the trouble of testing it by their own intelligence. We make an extract.

But a study of the histories of old Japan, from the "Nihongi" to the "Nihon-gwaishi," the author of which latter work was the Rai Sanyo just mentioned, shows a record of coarse, brutal, and essentially unmeaning ambition. The truth is, and the numerous readers of the volume before us ought to be told it, that the history of old Japan, more or less authentic, from the sixth to the seventeenth century, is a mere welter of blood. The so-called yamato-damashii (soul of Japan) there displays itself in the concrete form of continuous slaughter—of Japanese by Japanese. In the thirteenth century the Mongol fleet of Kublai Khan was destroyed, mainly by the winds and waves. At the close of the sixteenth century the Taiko's invasion of Korea came to a disastrous conclusion. These are the only occasions on which Japan came into collision with the foreigner. It is not necessary to include Japanese piracy in the Eastern seas, the entire abolition of which was one of the best, though not directly intended, results of the policy of Iyeyasu. That policy crystallised, so to speak, the Brahmanic militarism, the worst conceivable form of that most destructive spirit, of the age of Nobunaga and Hideyoshi, in the meaningless quasi-military formalism of the Bakufu, under which the sword, undrawn from its scabbard, came to be almost worshipped, a system of merciless vendetta, often based upon trivial forms of injury, was established, and suicide, more often intellectually silly than sentimentally admirable, was made the guardian of the "honour" of the samurai. Here, according to Prof. Nitobe, is to be found that virtue of bushido which he regards as the very soul of his country. The discovery is quite recent. Neither Sir E. Satow nor Dr. Aston even mentions the word bushido; Prof. Chamberlain, in his "Things Japanese" (1891), does not refer to it; the word is not contained in the admirable dictionary prepared by Capt. Brinkley, the able but intensely Japonicized correspondent of the Times; nor is it to be found in the principal native dictionary, the "Kotoba no Izumi" ("Source of Language"). Bushido in literal Chinese is the "way of the executioner," and those who were eye-witnesses of the tyranny of the samurai in the last years of the Bakufu—amply illustrated in Viscount Hayashi's touching story "For His People"—will not regard the name as altogether inappropriate. The bushi (a Japano-Chinese but not Chinese form) or samurai were neither knights nor knighthly; they were "followers" merely, many, if not most of them, petty officials, few of them for two hundred and fifty years possessed of any military experience whatever. Executors of the will of irresponsible petty princes or their councils, they were the instruments of oppression and themselves the victims of a pedantic and absolutely merciless ceremonialism. Of this rigid discipline contempt of life was an essential element, together with unquestioning loyalty, rather to a system than persons, and these qualities, exemplified in a worthier cause, are all that the modern Japanese soldier or sailor can be said to owe to his predecessors. The Japanese people—in a word—owe infinitely more to the social, ethical and mental freedom for which they have acquired a Western taste than to the formalism of the Bakufu (Shogunate), which was both pedantic and pitiless, despite some pretty and touching stories which illustrate the humanity no despotism can wholly efface. What they do owe to that system is the foundation of a code of education with a formative preparation of society that was a progress towards unity of the State, and that made the ishin (restoration) government capable of the great achievements our own day has witnessed.

It is evident that the writer of the above is a little angry. He girds at the perpetual incense of praise burned in season and out of season before the shrine of bushido and other Japanese virtues. We sympathise with him. This thing has been overdone. It is the habit of our neurotic age to deal in hyperbole, in sensationalism. The sober tints of the happy mean have little attraction for people whose minds are keyed up to twentieth-century pitch. But does not the Athenaeum reviewer err in an opposite direction? We think we recognise in his work the words of an old friend from whom nothing appreciative of the Japanese was to have been expected. Yet we shall not retort by describing him after his own formula as "intensively anti-Japonicised." It is quite characteristic of Japan's severest critics that if their views be traversed they do not hesitate to discredit their opponent as one whose vision has been warped by Oriental studies and by long residence in the East. Fancy the palpable absurdity of pretending that a man is disqualified to construct the equations of a particular class of curves because he has studied too much coördinate geometry! Yet that is what it amounts to. Those that ought to know something of Japan are told to stand down because they have stultified themselves by acquiring too much knowledge. It is futile to discuss such propositions: they are beyond the range of reason. As to bushido, however, we agree that it has been presented on the Western stage in an exaggerated form. But we do not agree with all the scathing protests of the Athenaeum critic. To begin with, his history is defective. He says that from the sixth to the seventeenth century Japan was a welter of blood. It would perplex him much, we imagine, to cite the incidents which constituted this "welter of blood" during the Taikwa, the Taiho, the Nara and the Heian epochs; that is to say, during the whole historical era prior to the latter half of the 12th century. It is true that from the close of the Heian epoch until the establishment of the Bakufu regency, that is to say, throughout a period of over 4 centuries, internecine strife and bloodshed frequently occupied the nation's attention. But instead of alleging that from the 6th century to the 17th the country was in a welter of blood, the true version is that out of the eleven centuries from 520 to 1620 A.D., only four and a half were disfigured by domestic conflicts whereas six and a half remained comparatively free from such troubles. We may indeed go so far as to say that the assertion of the Athenaeum's critic shows flagrant indifference to the teaching of history, for one of the prime causes of the outbreak of civil war in the middle of the 12th century is to be found in the fact that during many previous cycles the ruling class in Kyoto had become completely enervated by long continued peace and by indifference to all military pursuits. Besides, even though it were true that this sanguinary condition had existed, as the critic alleges, what Western country would be in a position to throw the first stone? Herein the Athenaeum's critic betrays a common tendency, the tendency to judge Japan by a much higher standard than that applied to any Occidental country. Medieval Japan is expected to satisfy the ideals of twentieth-century Europe.

To follow the Athenaeum reviewer into the wide field over which he leaps in a succession of sweeping and unsupported assertions would demand a volume not an article. But we shall refer to one point more as illustrating the shallowness of his criticisms. He evidently labours under the impression, and seeks to create it in the minds of his readers, that bushido is a brand new term and consequently that the thing it represents is also a novelty. His chief argument in support of this strange doctrine is that the word bushido is not mentioned by SATOW, ASTON or CHAMBERLAIN or found in BRINKLEY's dictionary. That is true, but had the critic looked for budo, which is precisely the same, he would have found it in the dictionary, and, at any rate, what fine courage is required to deny the reality of a thing merely because one has never heard of it previously! Certainly bushido is not a regularly defined ethical or religious system like Buddhism or Confucianism, but through many generations the essentials of the bushi's character and the precepts he should obey have been embodied in rules, which are to be found, in a more or less disjointed form, in such works as Ryosho tattoku-sho, or Meisho Genko-roku, or Iro Monogatari, or the Kaho of several fiefs, or in other works treating of the subject. The cult known as bushido may be said to have assumed clearest outlines and to have been systematized most definitely by YAMAGA SOKO, the eminent military authority, who flourished in the middle of the 17th century. It is fully set forth in his well known works Shido (a shortened form of bushido) and Bukyo Shogaku. As for the term itself, it has been in use for hundreds of years, in common with its synonyms budo and shido. IMAGAWA RYOSHUN, in his precepts to his son, uses the terms bundō and budō in opposition; YAMAGA SOKO calls it shido, and YAMAGA's interpreter, TAKABAYASHI MASAOKI, in his Buko Shogaku, speaks of bundō and bushido. Finally we recommend the Athenaeum's reviewer to possess himself of Dr. INOUE TETSUJIRO's Bushido Soshō, two volumes of which have appeared and the third is promised soon by the Hakubunkan. He will there find a remarkable digest of what the men of former days had to say about bushido, and will cease, we think, to be so sceptical.

RUSSIAN DIPLOMACY.

It would have been extravagant, perhaps, to look for magnanimity in Russian diplomacy. But we might have looked for some sense of dignity. There has been none, so far as we can see. Count Lamsdorff's method of announcing to the Tsar the news of the agreement between the plenipotentiaries was:—"The Japanese are prepared to submit to the will of your Imperial Majesty." This is quite childish. There never was any question of Japan submitting to the will of Russia. Count Lamsdorff must have well known that he spoke quite untruly when he used such language. For the sake of throwing dust in the eyes of a few ignorant people, he makes himself ridiculous in the eyes of the world. Yet possibly that kind of deceptive manoeuvring is necessary in the case of the Russians. They seem to resemble the Chinese in imperviousness to the percolation of news. The great mass of the people are quite ignorant of the facts of the war. They only know vaguely that their country's arms have not been crowned with success. But this message of Count Lamsdorff to the Tsar will reach the ear—care will be officially taken that it should reach the ear—of the least educated Moujik. He will believe that, after all, the war ended in some kind of triumph for the Great White Tsar: the Japanese had to obey His Majesty's will. An unfortunate necessity surely for a Minister of Foreign Affairs who must fall back on a lie to save the national situation, and an unfortunate condition for a nation which has to be fed on falsehoods.

It is very evident that, as we observed at the time, nothing was more galling to Russia than to be obliged to sheathe the sword without having gained a solitary success over the little nation which she had made such a parade of despising. That indignity wounded her more severely than the stupendous set-back given to her expansion by the terms of the peace. Hard as it was for her to be driven away once again from that ice-free exit to the sea which she had so long laboured to secure, still harder was it to cease fighting after an unbroken series of defeats. That was why Count Lamsdorff and M. Witte had recourse to the device of simulation, and since they had no real success to adduce, fell back upon an imaginary surrender of the Japanese to the Tsar's "will." The question is, will the Army and the Fleet swallow Count Lamsdorff's deception. The Army and the Fleet know exactly what happened in Manchuria. The Army vividly remembers the Yalu, Nanshan, Pelisz Port Arthur, Liaoyang, the Shaho, Heikautai and Mukden; the Fleet vividly remembers its unvarying disasters crowned by the catastrophe of the battle in the Sea of Japan. The pretences of M. Witte and Count Lamsdorff may avail with the ignorant peasant, but they can not blind the eyes of the Russian soldier or the Russian sailor.

GERMANY.

The utterances of the Kölnische Zeitung, translated elsewhere in our columns, do not support the hypothesis that Germany regards the Anglo-Japanese alliance with umbrage and is disposed to form a counter-alliance with Russia. It is true that the Kölnische Zeitung can not be taken as fully representing German opinion, but it is a powerful organ of that opinion, and when the terms in which it writes are echoed by others among its contemporaries there is good reason to pause before accepting as final the impression conveyed by Reuter's telegrams. Prince Bulow's reference to his country's friendship with Russia is undeniably very significant. Friendship, however, is one thing and alliance another. The Kölnische Zeitung appears to echo the view which must be held by all thoughtful Germans, namely, that if the purposes of the Alliance be really what the allies profess in their written compact, no European Power can openly assume an attitude of opposition without writing itself down as an advocate of territorial aggression and an enemy of equal opportunities for all. We recur to this point because our Japanese contemporaries have shown, on the whole, a disposition to credit the somewhat sinister policy attributed to Germany by the telegraph, whereas in truth the evidence thus far available does not warrant any such conclusion. Germany is an incalculable quantity in Japan's eyes. Ever since, in 1895, she completely upset all estimates based on observation of her previous conduct, the Japanese have naturally been uncertain what part she might choose to take in any crisis. Their doubts are therefore legitimate on the present occasion, but the fact to be noted is that there has not yet been any sufficient evidence for forming a definite opinion. Events have certainly drawn Germany into very close relations with her northern neighbour, but that the result will be a tangible alliance directed against the Anglo-Japanese compact remains to be proved.

THE ARMY DEPARTMENT.

It is alleged that the war has demonstrated the need of numerous and more or less sweeping changes in every branch of military art. This, of course, relates to the Japanese only. Nothing has been stated about the Russians, but if they have kept their eyes open, as presumably they have, they must have compiled a tolerably long list of essential changes in their system. It need scarcely be said that no explanation whatever is offered as to the nature of the improvements contemplated by the Japanese. Some of them, however, are said to involve a large outlay of money, and these will probably be postponed for a time. The others will be taken up immediately, funds for the purpose being obtained by economies in other sections of military expenditure. We gather that among the innovations there will be some which concern the ordinary training of the men. People are apt to forget, when they catalogue Japan's immaterial gains from the war, that the experience she has acquired counts for very much; no outsider knows how much and no outsider is likely to know. It is not merely that for some twenty years to come she will have at her command a big army of veterans, whose actual experience of fighting and campaigning makes them about twice as valuable from a military point of view as men who have never taken the field. That is in itself a great gain but it is necessarily a temporary gain. Japan may not have to engage again in the bloody game of war—and we pray that she may not—until the grass has grown over the graves of every man who helped to carry the Rising Sun to such heights of glory in Manchuria. But there will always remain the permanent profit of having learned how to fight so as to utilize to the full the weapons of modern times, and so as to comply with the radically altered conditions of modern battles. That advantage is almost inestimable, and it can be secured only by the terrible ordeal of war.

The Viceroy of Ireland, the Earl of Dudley, and Lady Mabel Crichton, whilst yacht racing on Lough Erne were nearly drowned. The yacht capsized and the occupants had to cling to the boat. They were rescued by a motor launch.

CHINA.

The Chinese Minister in St. Petersburg has telegraphed to Peking, it is said, in the sense that Russia intends to retain a large force in Manchuria northward of Changchun as well as in the Kirin region, and that she will further station a powerful army in Ili. He warns his Government to be prepared for this, and to adopt precautions. But there is difficulty in crediting such procedure. Russia is solemnly bound by treaty to withdraw from Manchuria within 18 months. There is nothing to prevent her from massing an army along the frontier within her own territory, if she wishes to incur the enormous expense of such a manœuvre, which would involve, among other things, the construction of a new line of railway since the existing road may not be used for purposes of military transport. But to station troops in Manchuria, over and above the railway guards whose number is clearly limited, would be to renew the war at once.

Meanwhile the Chinese local authorities report the occurrence of frequent disturbances in Shinking and Ili as well as in the north-western parts of Szchuan. It is feared that these conditions may furnish an excuse to Russia to undertake pacification of the disturbed regions by means of her own forces, which would, of course, be the beginning of new complications.

The Chinese are talking of opening Haichow to foreign trade in order to save it from the fate of Kiaochow.

It is stated that Viceroy Chang's loan from English capitalists for the purpose of the Yeh-Han (Canton-Hankow) Railway amounts to 10 millions of taels, that the interest is 4½ per cent., and that the security is the opium tax in Kwang-tung, Hunan and Hupeh. One half of the engineers employed are to be Englishmen, and rumour alleges that Chang has pledged his Government to first recourse to England in the event of any future loans. It is alleged that the Peking authorities do not approve of this loan and have intimated the fact to the Viceroy for future guidance.

All the Tokyo journals contain paragraphs saying that the Chinese have again grown animated as to the necessity of recovering Manchuria. This recrudescence of their uneasy mood is attributed to the exaggerated estimates which some Japanese newspapers published of the value of the Fushun coal-mines. The Chinese are consequently oppressed by a vague notion that a source of great wealth is being appropriated by Japan, and it is predicted that unless greater circumspection be exercised on this side complications are not unlikely to ensue. The first step said to be contemplated by the uneasy spirits in Peking is the re-purchase of the East Chinese Railway. Possibly they would be ready to effect the purchase by means of money borrowed from the Russo-Chinese Bank. It is conceivable that Russia should be willing to dispose of her section, for the value of the Harbin-Changchun road can not be great from an economic point of view. The Japanese section, however, stands in a very different rank. It taps the traffic of the three principal cities, Liaoyang, Mukden and Kirin, and it communicates with the seaboard, to say nothing of the coal-mines attached to it at Fushun and Yentai. A very large price would be needed to purchase it.

It is stated that the Peking Government is planning the immediate opening to trade of Wanghsien in Szchuan, Ching-chow in Hunan and Haichow in Kiangsu.

Mr. Chou, the new Governor of Mukden, seems to be an official of determination and thoroughness. He sees, as all far seeing persons must see, we think, that so long as the Hunghutsz are outlaws preying upon the people of Manchuria and defying the law, there can be no real peace at home nor yet any assurance against foreign disturbance for these Hunghutsz always furnish a ready pretext for outside interference and can easily be converted into a tool of foreign aggressors. On the other hand, the task of completely quelling and eradicating the Hunghutsz has hitherto proved altogether beyond the capacity of Manchurian officialdom and His Excellency Chou sees no gain in undertaking it afresh. He therefore proposes to invite these so-called "bandits" to enrol themselves as regular Chinese troops, and he is said to be convinced that they would make fine military material. He memorialized the Peking Government in that sense, but the Peking Government, having a conservative objection to such a radical change, has declined to consider it favourably. The Governor, however, is not deterred. He has repeated his memorial, re-inforcing it with new arguments. There is much to be said for his scheme, and this among other things, namely, that the Hunghutsz really did good service for their country during the war. It is true that some of them enlisted in the Russian ranks, but on the whole they may be said to have rehabilitated their reputation, and as to their courage and skill in battle there can be no question. It would be at once an incalculable boon to Manchuria and a substantial gain to the Chinese Government if these lawless folk were converted into disciplined soldiers. That extermination is essential in the interests of public security.

The news is repeated that Peking's anxiety to recover possession of the Manchurian Railway is taking practical shape. Mr. Na Tung and Mr. Ku Fung-ki are said to be the main movers in the matter. They have appointed a committee to make investigations. A foreign loan would have to be contracted for the purpose and in making it the idea is to follow the precedent set by the Pechili Authorities, whose methods of financing appear to have obtained large approval. Nothing is said, however, as to the prime essential in the business, namely, the disposition of the present holders of the line. If Russia and Japan will not sell, China's preparations to buy are useless. And it may be greatly doubted whether either Russia or Japan can be induced to do anything of the kind. Japan's section of the line does not extend beyond Changchun, it is true, but that is incomparably the more valuable section, including, as it does, actual or prospective connexion with all the principal cities of Manchuria and all the most productive regions. Men whose judgment should be trustworthy say that this railway has enormous potentialities, and since the present value of these could not be estimated for purposes of sale, it would seem a very short-sighted policy on Japan's part to listen to any proposal in the latter sense. We say nothing of political considerations which nevertheless, are still more cogent.

A Peking native correspondent informs the N. C. Daily News that on the 12th of November next, the date assigned for the completion of the Peking-Hankow Grand Trunk line, a large number of princes, dukes, nobles, and high ministers of State will take the opportunity of getting a "free ride" to Hankow and back, the whole journey to occupy four days—so it is claimed at present. It is further stated that upon the completion of the line it has been estimated that no less than fifty-four million taels, in round numbers, will have been expended on it, the construction of which has already taken something like six years to complete. It was at first desired by certain flatterers of the Empress-Dowager to get the Luhan railway completed on the 6th of November (10th day of the 10th month), or about a week before the estimated date, so that the occasion might be made specially auspicious by concordance with the date of her Imperial Majesty's seventy-first birthday anniversary, but it was found that even with the best of will it could not be done, the 12th of November being estimated to be the earliest date at which the Northern and Southern sections of the Railway can meet.

The Kiangsi students studying in Japan, says the Nanfengpao, having heard that the money borrowed by Mr. Li Chen-wu for the construction of the Kiukiang-Nanchang Railway, came undoubtedly from a foreign source, telegraphed to Peking requesting that the agreement be cancelled. A compromise has been suggested, but the students insist on cancellation. The same paper says with regard to the Soo-Hang-Ning concession:—The people of Chékiang being determined to build their own railways, and their determination having been reported to the Throne by the Chékiang officials at Peking, H.E. Sheng Kung-pao was commanded by Their Majesties to cancel the preliminary agreement concluded in 1898 with the British company, by which the latter was given permission to construct the Soochow-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway. In Sheng Kung-pao's opinion, since the agreement was made seven years ago, and the concessionaires have neither secured the necessary capital nor surveyed the line, the concession is already forfeited. It is, therefore, necessary for China only to cable to its Minister at London, requesting him to notify the British company of this decision. His Excellency also thinks that, in the building of the Chéng railway by the people of the province, they should begin with the Soo-Hang-Ning line, and this would preclude the British company from making any complaints, as it would be clearly seen then that the Chinese, having waited for seven years, cannot wait any longer for the British firm to begin operations.—The people of Shansi having heard of the movement of Kiangsu to cancel the Shanghai-Nanking Railway concession, propose to take similar steps. A memorial denouncing Sheng Kung-pao is being prepared.

According to a Peking letter, translated by the N. C. Daily News, there were two special carriages at the railway terminus at Machiap'u prepared to take the five High Commissioners to Tientsin on Sunday morning, the 24th of September. Their Excellencies Duke Tsai Tseh, Shao Ying, and Hsu Shih-ch'ang were in one car, and Tuan Fang and Tai Hung-tze in the other. The bomb appears to have exploded in the carriage containing the Duke. When the panic which followed the explosion had somewhat subsided a man, in the garments of a servant, was found lying dead in the carriage with half his face blown off. This man is suspected to have been the actual perpetrator of the outrage. Further inspection showed that H.E. Shao Ying's riding-jacket was aflame, while he had been struck on the back of his head by a fragment from the bomb. This official's injuries were the most severe amongst his colleagues. Duke Tsai Tseh had his yellow riding-jacket liberally splashed with the blood of the unknown man, lying dead in the carriage, while his Highness's right eyebrow was slightly cut, but his neck had a severer wound. H.E. Hsu Shih-ch'ang, although unscathed, seemed stupefied by the explosion, while H.E. Wu Ting-fang who, with several other Ministers of the Great Boards, had come to see the party off and was standing near the door of the carriage at the time of the explosion, was struck on the ear—fortunately, a slight wound. Taotai Yuan Yun-t'ai (eldest son of Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai) who forms one of the staff of the High Commissioners, and who happened to be near by at the time, suffered some injuries on the face and ear. Mr. Sa Yin-t'u, also a member of the High Commissioner's staff, was particularly unfortunate. Of two sons who had gone to the railway station to see their father off one succumbed to his injuries while the other is severely, though not dangerously, wounded, Lien K'ai, a brother-in-law of Mr. Sa Yin-t'u was also killed while the latter's cousin, Mr. Ta Lien, was dangerously injured and is not expected to live. An orderly of the 5th grade, on the staff of the Mission was also dangerously wounded, while four students of the Shihyi Academy, a body who had turned out to speed away the High Commissioners, were also wounded, as well as a Censor, named Ts'ai, and a Secretary of one of the Great Boards. Besides those enumerated above, two artisans belonging to the railway staff and three others, names unknown to the writer of this dispatch, and little child, were also injured. As for those who were slightly cut by fragments of glass belonging to the railway carriage scattered by the explosion, their number must have mounted up to several tens, for there was quite a large crowd near the car at the time of the explosion. A special proclamation has been issued in Peking by H. E. Hu Yu-fen, Director General of Northern Railways, offering a reward of thirty thousand dollars for the capture of the perpetrator of the bomb outrage; a reward of twenty thousand dollars for any of his accomplices, or fellow conspirators, and ten thousand dollars reward to the person, or persons, who shall give information leading to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator or perpetrators. Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai has promised a reward of twenty thousand taels for the arrest of the chief perpetrator of the outrage, while the Manager of the Peking-Tientsin Railway has offered on his part the sum of two thousand dollars reward for the arrest of the same person or persons.

It is pleasant to read that a period of prosperity has already opened for Manchuria. A correspondent of the P. & T. Times writes:—

"I have just returned from Mukden, where all was quiet and the country very flourishing. The harvests in Manchuria are expected to be the best in the memory of the oldest people, despite the fact that labour has been and is very scarce. The country has never been so full of ready money. In bygone years trade was all done, or nearly so, by promissory notes; but owing to two huge armies, both spending money lavishly for local products, money is plentiful everywhere. The very battlefields south of Mukden are rich with corn. Once peace is assured and communication open, there will be an unprecedented demand for clothing and also luxuries hardly indulged in past years. The natives seem to be hardened as regards the land fighting, and in the actual war zone they seem to be going on as per usual, and but little land has remained uncultivated. Many towns have still more than their normal population, as many village women and children prefer to remain in the larger centres. From many enquiries one learns that on the whole both armies have behaved as well as could be expected to the natives. That there has been local suffering, and this sometimes acute, goes without saying, but the people quickly recuperate in this naturally rich country."

NAVAL QUESTIONS.

The Naval Department has compiled and published two very interesting tables, one showing the number of ships-of-war actually possessed by the various Powers, Japan and China excluded; the other showing the ships to be added in each case after October, 1905, according to programmes already adopted and in course of being carried out. A note appended to the first list explains that all the vessels included in it were launched subsequently to 1880, and adds that "old ships" have been excluded from the English catalogue, but no definition is given of what constitutes "old." The first table is as follows, and it is to be understood that the "heavy guns" of the last column are all pieces of at least 12-cent. (4.7-inch):—

GENERAL STOESSEL.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun from London says that Generals Stoessel, Folke and Riess have been deprived of their military rank. The message is very brief, but the inevitable conclusion is that this is the result of the Court-martial recently appointed to investigate the incidents of the siege of Port Arthur. We must assume, of course, that the Court discharged its judicial functions conscientiously, and indeed it is not to be denied that the statements made by General Stoessel and his immediate entourage with reference to the conditions existing in Port Arthur at the time of the surrender were irreconcilably at variance with the facts established after the capitulation. There was thus no possibility of avoiding the conclusion that either General Stoessel, in his capacity of commanding officer, did not possess the information which every efficient general should possess as to the forces under his orders, or that, possessing information, he concealed and perverted it. The latter hypothesis is quite untenable, and we have no choice but to conclude that the Court found the General guilty of carelessness and perfunctoriness in the discharge of his duties. Under its aspect as an incident in the world's history of signal achievements this dénouement of the Port Arthur drama is to be regretted. It is plain, however, that the Tsar is determined to exact from his officers compliance with an extraordinarily high standard of military capacity. The degradation of Nebogoff and his captains for surrendering at the Liancourt Rocks, and that of Stoessel and his chief subordinates for hauling down the Eagle at Port Arthur, amount almost to an enunciation of the doctrine that men must die rather than surrender on the field of battle. There can be little doubt that such is the true doctrine, but our readers will recall that its practical observance by the Japanese provoked a great deal of adverse criticism.

Vice-Admiral Kamimura arrived at Kure on Oct. 11th. On the same evening, he was entertained by the citizens in the Yoshikawa-ro tea-house.

THE "MATIN'S" DISCLOSURES.

The disclosures of the Matin, being credited in Japan, are causing much comment and surprise. The Jiji expresses views which we believe to be commonly held when it says that France's condition of unpreparedness, in the face of the confident assertions made from time to time by her statesmen and military leaders is astounding. But how wonderful it is that a newspaper should be suffered to make such revelations or that it should be permitted to make them! What, our contemporary asks, would happen in Japan if a Tokyo journal published such matter in its columns. The Matin's object, doubtless, is to call public attention to a state of affairs demanding immediate remedy, and not immediately remediable except under the pressure of national indignation. None the less the disclosures are remarkable, and they speak volumes for the strong assertion of the principle of free speech in France.

Then there is the question of England's action. England offered to mobilize her fleet and to land a hundred thousand men in Schleswig Holstein. That, says the Jiji, should furnish to the Japanese an eloquent object lesson of what England understands by the duties of an ally, and should show how she would conduct herself if Japan were threatened.

Finally there is the very obvious inference that these revelations will greatly embitter the relations between England and Germany. Undoubtedly they will, if they be credited, and in that context we should like to ask the Jiji whether it considers that the incident illustrates the abuses or the abuses of free speech.

There is also one other point to which our Tokyo contemporary devotes no attention, namely, that the Matin's revelations may be untrustworthy.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Professor Tomizu has been appointed lecturer on Roman Law in the Tokyo University, thus resuming his old duties though not recovering his old post. This step has been taken by Professor Yamakawa, President of the University, who has competence to appoint lecturers without consulting the Minister of Education. This incident is attracting much attention, since it amounts to a virtual over-ruling of the Minister's action by an official who is himself under the orders of the Minister. In educational circles sympathy seems to be almost entirely with Professor Tomizu, and President Yamakawa's independent action is applauded. The chair of Roman Law was left entirely vacant by the Minister's dismissal of Professor Tomizu; and, President Yamakawa's prime duty being to provide for the pedagogic needs of the University, he was altogether justified in recovering the services of the only competent lecturer. Such appears to be the view taken. Meanwhile the faculty of the Kyoto University have addressed their third vehement protest to the Minister, and the Kokka Gakkai, a periodical started by the late Mr. Watanabe Hiromoto, formerly President of the University, occupies itself with most unreserved condemnation of the Minister's procedure.

Steamers to transport the Russian prisoners home are beginning to arrive in numbers. Eleven have reached Nagasaki, eight Kobe and five Yokohama. They are chiefly French and German vessels ranging from 10,000 to 3,000 tons. Twenty more are said to be en route, making altogether a fleet of 44.

A rumour is persistent that the Armstrong Company have entered into an arrangement with the Japanese Government for establishing a branch of their works in this country, and that Hiratzuka will be the site. It is suggested that preliminary arrangements in that sense were made by Sir Andrew Noble on the occasion of his visit to Tokyo in the spring of the present year. We do not gather what extent the works would take, but evidently the idea is that Japan should as far as possible be self-supplying in naval matters. The war taught her a sharp lesson. She had to employ a fleet which could not possibly be recruited. Every loss meant a permanent diminution of strength. Such conditions would be quite fatal in a struggle against a Power possessing self-recuperative facilities. Japan, if she takes the step now indicated, will be following Italy's example.

The telegraph indicates that Europe is in a state of considerable perplexity. Germany wants to clasp hands with Russia, and Russia would not be altogether unwilling, but France stands in the way. Russia will not break away from France even for Germany's sake. Thus the Berlin programme has to be extended, and now an alliance between the three States, Germany, France and Russia, is favoured by way of set-off to the Anglo-Japanese compact. Here again France is in difficulty, for she will not abandon her newly established entente with England. In fact, France holds the balance of power in Europe, a fortunate position from which her statesmen should be able to derive some advantage. Meanwhile The Times and the Daily Telegraph, on one side of the Channel, and the Temps and the Matin on the other, are preaching the advantage of a triple alliance between Russia, France and England, which would certainly be the best guarantee conceivable of the world's peace, assuming that the allies were able to trust each other completely. Washington telegraphs that London has already opened negotiations with St. Petersburg on the subject of Central Asia, and there have been indications in the Russian capital that an Anglo-Russian understanding would be welcomed. The result, it is affirmed, would be Germany's complete isolation, but that is not easy to appreciate since Germany's triple alliance would remain as it always has been. At all events Japan may congratulate herself—if it be a matter for congratulation—that she has thrown Europe into a palpable ferment.

It is alleged that the plan contemplated by the Russian Government is to transport all the prisoners in Japan by Russian ships to Vladivostok, and carry them thence to Europe by the Trans-Asian railway. Such a programme is scarcely credible. There are no Russian ships in these waters able to undertake the task of transporting seventy thousand men, and if ships are to come out from Europe for the purpose, a long delay will be entailed. Of course the actual ownership of the vessels is of no consequence, but this point is involved, namely, that if ships are to be summoned from Europe, it would evidently be far more economical to send the troops home in them than to have the vessels return empty after carrying the men to Vladivostok. Then there is the obvious objection that the carrying capacity of the railway will be fully taxed for the uses of the Army in Manchuria, and that as winter is close at hand, the Russian Government might naturally be expected to choose the sea-route for getting troops to Europe, wherever such a choice is possible, instead of exposing the men to the cruel hardships of the overland journey.

Telegrams reaching Peking indicate great activity on the part of the Russians in regions beyond the north-western and northern borders of China Proper. They are working oil-fields in Sinkiang and Kashgar; they are exploiting iron and oil deposits in Ili, and in Mongolia their mining enterprise has extended to several places. M. Pokotiloff is said to have completely succeeded in impressing the Dalai Lama with a sense of Russia's vast resources and immense power, so that the prestige of the great northern State is almost as strong as ever throughout the regions of Buddhist sway, especially as these regions are so remote from the scene of Russia's recent discomfiture that intelligence of her losses has scarcely reached the inhabitants. It can not be alleged that there is anything illegitimate in the prosecution of such enterprises, or, at least, anything illegitimate according to modern international principles, which sanction the most arbitrary methods of exploiting any natural resources left undeveloped by their rightful owners. Russia began the last stage of her career of active intrigue in Korea by the Yalu-valley timber concession, and she is probably beginning her campaign of aggression in these wide regions of Central Asia by searching for kerosene and iron. The Chinese authorities on their side, are said to be transmitting to the people futile injunctions to work their own mines and oil-fields, and they are despatching military re-inforcements to the menaced districts. These things will accomplish little.

The number of steamers seized by the Japanese during the war—Russian steamers and steamers of other nationalities—was 61 in all, and of these 54 were declared lawful prizes of war. This number is independent of the vessels, large and small, already raised, or likely to be hereafter raised at Port Arthur and Chemulpo. The vessels raised and renamed total 8 thus far, but as to the number which may hereafter be brought to the surface, we have no accurate information. It will be understood, of course, that no reference is here made to ships of war. Adding then the 8 raised vessels to the 54 captured, we have a total of 62. Among these the Orel (8,175 tons) is to be presented, it is said, to the Red Cross Society, and all the rest, with the exception of a few of the biggest steamers, will be offered for sale at public auction. The first auction will take place before the end of the year.

The publication has commenced of honours granted to the men who distinguished themselves specially during the war and fell in action. Thus far the lists have been compiled up to the battle of the Shaho only, and they comprise 8,600 names of rank and file. The officers will doubtless be separately listed. The Official Gazette of the 10th instant publishes 300 names. All belong to non-commissioned officers and men. The post humous rewards bestowed are of two kinds, namely, the Order of the Golden Kite (from the 7th class upwards) and the ordinary Order of Merit (from the 8th class upwards). In some exceptional cases both distinctions are granted to the same man. The seventh class of the Golden Kite carries with it a yearly pension of 100 yen, and the higher classes carry a correspondingly increased amount. In the case of men who have fallen—as all these have—the pensions are paid to their families for a certain number of years. The payments are independent of sums granted under the regular rules of the service. No pension attaches to the ordinary Order of Merit. These 8,600 men are those that fell at Nanshan, at Port Arthur, at Liaoyang, at the Shaho, and in all the battles previous to the last. Heikautai and Mukden remain, as do the minor engagements prior or subsequent to those great events. It seems probable, therefore, that the number of distinctions in this class will not exceed 13,000. These, it should be again repeated, are all men who met their deaths in fighting. The total number of those killed in battle is stated to have been 47,000, and the number that died of wounds received in battle is 10,000. Hence it appears that about one man out of every four among the killed distinguished himself specially.

Two more ships have been so unlucky or so misguided as to place themselves in the way of capture when a few days' patience would have enabled them to make their voyage in perfect security. One is the German steamer M. Struve (1,582 tons gross); the other, the German steamer Hans Wagner (1,596 tons gross). Both were captured on the 10th, the former near Chohyong Island en route for Vladivostok with a cargo of provisions; the latter on the west of Mishima Island, with a cargo of iron and provisions, also en route for Vladivostok. It would seem that Vladivostok must be in very urgent need of provisions since these steamers can not postpone their voyage for the brief space which intervenes before the ratification and publication of the peace treaty.

Count Inouye gave a garden party on the 10th instant, the principal foreign guests being Mr. Harriman and his party. Prince Keiki was among those present. Countess Inouye was prevented by illness from acting as hostess and Mrs. Sonoda took her place. The Prime Minister and nearly all the members of the Cabinet were present.

It is now denied positively by the Shogyo Shimpō that the Armstrong Company has entered into any arrangement to start works in Japan. Negotiations of that nature are said to be in progress with some other company, but it is evident that nothing definite has been allowed to transpire.

In connection with this it would seem that the Russian Government has decided to carry all the prisoners to Vladivostok instead of sending them to Odessa as was originally contemplated. There are over 72,000 of these prisoners and it is scarcely conceivable that Vladivostok can have accommodation for such a number in addition to its present garrison, which is said to number 80,000. Perhaps the idea is that the ships which carry the prisoners will take away the garrison and leave the prisoners in their place. But if any of the Russian officers and soldiers deserve to be quickly restored to their country it is the men who defended Port Arthur so gallantly, and indeed those that fought at Mukden are scarcely less worthy. One does not see why either of these batches of prisoners should be condemned to a further term of exile at Vladivostok. However, it may be that the Trans-Asian Railway is again to surprise the world by an exhibition of unexpected transport capacity.

The Kokusei has a Peking telegram saying that the Russian Government has appropriated a sum of fifty thousand roubles for the purpose of starting a Russian organ in the Chinese language at Harbin. The publication was to have commenced on the 10th instant.

YOKOHAMA UNION CHURCH.

The Autumn meeting of the congregation of Union Church took place at the Baptist Theological Seminary, 75 Bluff, on Oct. 10th at 5.30 p.m. Rev. E. S. Booth occupied the Chair and there was a large attendance. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. H. Loomis. The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the Hon. Secretary and approved. Mr. D. H. Blake, as Treasurer of the Church Building Committee, reported that funds to the extent of yen 7054.13 had been collected and promises had been received for a further sum of yen 2600. A part-payment of yen 5000 had been made on the property and he hoped the Committee would soon be in a position to make further payments. For the Ladies Auxiliary Mrs. Bagnall, in the absence of the Treasurer, reported that they had a further sum of nearly yen 1,000 in hand for the Church Building Fund. Mr. J. Macbeth, as Treasurer of the Church, reported that the three Organ Recitals given in the spring of the year had brought in the sum of yen 432.03, which sum had been handed to the Church Building Committee. In view of the coming Organ Recitals and the pressing need of the Church for funds for building purposes, Mr. J. T. Griffin proposed that in future a charge of yen one be made for admittance. Rev. H. Loomis seconded the proposal, which was carried with some slight dissent.

Some discussion took place regarding the advisability of securing the services of a settled pastor: it being pointed out that at the present time circumstances were favourable for such a proceeding. The matter was ultimately left in the hands of the consistory. A vote of thanks was accorded Rev. J. L. Dearing for kindly placing the hall at the service of the Church and a harmonious meeting closed with the benediction.

BASEBALL.

The team of baseballers who will meet Kobe at the close of this week as the representatives of the Y. C. & A. C. had a tussle with a nine from the Nobles' School of Tokyo on Saturday afternoon and at the end of the game found themselves with a score of nothing against seven runs made by their opponents. The game was interesting to watch for Yokohama put up a good fight and kept the visitors from scoring in five different innings, but their pitcher's work was not consistent and in the third innings particularly was very poor. Then, too, the fielding might at times have been smarter and the same remark applies to the base-running. Perhaps all these things will be remedied during the course of the week.

WEDDING IN YOKOHAMA.

On Saturday, Oct. 7th, at 2.30 p.m. at Union Church the wedding took place of Miss Bertha Emily Gigray to Mr. John Edward Moss. Rev. E. S. Booth was officiating clergyman. The Church was most tastefully decorated. The bride, who entered the Church leaning on the arm of Mr. N. W. McIvor, her uncle, was given away by that gentleman; the best man was Mr. W. M. Squire and the bridesmaids were: Miss McIvor (in white organdie and lace with white ribbons), Miss Henrietta McIvor and Miss Borthwick (in white organdie and pink ribbons). Little Miss Borthwick was escorted by Master McIvor, (in a regulation white duck sailor suit.) The bridesmaids carried pink and white flowers and wore lovely gold and pearl chrysanthemum bangles, gifts of the bridegroom. Messrs. E. J. Moss, Jr., F. Pollard, J. S. Cartwright, and W. J. White acted as ushers.

That great interest was felt in the event was evident from the very large attendance, and while the many ladies present testified to the popularity of the bride, there was ample evidence of the esteem in which the bridegroom (a well-known athletic enthusiast both on sea and in the football field) and his father, (the latter one of the old residents of the community) are held.

Previous to the ceremony Mr. Vincent played upon the organ the march from "Lohengrin" and in the course of the service Miss Mendelson sang with delightful effect "Entreat me not to leave thee" ("Ruth"). The party left the Church to the strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

The bride looked charming in white Liberty satin with chiffon and real lace, tulle veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white bride roses. Mrs. McIvor wore pale blue canyas with black picture hat and had a bouquet of yellow roses. Mrs. Borthwick, sister of the bridegroom, was dressed in champagne coloured mull, with cream lace and a hat of mauve and green. Mrs. E. J. Moss wore a petunia-coloured cloth gown embroidered in the same shades and a hat corresponding in colour. Mrs. Hayward, younger sister of the bridegroom, was dressed in pale blue over blue silk with hat of dark green.

After the ceremony, an informal reception for relatives and intimate friends was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. McIvor, No. 62 Bluff.

The bride's going away dress consisted of brown silk with green hat to match. The honeymoon will be spent at Nikko.

FOREIGN CAPITAL.

It is rumoured that the Department of Communications is seriously debating the propriety of vetoing the foreign loan recently negotiated by the Taikoku Railway Company, the official idea being that the terms agreed upon are too high. We trust that this rumour may be entirely groundless. Such interference, so far from securing better terms for Japanese borrowers, would simply deter foreign capital altogether. It would reduce the whole transaction to a condition of uncertainty such as no capitalist would tolerate. It is high time that the Government abandoned the policy of interfering in the people's business. During the early years of the Meiji era such interference was undoubtedly beneficial and even necessary; but Japanese business men are now grown up and know how to manage their own affairs. Pragmatical meddling on the part of officialdom would be an intolerable obstacle to the development of trade and industry. What is urgently needed is, not grandmotherly legislation and paternal supervision, but a thorough re-modelling of official methods so as to abolish the terribly intricate and tedious processes which have to be followed to-day by any person seeking to start an enterprise. If heaven would send Japan some DICKENS to describe the "circumlocution office" which exists in Tokyo and which has already broken the heart or chilled the energy of many a DANIEL DOYLE and ARTHUR CLENHAM, it would be indeed a blessing to the country and would contribute materially to the growth of the national resources. The reforms needed in that direction have been cried for by every political party during many years past, and now, when never in the country's history did the need of facilitating and encouraging enterprise force itself so peremptorily on intelligent perception, we hear of a fresh display of official pragmatism instead of a sweeping away of the old abuses and obstacles. We can only repeat the hope that if any idea of interfering in the borrowing transactions of Japanese private companies has really been entertained by the officials of the Teishinsho they will dismiss it forthwith, for should they act upon it they will close the door altogether to the much-needed influx of foreign capital. On the whole the management of the country's finances during the war was eminently skilful, but there were some measures that did not commend themselves as wise or well considered. Thus the veto imposed for a time on every new enterprise involving the fixing of domestic capital, can not be endorsed. The country's pressing need was to develop every possible source of revenue and promote every scheme tending to economic expansion, whereas the Government did what it could to maintain the status quo and to check development. Happily that crippling policy was soon abandoned, but the wisdom that dictated its abandonment certainly does not preside at the Communications Department now, if rumour be credible.

JAPANESE CHARACTER.

READERS of criticisms of Japanese character by foreign writers must have been struck by a singular tendency that the critics often show, the tendency of detaching themselves completely from their own experiences in the home-land. They seem to ignore all ethnic analogies and to forget all historical precedents. One is reminded of this on examining the comments of the Rev. A. B. SCHERER in "The Story of the Japanese People." He says that "the two cancers at the core of the Japanese character are deep-set dishonesty and abandoned impurity"; that "Japan is the only civilized Government which deals in licensed prostitution as a source of revenue and tolerates the sale of young girls by their parents under guise of a regard for filial piety"; that "Japan is still a country where the word 'lie' * * * is not a term of reproach but rather implies a jocular compliment"; and that nauseating conceit mars popular manners. We give to Mr. SCHERER the full credit of being an honest and honourable man, and we must therefore assume that he believes himself fully qualified to expound Japanese character, for to undertake the task without self-satisfying qualifications would not be either honorable or honest. But for our own part, we do not pretend to possess such qualifications, and we shall therefore deal briefly with the superficial aspects of these questions; aspects which can be examined without any special knowledge.

As to what is called "deep-set dishonesty," there has been so much insistence on the lack of commercial morality among middle-class traders in Japan, and so many foreigners have borne testimony to it, that the fact must be accepted as partially proved. But certain reservations should undoubtedly be made. The first relates to merchants of the higher type. No one can pretend to think that these are not men of the most assured integrity: they support comparison in that respect with the commercial and industrial elite of any country in the world. Is it "honest"—since we are speaking of honesty—to omit such men altogether from an analysis of the national morality? We do not discover, again, when we come to discuss the official class, or the gentlemen, or the students, that there is the least evidence of "deep-set dishonesty." On the contrary the very opposite is the truth: a punctilious sense of honour seems to direct all their acts. Why should they also be excluded from the analysis? Apparently too it did not occur to Mr. SCHERER that the lower orders deserve any consideration—the farmers, the artisans and the labourers. Of all these people, constituting as they do the great bulk of the nation, the critic takes no note. Yet we venture to allege, after 38 years' experience, that the lower orders of Japan are quite as honest as the lower orders in England. Thus even if it be granted that the commercial conscience is defective among an inferior class of traders, that solitary blemish is quite insufficient to damn the whole people, or to justify such a sweeping assertion as that deep-set dishonesty is "a cancer at the core of the Japanese nation." There is finally the negative evidence that if dishonesty prevail to the extent indicated by Mr. SCHERER, its consequences are singularly insignificant. Fraudulent bankruptcies, extensive swindles, forgeries on a large scale, big deceptions—incidents of that nature are comparatively inconspicuous in the national life. They are seldom heard of and the fair inference is that they do not largely exist. The critic seems to have overlooked the statistics of Western countries in these respects.

He climbs, moreover, to a still loftier height of injustice when he adduces "abandoned impurity" as another "cancer at the core of the Japanese nation." This is a difficult subject to discuss in the columns of a newspaper. We suggest one test, however. Presuming that Mr. SCHERER can speak Japanese—for surely he would not arrogate competence to sit in judgment on Japanese characteristics unless he were able to have free intercourse with the people—we ask him to consider dispassionately where, when and how any evidences of this "abandoned impurity" have forced themselves upon his attention. He can not see the smallest trace of it in the streets of a Japanese city unless he goes expressly to look for it, whereas such traces are thrust under his eyes in almost all Occidental cities. He may frequent the society of Japanese gentlemen from year's end to year's end and he will never hear impure talk, though such may be called almost the staple of conversation among young men in the West. He may visit the reading rooms and clubs in the Japanese metropolis and he will never find so much as one publication which parades obscenity as do several of the periodicals lying on the tables of a considerable per-centage of Western clubs. We are altogether at a loss to conjecture what proofs can be adduced of the condition described by Mr. SCHERER. He alleges, indeed, that "Japan is the only civilized Government which deals in licensed prostitution as a source of revenue and tolerates the sale of young girls by their parents under guise of a regard for filial piety." Mr. SCHERER has no manner of right to assume that the Japanese Government licenses prostitution, or, to use his own most offensive words, "deals in licensed prostitution," as a source of revenue. In preferring such a reckless and unsubstantiated accusation he shows himself lacking in precisely the quality with whose want he charges the Japanese, the quality of honesty. The history of this system in Japan shows that revenue does not enter into the matter at all. Neither has he any right to say, for it is absolutely untrue, that the Japanese Government "tolerates the sale of young girls by their parents." Every possible precaution is adopted to prevent that abuse. It can not be wholly prevented. In no country is it wholly prevented. But to allege that it is "tolerated" officially in Japan is a most cruel slander. And does Mr. SCHERER forget, or is he ignorant, that there are other highly civilized countries of Europe where prostitution is licensed? Does he forget, or is he ignorant, that it was formerly licensed by England herself, and that a multitude of the most prominent persons in Great Britain, ladies and gentlemen, recently signed a memorial advocating the resuscitation of the Contagious Diseases Act? Here certainly Mr. SCHERER displays a conspicuous faculty for closing his eyes to all precedents and parallels furnished by Occidental lands. We suggest to him a few minutes' reflection on the import and significance of the well-known Itsutsu no Moji, Seiteibifutai, and we suggest to him also a little thought about the fidelity of Japanese wives.

Among what classes or under what circumstances Mr. SCHERER's experiences have been garnered we are at a loss to imagine, for when he tells us that "nauseating conceit mars popular manners," we are impelled to conclude that he has been paying a visit to some unknown planet and mistaking it for Japan. "Nauseating conceit" is of all traits the last that can justly be attributed to the Japanese. Where has Mr. SCHERER found it? We ourselves have never detected it. Were we asked to say what element constitutes, in our opinion, the chief charm of Japanese courtesy we should not hesitate to reply, absence of conceit; freedom from the tyranny of the obtrusive ego which so persistently forces itself into the forefront of Occidental intercourse. A shrewd American observer once wrote an essay on the impersonality of the Japanese. This invisibility of egoism struck him as a prominent trait. Mr. SCHERER, however, has made precisely the opposite discovery. Here again, too, his forgetfulness is striking. He forgets that every European or American visiting this country regards it as axiomatic that he belongs to a superior race and makes no effort to hide the sense of his superiority. Were Mr. SCHERER himself free from this conviction he would never have written as he has written. Only extreme assurance, which is another name for vanity, could have betrayed him into passing wholesale judgments on the strength of shreds of testimony. If he has ever mixed with the Japanese or ever been intimate with them, he must know that every one of them regards it as a gross solecism to obtrude himself or his affairs upon the attention of others; that if his belongings or his family be alluded to, he deprecates everything in the nature of a compliment; and that to show any symptom of the superiority or patronizing tolerance commonly displayed by Occidentals towards Oriental is quite foreign to his disposition. Mr. SCHERER's perceptions are much beclouded in this matter, and in the last of his allegations he betrays palpable ignorance. "The word 'lie,'" he says, "is not a term of reproach but rather implies a jocular compliment." Evidently what he here alludes to is uso, commonly and erroneously supposed by foreigners and described by lexicographers to be the equivalent of the English word "lie." It is not so. Uso is simply a blunt or familiar form of dissent. If one pays a girl a compliment she may retort by uso, and if one makes some chaffing reference to a man's acts, he may protest "uso, uso!" The word is not even as strong as the English "fib." It does not mean "lie," in the ordinary acceptance of the latter. "Itsuwari" is the true equivalent of "lie." "Itsuwari" signifies an untruth spoken with the intention of deceiving or misleading, a falsehood actuated by an evil motive; in short, our English "lie." To accuse a person of employing an "itsuwari" conveys a reproach, an insult, just as offensive as to say to an Englishman "you lie." We infer from this that Mr. SCHERER's knowledge of the Japanese language is not very intimate. Yet he undertakes to expound the arcana of Japanese character and ventures to accuse the nation of "deep-set dishonesty." What is "dishonesty" if it be honest to pass judgments and pen charges without due equipment to be a judge or an accuser?

KOREA.

THE telegraph reports that the disturbance in Korea is increasing. It has apparently involved five provinces, Chunchiyong, Kyongsan, Kanwong and Chholla. Rumour alleges that the EMPEROR of Korea, so far from taking any measures to quell the insurrection, has issued to the local officials secret instructions to stir up the rebels. In Seoul itself there is said to be great excitement in consequence of the rumour that Japan has determined to give a practical character to her protectorate. The present Ministers are denounced on the supposition that they are lending themselves to this project, and the air is full of threats of assassination and expulsion. Several accounts attribute much of the mischief to the incendiary writing of the Korea Daily News, which appears to publish an edition in the Korean language and can thus reach the ear of the masses. It is indeed stated that a manifesto issued by one body of the present insurgents embodied an almost verbatim extract from one of that journal's editorials. There is difficulty in believing that the Koreans would be misled to any serious degree by such an agitator, and at any rate this is an unavoidable phase of the situation for any attempt to muzzle the journal in question, however, pernicious its writing, would injure rather than assist the Japanese cause. The spectacle of a nation losing a great part of its independence always appeals to the romantic instincts of a certain class of publicists. They do not analyse. Just as, in their own case, they fail to detect in their abuse of free speech any argument for limiting it, so in the case of a nation they consider only the abstract fact of subjugation and give no serious thought to the real interests of the people at large. These writers are among the ills that form the camp-followers of progress. They are as inevitable as the social evil or alcoholic excess. In Korea's case the nation would unquestionably be far happier and more prosperous were its affairs administered in accordance with civilized principles, but if that most desirable reform has to be accompanied by any curtailment of the self-governing privileges which the Koreans have amply proved themselves incompetent to exercise, the emotional publicist at once raises his voice in a shout of disapproval. It can not be supposed that the bulk of the Korean people have yet developed the faculty of journalistic discrimination. The printed column doubtless still possesses in their eyes a large measure of inherent authority and sanctity. That they should have free access to such writings as those of the newspaper in question may therefore be dangerous, but there is no machinery in Korea for averting the danger and the Japanese will not be so unwise as to create any, for by so doing they would enlist against them a whole phalanx of denouncers who value only forms and take no rational account of conditions. Even to such persons it should be obvious that impelling ignorant Koreans to engage in an insurrection without the smallest hope of success, must only precipitate the result it aims at preventing, for the Japanese Government, whose nationals in Korea number more than fifty thousand and who, in the interests of the safety of Japan herself, can not possibly leave the little empire to work out its own destiny, will be compelled by these disturbances to precipitate the measures so shocking to the emotionalists. This certain outlook is said to be visible to some Koreans of the thoughtful order, but the majority appear to be led away by unreasoning excitement. The least rash of them are rumoured to be advocating a suspension of all resolute action until the withdrawal of the Japanese troops, while the giddier section are for striking a blow at once. It may be, of course, that the state of affairs is greatly exaggerated. There are many Japanese adventurers who would gladly welcome a reign of such extreme disorder as might compel the adoption of drastic measures. But over and above all allowances on that account there seems to be ground for considerable uneasiness.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE CURRENT LITERATURE.

The second volume of Mr. Ōmachi Keigetsu's Fude no Shisaku (Droppings from the Pen) appeared in July. Mr. Ōmachi has edited the Taiyō for several years and the books bearing the above title are a collection of short articles on Literature, Music, Criticism, Religion, History and Natural Scenery, most of which have already appeared in the Taiyō or in other magazines. Vol. II of the Fude no Shisaku covers 214 pages, divided into 63 chapters, most of which deal with different subjects. The topics chosen show considerable versatility of mind in the author. The tone of the work as a whole may be said to be anti-pretence, and anti-humbug. A number of existing abuses in Japanese literature are denounced in an unsparing manner. For instance, on page 15 the practice of using difficult Chinese characters when easier ones would answer an author's purpose equally well and would have the advantage of being understood by the general reading public, is ridiculed as silly pedantry. On the same page what the writer calls the "Quoting Mania" is dealt with. There are many writers who burden their pages with unnecessary quotations, says Mr. Ōmachi. A few, wisely chosen, tend to strengthen and confirm the opinions expressed by a writer, but by a number of Japanese young authors the thing is overdone. There prevails, again, says Mr. Ōmachi, among a certain class of writers, the practice of introducing a large amount of matter that is not directly connected with the subject treated. This is often done in order to display the extent of the writer's knowledge. Mr. Ōmachi, in a chapter on "Literature and Age," observes that the best time of life for giving utterance to poetic thoughts is when a man is young, and he goes on to argue that knowledge of the world tends to incapacitate a man for writing fine poetry. This is only partially true. Throughout his book Mr. Ōmachi seems to us to place too much confidence in the theory now so popular in Japan, that the highest achievements in literature, as in other spheres of activity; are to be expected from young men. On religion, education and philosophy Mr. Ōmachi is not so well informed as many other writers. But on current literature he is usually well worth reading. He has a chapter in this book on Kōda Rohan. The long silence of this accomplished novelist has called forth various comments from the press. But last fall Rohan commenced to publish in the columns of the Yomiuri Shimbun a first class novel called Sora ushi nani. Up to February of this year some hundred chapters of this work had appeared but owing to the public excitement about the war it was deemed expedient to delay the publication of the remainder till a later date. In its stead Rohan commenced to publish a long poem called Kokoro no ato. But when some 22 verses of this poem had appeared illness prevented Rohan from continuing it. Both these works have attracted considerable attention and the literary public eagerly awaits their completion. Besides these, in extra numbers to the Bungei Kurabu (Club) a novel written by Rohan called 珍珍會 Chinsen-kai is now appearing. So that after a long rest our greatest living fiction writer has taken up his pen again to the delight of his many admirers, remarks Mr. Ōmachi. Rohan's new works differ considerably from any that he has hitherto published. Heretofore the weak parts of Rohan's novels have been his dialogues. He seems to have attached little importance to them. But in the two new tales referred to above the dialogues are separated from the rest of the narrative and much care has been bestowed on them. The point of view of the writer seems also to have changed. Hitherto his chief aim in writing appears to have been to instruct. He has sought neither to make men weep nor to make them laugh. But in the Chinsen-kai there is much that is intensely amusing. Heretofore Rohan has only been known as a prose writer, but now he has broken out in verse and his poetry is pronounced to be of a superior order. Referring to the Sora Ushinami Mr. Ōmachi says:—It is an undoubtedly a great work, not only in plot; but in execution. In this tale various types of humanity are introduced and the writer paints with equal facility and finish the man of feeling, the man of intellect and the man of will. The object of the Chinsen-kai is to describe certain phases of modern life in a way calculated to reveal their comicalness. Satire plays a larger part in this work than it has in any of Rohan's previous novels. His poem, referred to above, is of unusual length and is perhaps unlike any other that has been published in the language. Though colloquial passages are found here and there, they are skillfully interwoven with the usual poetic forms, so that the taste of readers is not offended in any way.

There are many interesting chapters in Mr. Ōmachi's book which we are unable to notice. Such are those on "Suicide, Life and Death, Eastern and Western Views of Religion, Race Prejudice, Controversy." It is issued by the Bunro-kudō Higashinaka-dōri, Nihonbashi-ku, Tōkyō and sells at 40 sen a copy.

Since the death of Dr. Taguchi among magazines that make a specialty of Economy and Finance the Tōyō Keizai Shimpō has no formidable rival. Dr. Amano Tameyuki, the editor, takes up a number of current questions. Discussing post-bellum finance Dr. Amano writes in the following strain:—When peace comes the first thing to be done is to clear the way for the entrance of foreign capital. The country cannot recover herself without relying on foreign capital. The rapid growth of revenue must depend on the full development of such industries as have been temporarily suspended during the war and on the commencement of a number of new undertakings. The laws bearing on the mortgaging of railways, mines and factories will have to be altered without delay. It is said that measures have already been taken to obtain money from abroad for the Kyūshū, Hokkaido and the Kwansai (West of the Barrier) railways. For the further extension and efficient working of these railways no very gigantic sum is required; yet if that amount is not found much loss will be involved; and under present conditions there is little hope of obtaining it from home sources. In connection with public loans, both domestic and foreign, there is a point on which we have often dwelt in these columns and the importance of which cannot be overstated at the present juncture. How is it that, whereas our foreign loans in pounds sterling are effected so easily, our loans in yen, notwithstanding the advantageous terms we offer, do not tempt foreign capitalists to the extent we desire. The reason is that foreign capitalists have no confidence in the stability of the market price of our yen. What we desire to see effected is the guaranteeing of the sterling value of all yen bonds by the Government. This should be carried out not only in the case of foreign loans but also with domestic loans; which would thus attract foreign purchasers. The capital now swallowed up by these domestic loans would thus be gradually released and be available for the development of a variety of lucrative enterprises. It is necessary that we should leave no stone unturned in endeavouring to place all our loans on a footing that will admit of the reduction of the interest on those loans to the lowest possible minimum. We should like to see all municipal and other private loans dealt with in this manner. The practice of paying high interest for loans during short periods could then be abandoned. No measure that we can conceive of would benefit us financially more than this.

Mr. K. Nagai, head of the Yokohama Branch of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, contributes to the Tōyō Keizai Shimpō a timely article on the defects of Yokohama harbour and the urgent necessity for its improvement in a variety of particulars. We epitomize the article below:—

Yokohama has a breakwater, inside of which there is an area measuring 1,500,000 tsubo; so that were proper measures taken for fitting up the harbour with all the appliances for loading and unloading ships to be found in all the great harbours of other countries, Yokohama might rank with the foremost of the world's great ports. But as things are now she is all behind. With this vast space inside the breakwater there are only 22 buoys for the mooring of ships; so that for years past constant inconvenience has been caused. Owing to the increase of commerce and the war the defectiveness of the harbour is now justly considered to be a perfect nuisance to navigators, as well as an injury to the trade of the country. In the month of May alone there were no less than 21 vessels that were unable to find accommodation at the buoys and had to remain outside, in some cases 5 days, before they could begin discharging cargo. It has at last been decided to add 14 new buoys to those now in use. There are some persons who seem to think that that is all the situation calls for. But a number of jetties are needed with cranes for loading and unloading, and wharf accommodation, and a railway should be built to connect with the Yokohama line, while a number of godowns for the storage of goods are required. There are some who maintain that the space inside the breakwater is too confined to admit of our accommodating all the ships that are likely to come, but such is not our opinion. The area compares well with ports like Marseilles and Genoa. But the harbour should be deepened.

Bummei to Jinkō no Kwankei (The Relation of Civilisation to Population) is the title of an article published in the Tōyō Keizai Shimpō (No. 346), written by Mr. Horikoshi Zenjuro, a man fairly well known in the business world. This subject is naturally beginning to attract the attention of the Japanese and to cause them some concern. Mr. Horikoshi says that the most recent statistics show conclusively that high civilisation not of necessity but in point of fact, is proving to be a deterrent to reproduction. France is cited by Mr. Horikoshi, as the most striking instance, but America, he says, is following very closely on her heels. England, Germany, Belgium and Holland are far removed from the above-named countries, but are distinctly threatened by the presence of the factors which check the growth of population in pleasure-loving France and gay America. In the case of France reproduction is hindered by three causes. (1) The difficulty of maintaining and educating many children with small incomes. (2) The law in France provides that when parents die their property shall be divided equally among the surviving children irrespective of the characters of such children. This arrangement is said to militate against large families. (3) The French as a nation are extremely fond of pleasure. Child-bearing and the rearing of children seriously interferes with social functions of all sorts. Hence steady suppression of natural instinct has become the fashion in France. Turning to America, there we find, says Mr. Horikoshi, that the growth of wealth and the antipathy to reproduction exist together. In most cases there is no financial reason for restricting the size of families or for avoiding reproduction altogether, but it would seem that the love of pleasure and ease is as strong with the Americans as with the French, and it has the effect of lowering the birth-rate to an astonishing extent. The countries where the population grows at a normal rate are Russia, India, China, Japan and certain parts of Africa. So that according to present conditions, with the exception of the Japanese, the nations and races that occupy a low level of civilisation promise to outnumber those which have reached higher stages. Japan can hardly expect to escape from the influences which have produced the striking phenomenon alluded to above, concludes Mr. Horikoshi.

The following views on "Harbour Construction" in Japan we find in the editorial columns of the Tōyō Keizai Shimpō:—In order to recoup ourselves for the enormous expenditure involved and to take our place among the great Powers when the war is finished, it will be necessary for us to choose among all the undertakings that have been projected or discussed those which are most urgent. Among these the construction of harbours will most certainly be included. Certain projected harbours would, if constructed, only affect surrounding provinces, but when we come to Yokohama and Kōbe and to Tōkyō and Ōsaka we find that they are the great centres of the nation's trade. The State should certainly lay out money without stint in order to provide for Tōkyō and Ōsaka the facilities for trade they now lack. Yokohama without Tōkyō would be a very insignificant place and the same may be said of Kōbe in reference to Ōsaka (*Ōsaka wo hanarete Kōbe naku, Tōkyō wo hanarete Yokohama naki nari; sukoshiku Kei-Han (Tōkyō Ōsaka) wo bunri sureba shō-Kōbe shō-Yokohama taru ni sugizu.)

We have already expended a certain amount of money on Yokohama and Kōbe, but rather than go on with outlay, on their behalf, we shall do well to build first-class harbours in Tōkyō and Ōsaka. In the latter place the work has already been begun, but was discontinued on account of the war. But hitherto Tōkyō has been content with the discussion of various schemes only. In both cases, it seems to us, the construction should be a national affair. For the State to give a mere grant-in-aid would certainly not meet the case. The thing must be done thoroughly. That ports should wherever possible tap the great centres of trade needs no wordy demonstration. The present circuitous route by which millions of tons of produce are conveyed involves this country in an annual loss of gigantic proportions. It is to the interest of the State to act boldly in view of this fact and take steps to raise the money required for an enterprise second to none in national importance.

Mr. Hatano, of the Mitsui Bank, discusses the Tōkyō harbour question in the same number of the magazine from which we have quoted above. He is of opinion that the work of construction would occupy from 10 to 15 years. He thinks it should be done by the State and done thoroughly. He holds that the Yokohama harbour would not be altogether superseded by the projected Tōkyō harbour and he says that in the event of the construction of the Tōkyō harbour being decided on the building of an elevated railway from the Yokohama station to the wharf now in existence and the depending of the harbour would be all that need be done to meet shipping requirements. There seems to be a growing feeling that the Tōkyō harbour scheme, which for years past has been talked about, should be put into execution without further delay.

Under the title of "A New Phenomenon in Industrial Education," the Tōyō Keizai Zasshi informs us that recently certain factories and workshops such as the Shibaura factory, the Ishikawajima Dock and the Tōkyō Tile Company have begun to send selected boys to technical schools for special instruction with a view to their permanent employment subsequently. It is alleged that well informed superintendents are very scarce in most factories and that this new measure is designed to remedy the deficiency. In other countries, says the Tōyō Keizai Zasshi, the defective theoretical knowledge of artisans is made up for by a number of night schools, which they attend after working hours. This might be tried here, but the plan mentioned above seems to us preferable to the night school system, which in many cases involves too great a strain on the strength of growing lads.

The publication of Mr. Toyabe Shuntai's Jidai Jimbutsu Gattan was announced by us several months ago. The book has now reached us. It consists of a series of character sketches written in a concise and taking manner. The articles have all been extracted from the Taiyō. They contain an enormous amount of information on current topics. As a book of reference the volume should prove useful to foreigners who read Japanese. Mr. Toyabe's account of the Waseda schools and colleges, and his biographical sketches of the three men who have been the mainstay of the whole of the Waseda system of education, strike us as specially interesting. We therefore furnish a full epitome of it below.

On October 19th, 1902, there was held at Waseda one of the most improving ceremonies of modern times. The occasion was the opening of the Waseda University and the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the opening of the Waseda Semmon Gakkō. The huge assembly, consisting of over 5,000 persons, including Ministers of State, Members of the Privy Council, Foreign Ambassadors, the Staff of the Imperial University and representatives from all the Departments of State, the Diet, the banks, the business and the religious world and the press, was accommodated in a huge marquee. On that occasion Marquis Itō, Dr. Katō Hiroyuki and others expressed the sentiments of the nation in reference to the work done by Count Ōkuma's schools. When in 1882 the Waseda Semmon Gakkō was founded with the object of developing a spirit of independence and free inquiry in study and scholarship there was nothing in the country at all resembling this institution. The movement at once commanded the support of a number of able men whose characters were of a type to insure the success of the school. In the course of 20 years some 2,800 students graduated at the school and it now has an attendance of over 3,000 students. The establishment of this school may be regarded as the creation of a new kingdom in our educational world which has affected the whole country. (Waseda no gakufū wa tenka wo ngokasari.) Opened at a time when the Government High Schools were insufficient to accommodate the numerous graduates of the Middle Schools, the Waseda Semmon Gakkō imparted a high class education to hundreds of men who were wasting time in waiting for the next Mombushō entrance examination. And subsequently when the demand for a University education was largely in excess of the supply available, the bold step of founding a University was taken, the subscriptions to the endowment fund in a very short time exceeded 250,000 yen. There were no doubt several causes for the success which attended this new enterprise. One was the great influence and the wealth of Count Ōkuma, another the spirit of the times; but perhaps more important than these were the work and characters of three noted lecturers connected with the institution. This was pointed out by Dr. Hatoyama in a speech made on the occasion referred to above. The three teachers in question are Doctors Takata, Amano and Tsubouchi. Of these three we now propose to give some account.

* * * Apart from Ōsaka there is no Kōbe, and apart from Tōkyō no Yokohama. If the two ports were separated from Tōkyō and Ōsaka, there would only be a little Kōbe and a little Yokohama.

Dr. Takata Sanai entered the Preparatory School to the Imperial University in 1876, graduated there in 1878, commenced his studies at the College of Literature in the Imperial University the same year, graduating in 1882. In the autumn of that year he was appointed teacher in the Waseda Semmon Gakkō and one of the councillors of the school. For 20 years he did his utmost to advance the interest of the school—earnest, quick-witted and possessing a thorough knowledge of the times, with a good command of language, his lectures were highly appreciated by the students. But Takata's work in the class rooms was a very small part of what he got through month after month. He organized and took an active part in the work of the school press, which for a succession of years poured out a number of useful books. He gave valuable help in the management of the finances of the school. He edited for some time the Yomiuri Shinbun and wrote largely for the magazine which he himself started, the Kempō Zasshi. In addition to all this he performed his duties as a member of the Diet, as head of the General Commerce Bureau (Tōshōkyoku) connected with the Foreign Office, as a Mombushō councillor and head of the General Business Bureau in that Department. Though in the course of the 20 years of his life which we are reviewing he was engaged in these multifarious tasks, he never allowed them to turn him aside from the one great aim of his life, the reform of national education, the development of the elements of national greatness in the minds of young men. In doing this he strove to teach them two things: first their duties under the new Constitution and secondly the proper attitude to be adopted to foreigners and their ideas. The thoroughly sound and decided opinions expressed by Dr. Takata have had much to do with the success of the school. His work in the Diet, which extended over 6 years, from the 23rd to the 29th year of Meiji, left its mark on the House of Representatives as a whole, but specially on the Shimpō. He had much to do with the developments which led up to the formation of the Matsukata-Ōkuma Cabinet first and later on to that of the Itagaki-Ōkuma Cabinet. His career in other capacities, though frequently brilliant, has been eclipsed by his great work at Waseda. He is now one of the chief controllers of the University and the head of the teaching faculty.

Dr. Amano Tameyuki.—Amano graduated at the Imperial University the same year as Dr. Takada and took up his work as teacher of Political Economy at the Waseda Semmon Gakkō forthwith. In the First Imperial Diet he sat for one of the Saga-Ken districts and at once made a name for himself in the House of Representatives. At that time there were few members competent to discuss the Budgets that were submitted to the House. Hence Dr. Amano's elaborate speeches dealing in a learned manner with the mass of figures under consideration were much appreciated. But, unfortunately, owing to the interference with the elections of which the Matsugata Cabinet was guilty, Dr. Amano lost his seat in the House. This action on the part of the Government had a very bad effect on the mind of Dr. Amano, making him feel disgusted with the low level of Japanese politics. He resolved to turn his back on political life henceforth and devote all his powers to teaching and writing. The nation is to be congratulated on this decision; for Dr. Amano is more of a scholar and a writer than a politician. As an Economist he is a disciple of Mill, but by no means a bigoted advocate of free-trade. His views are eminently of the practical type. Pedantry he has none. In his lectures he strives to show how theory and practice can be reconciled. In the Tōyō Keizai Shinpō, which he edits and to which he contributes so much, soundness, common-sense and practicality are very conspicuous in all he writes. As a lecturer he has a remarkable flow of language. He enters the class room without book or manuscript of any kind. He answers fully, clearly, all questions put to him and shows himself to be in every way a model lecturer.

Dr. Tsubouchi Yuzō.—Tsubouchi entered the Imperial University at the same time as the two scholars whose careers we have sketched above. But owing to his love for novel-reading he was plucked once and hence graduated a year later than his two comrades. At this time he was very fond of Bakin's works. He often committed long passages from the Hakkenden to memory. He seems to have begun voracious novel-reading very early in life while living at Nagoya, for a certain book-binding shop-keeper there claims the credit of having started Tsubouchi on his brilliant career. His literary ability displayed itself conspicuously even at the University. While there he often wrote for the illustrated newspapers. The manuscripts of his literary works were mostly prepared while he was studying at the University. His joining the Waseda teaching staff was brought about by the influence of Dr. Takata over him. It was not altogether to his liking, as his desire was to give all his time to writing. At first he lectured on the English Constitution, but in 1889 a Literary Department was added to the School, which heretofore had only taught Law and Politics. Dr. Tsubouchi was then of opinion that the best way of teaching literature is to discover common ground between Chinese, Japanese and Western literature, to show how the same principles govern each branch. When he commenced to lecture in the school he started a magazine known as the Waseda Bungaku, which up to the time of its decease maintained a very high level as a literary organ*. In recent years it would seem as though Dr. Tsubouchi had to a great extent turned his back on literature. He seems some years ago to have come to the conclusion that the greatest need of the age is the development of practical morality among students and he has aimed at making himself a model for these, giving up sake and smoking. So strict is he in the matter of smoking that even if the Minister of Education comes to the Waseda Chugakkō, of which Dr. Tsubouchi is the Director, he is requested not to smoke there. Without regard to what he may effect in this line, there is no doubt that Dr. Tsubouchi great forte is authorship. He is an original and charming writer, possessed of imagination and literary taste and a man who has studied thoroughly the best English models. But in his mind to-day literature has been subordinated to the moral reform of students and the improvement of educational methods.

One thing is remarkable about the Waseda institutions, and that is, the persistency with which certain views, certain characteristics and certain principles have marked them. The Waseda schools and colleges are in many respects unlike any other educational establishments in the country. Though the three leading spirits there are in certain things unlike each other, they work together in a most harmonious way. Dr. Takata is remarkable for talent, originality and fertility of resource and for his business-like ways. Dr. Amano is noted for his worldly wisdom and general intelligence rather than for extensive knowledge. In study, as in teaching and writing, he displays a love of thoroughness and a lucidity which are fully appreciated by students and readers alike. Dr. Tsubouchi is essentially a man of feeling. The life of self-denial which he chooses to lead may involve the undue twisting of nature and the checking of development in certain particulars. But his ideals are all toned down by the application to them of common-sense and by his comprehensive survey of existing conditions. The Waseda University is indeed to be congratulated on the possession of this exceptional triumvirate.

THE INTERPORT FESTIVAL.

YOKOHAMA AND KOBE AT CRICKET.

The nineteenth cricket match in the interport series between Yokohama and Kobe began on Monday on the ground of the Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club, and for the first time in interport history play began at 9.25 a.m. This early start was due to the fact that the British fleet now visiting Japan for the first time since the conclusion of peace and the ratification of the second treaty of alliance between Great Britain and Japan, are to be entertained by the Mayor and citizens of Yokohama at a garden party on Wednesday and the recreation ground, of which the Cricket-field forms a part, was requisitioned as the site for these festivities, thus compelling the cricketers to fight out their friendly battle in two days instead of three as originally planned. As usual on the occasion of Interport festivities, the Pavilion and other buildings were tastefully decorated with flags, greenery, chochin, sporting devices and mottoes, the whole being schemed by Mr. C. Murray Duff, who has seen or participated in nearly all of these classic contests. Mr. Duff has a pretty wit as the following list of mottoes discloses:—"Cahn na Cuimhne" (The rock of remembrance); "Cead Mille Failte" (A hundred thousand welcomes); "Hanc Veniam Petimusque Damusque Vicissim" (We both give and receive this indulgence in return); "Kobe Hoc Tibi" (Kobe, This is for thee); "Labor Omnia Superat" (Labour overcomes all things); "Sua Cuique Toluptas" (Every man has his own pleasures); "Tempus Lubendi" (The time for play); "Ut Quocumque Paratus" (Prepared for every event); "Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest." "Right happy may we be and happy meet again." "To the Kobe teams Yokohama extends its heartiest welcome." "May the pleasures of sportsmen never know an end." "Tis not in mortals to command success, yet we'll be more, we'll deserve it."

The teams comprised several players who have participated in many previous matches, but there was also a very full sprinkling of newcomers, particularly among the home eleven. Kobe's team comprised at least two men who had fought under the Yokohama flag of blue and white in years gone by and Yokohama returned the compliment by playing three former Kobe cricketers. The morning broke dull and threatening, heavy rain having fallen during the night, and this "good grey weather," beloved of Charles Kingsley, prevailed all day, with occasional showers before tiffin. The afternoon held up, but play had to be abandoned early owing to the failing light. Yokohama, winning the toss and going to bat first, knocked up a total of 364, beating a former interport record of 352, but only one player topped the century. This was Dr. Moon, R.N., who gave a capital exposition of the game. The wet field was greatly against the visitors, and to the slipperiness of the turf and greasiness of the ball must be attributed the mistakes and misses which contributed greatly to the Yokohama score. When play began one lady was present on the ground but as the morning drew on many put in an appearance and after lunch the Pavilion was crowded. Mrs. Wheeler, wife of the President, and Mrs. E. W. Maitland, wife of the Captain of Cricket, presiding over a most animated scene at tea time.

Dr. Wheeler presided at lunch (admirably served by the Cherry Mount Hotel), and welcomed the visitors right cordially. After the repast, Mr. C. H. Lightfoot, President of the K. C. C., returned thanks for the welcome and good humouredly chaffed the compiler of the menu-card for his choice of mottoes. Mr. L. S. Hudson, Secretary of the Y. C. & A. C., proposed the health of the Kobe team, which was received with hearty cheering and the pleasant little function ended.

Kobe, it will be noticed below, in the short time left for play after the close of the Yokohama innings, made 21 runs, for the loss of no wickets. The scorers were Messrs W. H. Samuel (for Yokohama), and V. Hearne (for Kobe), and the umpires were Messrs O. Strome (Yokohama), and B. C. Foster (Kobe). The Grand Hotel band was in attendance and enlivened the afternoon considerably with a good selection of airs.

THE GAME.

Yokohama went to bat first, sending out Dr. Emerson and H. W. Kilby to face the bowling of G. Stephens (Settlement) and Sydney Stephens (Pavilion), with A. J. Cornes behind the wickets. Dr. Emerson opened proceedings with a boundary off the first ball sent down by G. Stephens—a very good start—and the fourth ball of the over he cut for another 4. Nothing more resulted. Kilby snicked the first ball he received from Sydney Stephens and one run went down on the sheet. A single by Emerson and 10 was telegraphed. Both men were playing with caution, singles alone being made off Sydney Stephens. A boundary by Kilby was the only point scored in the next over, while a single was made by the same player, off G. Stephens. Then a maiden over varied the record, the first so far in the match. Twenty runs had been made by a quarter to ten, caution being the prevailing virtue of both bats. With his score at 10, Kilby was given a life by Clarke, who stood at square leg, and soon after 30 was hoisted. The next ball, the fourth of the over, saw Kilby dismissed, clean bowled by Gordon Stephens—30-1-11. J. T. Dixon filled the vacancy. It was now ten o'clock. Three singles were contributed by Emerson in the next over, and Dixon broke his duck with a single off G. Stephens. Soon after he made a boundary, White failing to reach the ball as it went through the slips. At ten past ten 40 was telegraphed. With the last ball of the over Dixon drove a 4 to the fence, while the following over—a maiden—saw a smart bit of fielding by White. The first ball in the next over, driven by Dixon right down the ground, brought 50 on to the board, and immediately after he cut another 4. The close of a maiden over saw Dixon missed by Stephens, the latter falling on the slippery grass. A four and a single by Dixon, off S. Stephens, was followed by a couple by Emerson off the same bowler, and the last ball of the over earned a single for the doctor. Two boundaries were scored by Dixon in the next over and at 79 C. J. Lucas relieved Sydney Stephens at bowling. A wide by the new bowler enabled 80 to be hoisted at five and twenty minutes to 11 o'clock. The Kobe fielders were now warning to their work and several cuts were smartly stopped, Dixon alone getting through with a single off Stephens. Scoring was very slow for a while and then Emerson made a boundary, just as a shower of rain sent the spectators to the shelter of the Pavilion. It was now a quarter to 11 and 90 runs had been made. The rain made the ball very slippery and Emerson and Dixon both profited, the former getting a 4 and a single past the fielders and the latter a single. At ten minutes to 11, the century was reached, Dixon then having 40 to his credit and Emerson 43. An adjournment was now made for refreshments.

On resuming at five minutes past 11, Sydney Stephens went on to bowl at the Settlement end and sent down a wide first ball; while F. E. White trundled from the Pavilion, and had three made off his opening over. Then Lucas took the leather at the Settlement and a maiden over resulted. Dixon cut White for 2 and followed this with a single; after which Emerson drove the same bowler for one and 110 was telegraphed. Scoring now became more rapid, both bats getting Lucas away as they pleased, seven runs being made off the over. At 25 past 11 Dixon's fine innings was closed, Crane holding him in the outfield, off White's bowling—124-2-60. The retiring bat had made nine 4's, and three 2's. Dr. Moon partnered Emerson and opened with a boundary, nicely placed to leg; while another single was made by him ere the over closed. At half past eleven the score stood at 135, towards which Dr. Emerson had contributed 51, and both bats were well set and letting no opportunity pass. Another change was made in the bowling, G. Stephens going on again at the Settlement, but runs still came freely and at twenty minutes to 12, 150 was reached. Cornes gave Emerson a life at 152, and a single resulted, but his career was drawing to a close. At 159, Emerson lifted a ball from Gordon Stephens which Lucas held—159-3-61. His score included four 4's and six 2's. It was just ten minutes to 12 when Mollison joined Moon. He opened with a single off Lucas. Meanwhile Moon continued to score, but at 165 he lost his partner, Mollison being clean bowled by G. Stephens—165-4-2. W. D. S. Edwards partnered Dr. Moon at five minutes to 12, and had his balls sent flying with the last ball of Stephens' over—165-5-0. Two wickets had thus fallen in this over. Piggott filled the vacancy, and almost lost his partner first ball, but Wilkinson declined the opportunity which the Doctor gave at point. Two maiden overs followed, then Piggott opened his score with a couple off White, Braess slipping in attempting to field the cut. Two balls later Moon drove a single and 170 was hoisted. Runs came freely, both bats contributing, and at ten minutes past 12, 180 was telegraphed. Piggott soon after had a narrow shave of being run out, Moon calling on him. Some neat cuts were made by Moon in the succeeding over, and Lightfoot failing to stop a grounder a single by Piggott was converted into 2. The rain came pattering down again, but play continued and 190 was hoisted at seventeen minutes past 12. A boundary by Moon, who was playing excellent cricket, was followed by a single, both hits being made off White. At twenty past 12 the second century was reached, and the representatives of the British Navy and Army seemed well set, though the slippery state of the ball necessitated caution in dealing with the bowling. A couple to the off by Piggott marked White's over, and then Moon snicked Stephens for a single, after which Cornes held Piggott at the wickets—207-6-17. It wanted two minutes to half past twelve when Maitland went out to bat, and S. Stephens at the same time went on to bowl again at the Pavilion end. Maitland began by sending S. Stephens to the Club fence for 4 and followed this with a single next ball; the third delivery brought a single on to the sheet by Moon, but nothing more was made that over. After a maiden over a slip in the field by Crane enabled Maitland to score three off Sydney Stephens, and in the next over both bats placed singles to their credit, after which Maitland drove a boundary.

When the adjournment was made for tiffin the score stood at 232, to which Moon had contributed 53 and Maitland 16.

Play was restarted at 2.23 p.m., the photographing of the teams having taken some time. White went on to bowl at the Pavilion end, and his second ball almost forced Moon off. In the next over Moon cut a single, and Maitland hit the last ball for 2. The first delivery from G. Stephens produced a couple and 240 was signalled. Then Maitland lifted Stephens for 2 and the next ball he drove to the fence, and followed with a cut to the Pavilion. At half past 2 the score had reached 250. A single by Moon, off White, was all that the next over produced, and then a maiden went down on the score. The first ball from White, next over, saw Maitland l.b.w.—251-7-30. E. B. S. Edwards partnered Moon and he began with a single; the third ball of the over Moon sent to leg for one, while the last ball Edwards sent Stephens to leg for what looked like 2, but the ball being overthrown 4 went down on the score-sheet. A single by Moon, off White, was followed by a boundary by Edwards; another single by Moon brought his score equal to Dr. Emerson's 61; and the last ball of the over was nicked by Edwards for one. A single by Edwards off Stephens, the last of the over, and 270 was hoisted. At this point Crane relieved White at trundling and Edwards made a couple off him. The score continued to mount, but Edwards, skying a ball from Crane, was badly missed at 279 by Gordon Stephens. At 280 Clarke went on to bowl and the last ball of his opening over was put away by Moon for a single. Two singles, one by Moon, and one by Edwards, were followed by a boundary drive by Moon, and the last of the over produced a single. At five minutes to three 290 was hoisted. A cut by Moon for 2, and a single by the same bat came in Crane's over, while Moon punished Clarke for 4. Exactly at 3 o'clock the third century was reached, Edwards making the necessary hit with a single. In the next over he cut Clarke for 4. After this Kobe's fielding improved somewhat and little was allowed to pass. Jeffery was now tried at bowling, taking over from Crane, but the change effected no separation and at ten minutes past 3, the telegraph announced 310, of which Moon had made 83. The next thirty runs came quickly, both men hitting out freely and missing no chances, but at last Edwards, with his score at 49, was clean bowled by Stephens—342-8-49. Edwards was deservedly cheered on his return to the Pavilion. He made five 4's and four 2's. Dr. Moon's next partner was the veteran C. M. Duff. He opened his score with a single off Stephens' last ball; then he cut Jeffery for 4, and drove the fifth of the over for a couple. The first ball of the next over he sent to the off for one, and 350 was hoisted. A drive, down the ground by Moon for 4 and then a single, both hits at the expense of Stephens, brought this pretty bat his century amid rousing applause. A ball from S. Stephens, which broke badly brought about Moon's downfall, and he was stamped by Cornes as he stepped out to play it—362-9-106. Moon made eight 4's. Kingdon was the last man to go in, and Braess was put on to bowl. The second ball found the newcomer l.b.w.—363-10-1. The innings terminated at 22 minutes to four. Score:—

Kobe went to bat at ten minutes past 4, sending in Crane and Clarke, the Yokohama bowlers being Moon and W. D. S. Edwards, with Duff at his old place behind the wickets. The first over was a maiden for Dr. Moon, bowling from the Pavilion to Clarke. The light was very bad, the rain clouds being banked up in heavy masses all over the sky. The second, third and fourth overs proved maidens, the batsmen playing very carefully. At length Crane nicked Moon for a couple, and made a single off the last ball of the over. Clarke opened his score with a single off Edwards, and then Crane made the first boundary for Kobe off the same bowler, following it, next ball, with a similar stroke. Ten was hoisted at 23 minutes past 4. Yokohama's fielding was smart, the only miss so far being by Maitland at point, who gave Clarke a life in the second over. Two more maiden overs having been recorded, Dixon relieved Edwards at the Settlement, and Crane drove his last ball to the fence. A boundary by Clarke, off Dixon, at length broke the monotony and 20 was hoisted. At 20 minutes to 5 stumps were drawn, the light making further play impossible. Crane had then made 13, and Clarke 8, making Kobe 21 not out. Score:—

VICTORY RESTS WITH YOKOHAMA.

The second day of the Interport Festival opened in perfect cricketing weather, the Clerk of the celestial Meteorological Bureau evidently being determined to atone for his scurvy ill-humour of Monday. Blue skies flecked with the fleeciest of clouds prevailed all day, while the little breeze that swept across the field at times had hardly a suspicion of autumn in it. An early start was made, but disaster attended Kobe from the outset. With an overnight score of 21, not out, the visitors' prospects looked bright in the early morning sunshine but despite the hour and ten minutes careful blocking of their Captain, who in that time managed to get two runs, the whole side were out before a quarter to eleven for 43, having only managed to knock together 22 more runs in the course of the innings. Five was evidently the fatal number for Kobe. Time and again it was the fifth ball of the over which dismissed their batsmen, and then when 42 was reached five wickets fell in succession without a single run being placed to their credit. The fielding of the home eleven was smart, Maitland, Kilby, Kingdon, Emerson and Piggott all distinguishing themselves, while the bowling of Dixon and Emerson was perfect. Indeed, at the close of play the Umpires declared that only one loose ball had been sent down by the whole of the bowlers tried. Kobe followed on, but their prospects never brightened and at half-past twelve their last wicket fell, to a brilliant catch, and they were then one innings and 247 runs behind. This establishes a record in the Interport matches. As the Kobe team left the field, Dr. Wheeler, President of the local Club, called for cheers for them, and these were given, three times three, in the heartiest fashion. Then the Kobe Captain called upon his men for an answering cheer, and this was responded to very lustily.

From an early hour the cricket field attracted a considerable number of spectators, among them many ladies, and Dr. Wheeler presided over a very happy and crowded luncheon party. The compiler of the menu card had provided new mottoes for the day, and these included, "A miss is as good as a 'life';" "Every body has a wherefore;" "Never poke up to the bowler what you can drive for four;" "A catch in the hand's worth two through the fingers." At the close of lunch, Mr. C. H. Lightfoot proposed a toast, the only one of the day—the right worthy President of the Y. C. & A. C. The toast was honoured by the singing of "For he's a jolly good fellow," and this was followed by rousing cheers. Dr. Wheeler made the briefest of replies. He thanked the assembled company for the hearty, sincere, and uproarious manner in which they had drunk his health. The meeting then adjourned.

THE GAME.

Play was resumed at 9.18 a.m., Dr. Moon sending down the opening ball to Crane, who was defending at the Settlement end. The fifth ball of the over saw Crane caught and bowled by Moon—21-1-13. Lightfoot, the Kobe Captain, joined Clarke. Dixon began to bowl from the Settlement end and Clarke tipped his first ball, which Mollison, at long-on, dropped. Kobe had made no addition to the over-night score at the close of the over. A maiden from Moon followed, but Clarke got Dixon away for a single at half past nine. Lightfoot began his score the same over, with a single off Dixon, and Crane nicked the fourth ball for one. A single by Crane was all that was made off Moon's next over, but the fifth ball of the following over saw Clarke dismissed, cleaned bowled by Dixon—25-2-11. Lightfoot received Lucas for a partner at twenty-six minutes to ten, but run-getting still hung fire, the fielding being smart, while the bats treated the bowling with austere caution. Four maiden overs went down to each bowler—Dixon and Moon—by the time the clock marked 9.45. Lucas at length cut the last ball of Moon's over and began his score with a single. Two more maiden overs followed, but in the next, Dixon disturbed Lucas' leg stump—27-3-1. The newcomer was Gordon Stephens. At three minutes to ten Emerson relieved Moon at the Pavilion end, and off his last delivery Stephens stole a run. A single by Stephens, off Dixon, brought 30 on to the telegraph board, just as the clocks were chiming ten. A slip by W. D. S. Edwards, who was fielding square leg, allowed Stephens to convert what looked like a single into a 2, and two deliveries later he made another run off Emerson's bowling. Gordon Stephens' career closed in the next innings, being caught by Emerson at second slips off Dixon—33-4-5. Kobe's prospects looked decidedly gloomy as S. Stephens went in to partner Lightfoot, only twelve runs having been placed to their credit since the game re-started and four wickets having fallen. Stephens opened his score by lifting a ball to the Pavilion, the first boundary for Kobe, off Dixon's bowling. Lightfoot got Emerson away for a single, and then Stephens sent the same bowler away to leg for 4, but the fifth ball—the "fatal fifth"—found his leg stump—42-5-8. Cornes partnered Lightfoot, but before he could break his duck he was bowled by Emerson—42-6-0. Then Jeffery went out to join the Kobe Captain, and the first ball sent down to him by Emerson distributed his balls—42-7-0. White filled the vacancy and played out the over, but the debacle continued, the first ball from Dixon taking Lightfoot's leg stump—42-8-2. The Captain of the visiting team had been playing for just an hour and ten minutes, and his tactics under the circumstances were perfect. White and Wilkinson were now partnered but they were not destined to add to the score, the fifth ball from Emerson disposing of White—42-9-0. Disaster was piling upon disaster and when—after a single by Wilkinson—Braess, the last man to go in, was smartly caught at the wicket by Duff, off Dixon, it was all over for the visitors' first innings—43-10-0. Kobe retired at 10.36 a.m. Score:—

Kobe followed on at seven minutes to eleven, Lightfoot and Wilkinson going out to face the bowling of Dixon and Emerson. Lightfoot made the opening hit, a single off Dixon, and just as the field changed over an earthquake shook the ground. Wilkinson signalled the event by sending Emerson to the fence for 4, a pretty stroke which evoked much applause. Two more runs were made by him in the same over. Dixon was punished by Wilkinson for a couple in the next over, and then the run-getting stopped for a while, neither bat venturing any chances. A single by Wilkinson off Dixon varied the monotony and then Kobe entered on a series of disasters. Wilkinson retired lb.w., b. Emerson—13-1-7; R. G. Crane, the newcomer, went under in like fashion—13-2-0; and Lightfoot was caught at the wicket by Duff, off Dixon's first delivery—13-3-5. Lucas and Gordon Stephens were now partnered and a stand was made. A maiden over was followed by a boundary by Stephens, off Dixon, and Lucas made a single off Emerson. Kingdon next over fell twice in fielding a cut from Stephens and a single went down on the sheet. At length 20 was hoisted, the clock marking 26 minutes past eleven. Three minutes later Stephens drove Dixon for 3, and Lucas made 2 off him. A hit by Stephens, off Emerson, earned 3 next over, and Lucas got a single from the fifth delivery. But the following over saw Lucas caught by W. D. S. Edwards at mid on, off Dixon—30-4-4. The Stephens brothers were now partnered and a change was made in the bowlers, W. D. S. Edwards relieving Emerson at the Pavilion end. Gordon Stephens sent his first ball away for a single, but the rest of the over was unproductive. Sydney Stephens lifted Dixon for 3, fifth ball. In the following over he made 3 off Edwards, while Gordon Stephens drove him to the Pavilion for 4, and 40 was hoisted. A magnificent catch by Kingdon in the long field dismissed Sydney Stephens, the fielder falling but retaining the leather, for which he was vociferously cheered—42-5-7. It was now nine minutes to twelve, and Clarke went in to partner Gordon Stephens. A maiden over by Edwards followed, and then Dixon, with his second delivery, clean bowled Gordon Stephens—42-6-18. Forty-two seems a fatal number for Kobe. Clarke and Cornes were partnered at two minutes to twelve. A maiden over by Dixon, after which Clarke lifted a ball from W. D. S. Edwards which Kingdon almost reached, and a single went down to his credit, while Cornes opened his score in the following over with a cut off Dixon's bowling. Clarke made a single from the next delivery. A pretty cut by Clarke, off Edwards, produced 3, and he made a single off Dixon's first delivery, bringing 50 on to the telegraph at seven minutes past twelve. The next ball saw Clarke clean bowled by Dixon—51-7-9. E. C. Jeffery joined Cornes, and the newcomer opened with a snick to the boundary. After a maiden over from Edwards, Jeffery made a single off the last ball of Dixon's over, and then Mollison went on to bowl at the Pavilion, taking over the ball from W. D. S. Edwards. Nothing was made off Mollison's opening over, but Jeffery got Dixon away for a single and at 12.18 p.m. 60 was signalled. One minute later Cornes was held in the slips by Piggott, off Dixon—60-8-0. White joined Jeffery and lost his partner immediately, Emerson holding him at point, off Mollison—60-9-9. At 12.23 p.m. Braess went in, the last man for Kobe. He opened with a boundary to leg, and followed this with another right down the ground, both off Mollison's bowling. White at length got his chance and lifted Dixon for one. Then Braess scored one off the last of the over and 70 was reached. It wanted a minute to half-past twelve. A boundary by Braess, off Mollison, was followed by his dismissal, Dixon holding him smartly, and the Interport match of 1905 concluded at half-past twelve exactly—74-10-13.

THE CRICKET DINNER.

The dinner given in honour of the Kobe visitors came off at the Yokohama United Club on Tuesday evening. Dr. Edwin Wheeler, President of the Y.C. & A.C., was in the chair, and had on either hand the Kobe Captain (Mr. C. H. Lightfoot) and the Yokohama Captain (Mr. E. W. Maitland), beside Dr. Emerson, Messrs. L. J. Healing, F. E. White, C. M. Duff, Dr. Moon, R.N., etc. The Vice-chairs were filled by Messrs. D. H. Blake (Vice-President) and L. S. Hudson (Hon. Secretary). The dinner was faultlessly served and consisted of the following courses:—

Hors d'oeuvres Moscovite.
Mock Turtle Soup.
Bordure de Filets de Sole Joinville.
Aloyau de boeuf piqué Renaissance.
Galantine en Belle-vue.
Asperges d'Argenteuil, Sauce Mousseline.
Punch à la Romaine.
Dindonneaux rôti farci à la broche.
Salade de Saison.
Pudding Bristol.
Parfaits au Chocolat.
Gâteau Jeanne d'Arc.
Fruits.
Café.

The first toast given from the Chair was, "The Rulers of our Respective Countries," which was loyally drunk.

Dr. WHEELER next proposed "The Kobe Cricket Club," and in so doing said:—Gentlemen:—It is my pleasing duty once more to propose the health of our Kobe visitors, and to extend to them, in your name, a cordial welcome. The friendly contest on the cricket field yields us a pleasant excitement and when that is over what can be more delightful than to meet our quondam foes as good comrades round the festive board, and to exchange with them words of good fellowship.—(Applause) I will leave all particulars of the matches in the capable hands of the respective Captains. I now ask you, gentlemen, to join with me in drinking to the health and prosperity of our Kobe visitors.—(Loud applause).

The toast was drunk with musical honours.

Mr Lightfoot, in responding, alluded to the cordial reception always given to the Kobe cricketers when visiting Yokohama, and expressed a hope that it might long continue. With regard to the game just concluded he was of opinion that as Yokohama had expected to win and Kobe had expected to lose, the team which he commanded had achieved the wonderful result of pleasing everybody.—(Laughter and cheers.)

Later in the evening Mr. LIGHTFOOT proposed the health of the Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club. He paid a hearty compliment to the strongest team Yokohama had ever put in the field and said that it would be a capital thing if a combined team from Yokohama and Kobe could be got together to play Shanghai, so as to convince that port that there were other places in the Far East besides Hongkong who could knock the stuffing out of them. (Laughter and cheers).

The toast having been honoured, Dr. Moon, R.N., replied on behalf of Yokohama, thanking the visitors for the hearty way in which they had received it. Yokohama he considered had had all the luck in the game just played and Kobe had had none. He agreed with the suggestion that had fallen from the Kobe Captain that it would be a capital scheme to make up a combined team to play Shanghai, and he should like to participate in such a game if the exigencies of the Service allowed.

Mr. L. S. HUDSON proposed the umpires, scorers, and all who have kindly assisted (which included the Ladies). He paid generous tribute to the work done by all in assisting to make the festival a success and particularly alluded to the debt the Club were under to Mr. C. Murray Duff, the veteran of nearly ever Interport match.

Mr. A. J. CORNES, on behalf of Kobe, tendered the visitors' thanks to the umpires and scorers who had worked so unselfishly for Kobe, and in alluding to the services of Mr. Duff behind "the sticks" and elsewhere, perpetrated a new reading of an old proverb, to wit, "that what is sauce for Duff is not sauce for the duffer."

Mr. O. STROME and Mr. FOSTER having replied, Dr. EMERSON proposed "The Press," to which Messrs. A. Bellamy Brown and Cyril Allen responded. This concluded the official toast list, but Mr. D. H. Blake asked permission to propose a toast which, though not on the list, would, he felt sure, be cordially received,—namely the health of Mr. L. S. Hudson, the Hon. Secretary of the Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club. Anyone who had filled the position knew full well the difficulties to be encountered and the amount of work to be performed by the occupant of such a post, especially during an interport week, and it was a wonder to him that anyone cognisant of this should be found willing to undertake the duties. Mr. Hudson was not ignorant of the amount of work such a post entailed, for he had previously filled the office of Honorary Secretary of the K.C.C. Mr. Hudson was a busy man, and for that reason, if for none other, he was to be congratulated and thanked for the amount of work he had already done in connection with the Interport week.

The toast was received with musical honours. Mr. Hudson in returning thanks said he could not have done the work connected with the Interport week had it not been for the ready assistance of "Charlie" Duff, without whose valuable help and advice no secretary of the Yokohama Cricket Club could go far with his work.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT next rose and proposed the health of the honoured President of the Y. C. & A. C.—Dr. Wheeler.

This toast was received with cheers and musical honours. It was briefly acknowledged by the Doctor.

Songs were given during the evening by Dr. Emerson, Messrs. B. C. Foster, E. W. Maitland, A. E. Cooper, A. Robinson, F. E. White, and the Chairman, and included the old favourites "Sweethearts and Wives," and "Yo, heave, ho," without which no Yokohama interport dinner is allowed to pass. The singing of "Dear Old Pals," by Mr. F. E. White, "Auld Lang Syne," the British National Anthem, and "The Star-spangled Banner" brought proceedings to a close shortly before midnight.

BASEBALL.

We are requested to state that a handsome silver cup has been presented by a well-known Yokohama resident, who is an ardent admirer of baseball, for competition among the Yokohama players at the forthcoming Interport baseball match.

The captain and vice-captains of baseball have decided that the fairest way to dispose of this cup is to use it as a prize for the best batting average, so batters had better look to their laurels.

BASEBALL TEAMS.

The baseball teams for the Interport games will be as follows:—

THE SMOKING CONCERT.

The Smoking Concert given under the auspices of the V. C. & A. C. on Wednesday evening in honour of the Kobe guests proved a most enjoyable entertainment. A convenient arrangement of seats and tables in the newly and brightly decorated Public Hall had been effected and though all of the former were not occupied, the attendance was quite numerous enough for the comfort of those present, and no fault could be found with the refreshments liberally provided and partaken of. The genial President of the V. C. & A. C. occupied the chair, supported by members of the committee of the Club, while the captain and many members of the visiting team were entertained at the President's table. At 9 p.m. sharp the Band opened the programme with a lively selection, "The Wizard of Oz," by Fulton, and on its conclusion the Chairman introduced the first vocalist, of the evening Dr. W. N. B. Emerson, who, in a fine bass voice gave a most successful rendering of Marzial's song "My Love is Come," and as an encore the popular Irish ballad "I start for Philadelphia in the morning." Mr. W. H. Ferrier followed with a comic song, "The Man Behind," in character costume and in response to a recall, added an original verse or two with allusions to the recent interport cricket match. The next number was a very well executed cello solo by Mr. E. Salinger, a charming Berceuse by Godard, which elicited such an undeniable recall that the clever performer was constrained to favour the audience with another selection. Mr. A. H. Windett followed with a comic song, "At the Seaside and the funny things you see there," delivered in character costume, and as an encore sang "Can't he take my word." Mr. S. H. Somerton then favoured the audience with a capital rendering of Watson's fine song "The Vedette," which has not, we believe, been heard before by a Yokohama audience, and was warmly applauded. A comic song by Mr. L. S. Hudson "I'm not Particular" (Jones), and two by Mr. A. E. Cooper, "Truth and Poetry" (Mill), and an encore, led up to the climax of the merriment and delight of the audience when Mr. G. G. Brady brought down the house with his ex-cruciatingly funny comic song "The Stormy Wind did Blow" (Dunville). The make-up of the amateur foremost hand was a marvel of detail and humorous fancy, and the gestures and action of the singer and dancer were inimitable. Of course Mr. Brady had to respond to the almost delirious recall of the house with another side-splitting performance, and this brought the first part of the programme to an end.

After an interval of about ten minutes the second part opened with a performance of conjuring tricks—"10 Minutes of Mystifying Mysteries" by Professor Thornichi and Troupe, Japanese Conjurers from Caskelyne and Mooke, London. The professor was appropriately and richly costumed in ancient Japanese attire and was assisted in his deeds of mystery by a pukka native of Nippon and performed to the accompaniment of banging tom-toms and other native music—save the mark! The tricks were deftly and neatly performed by the dignified Professor—particularly the well known basket and sword trick—and, needless to say, were warmly applauded. Mr. S. F. Gracey followed, in costume, with a couple of songs capably rendered to an accompaniment by the singer himself on the guitar, and in response to repeated recalls Mr. Gracey gave some amusing illustrations of his ventriloquial acquirements in a triologue and clever imitations of the musical mosquito, cork drawing and the fizz of an effervescent drink. Dr. Emerson again favoured the audience with a capital song, this time Love's "Molly Bawn," and Mr. Windett, attired in kilt and sporran, gave Merton's "Stop your Tickling Jock." Mr. Salinger's excellent instrumentation on the cello was again heard to great advantage in the lively and charming "La Cinquantaine," of Marie, and once again the inimitable Mr. Brady sent the audience into convulsions with his intensely humorous rendering of the comic character sketch and song "John James 'Emery Irving Wilson Barrett Baggs," the decayed favourite of Drury Lane Theatre. Mr. Somerton followed with Sullivan's fine song "The Sailor's Grave," but by this time in the evening's entertainment the majority of the audience was more attuned to mirth than melody and though the artistic rendering of the number was fully recognised it failed to suit the humour of the house. The alleged comic song by Mr. Cooper which followed, "I think we shall have some rain," seeming to be better appreciated. As a wind up Mr. C. Duff played with much skill on the accordion a medley of airs with variations and the audience dispersed after a very enjoyable evening, to the strains of the Band. The accompaniments to the songs and cello solos during the evening were excellently played by Messrs. B. B. Berrick and H. Grimbles.

YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

The race for the Cruising Class on Saturday was over the Mandarin Bluff—Tachibana course, for the Surprise Cup. Neither Wanderer nor Surprise started, and therefore there was no second prize, as that was conditional on there being four starters. Kathleen was quickest across the line at the start, but before reaching the Harbour Entrance Nina had assumed the lead, and Asagao second place. The wind was light south easterly at first, but dropped away to nothing later on, and reduced the race to a drifting match. Several shifts of wind gave the different crews plenty of work, and it seemed doubtful whether the race could be finished in time, but a better breeze came up after 5 o'clock, and all the boats got in well within the time limit. In this Cruising Class race Nina led throughout, and won the Surprise Cup by 25 seconds on the arbitrary handicap.

Kathleen	5.37.40	5.22.40
Asagao	5.43.5	5.23.5

The Course for the 21 Raters was Mandarin Bluff—Quarantine Ship twice round, and home. Aimee got a long lead from Eidna and Witch, and finished alone; the others did not complete the course.

Only two boats of the Lark Class turned out. No. 11 won by 40 seconds from No. 4.

MOSQUITO YACHT CLUB.

Seven yachts started for the race scheduled by the Mosquito Yacht Club, and the six that completed the course finished as follows:—

Pele	4.49.15
Winsome	4.50.25
Checho	4.55.42
Sunbeam	5.05.25
Elsa	5.15.40

THE LAW COURTS.

CHARGE AGAINST COUNT TAKESONO.

Count Takesono, who had been undergoing trial in the Tokyo Appeal Court, on a charge of having forged a private letter and of fraud was released on Oct. 5th on the ground that the evidence against him was insufficient.

NISHIKAWA v. WRIGHT.

The hearing of a case instituted by K. Nishikawa, a jinrikisha coolie, against Mr. W. N. Wright, No. 40, claiming yen 46.50 began on Oct. 10th in the Yokohama Local Court before Judge Kawamura.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. S. Ota and defendant was personally present.

Plaintiff's counsel stated that about 10 a.m. on May 19th, a big dog belonging to the defendant bit the plaintiff while he was in the street in front of Wright's Hotel, and inflicted three severe injuries. The man was treated for fourteen days by Dr. Tomitsuka, for which he paid yen 7.50. During this period he could not attend to his work and thus was prevented from earning yen 14. Of the amount claimed, yen 25 was set down as consolation for the pain he suffered during the two weeks. Plaintiff's Counsel added that about May 6th, the dog bit another coolie named Kametani, and about May 10th Ishibashi another jinrikisha man, was bitten. The men asked Mr. Wright not to release the dog, but in spite of their request, Mr. Wright allowed the dangerous dog to go loose.

Mr. Wright contended that his dog did not bite any person and that he had never received any complaint from any person before. Consequently he had no responsibility.

Plaintiff's Counsel produced evidence consisting of the certificate of Dr. Tomitsuka certifying to the injuries received by plaintiff, and some letters. Mr. Wright refused to admit these private documents.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine Dr. Tomitsuka, and the two jinrikisha men, Kametani and Ishibashi, as witnesses.

The Court decided to examine them on Oct. 24th.

A TRADE MARK CASE.

A case filed by the Bells' Asbestos Co., No. 78, Yokohama, against the Yokohama branch of the Okura-gumi claiming yen 2,050 came up on Oct. 10th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Nakanishi.

Plaintiffs were represented by Dr. Masujima and Mr. Hiraoka and the defendant firm by Messrs T. Takagi and G. Koide.

Plaintiffs' Counsel stated that on May 10th, tenders for supplying asbestos goods were opened in the Yokosuka Naval Arsenal. Plaintiffs and defendants were among the tenderers. The asbestos goods consisted of "Doggar's" and "Demon's" packings, as well as common asbestos tape and yarn. Defendants bid was accepted. The asbestos packings with the marks "Doggar" and "Demon" are the specialties of the plaintiffs who are the patentees registered in England and in Japan, so that nobody can do business in them without working through plaintiffs. Defendants, however, lodged their tender at a price cheaper than the proper price quoted by the plaintiffs. As a result, defendants succeeded in the competition. Plaintiffs' Counsel further stated that if the defendants supplied goods unjustly alleging them to bear "Doggar" or "Demon" marks, they must be regarded as having encroached on the trade mark of the plaintiffs. Counsel asked the Court to stop the plaintiff from supplying the false goods to the Yokosuka Naval office. The profit estimated to be earned by defendants should be paid to plaintiffs.

Defendants' Counsel held that the Okura-gumi lodged their tender in the Yokosuka Naval Arsenal on samples shown by the authorities and did not refer to the trade-marks mentioned by the plaintiffs. In the official specification, the marks "Doggar" or "Demon" were not specified. Defendants subsequently manufactured the asbestos goods in a factory at Kobe and supplied them to the office. The said asbestos packings were rejected on account of inferior quality and for this reason a fine was imposed. Counsel concluded by saying that the action had arisen through misapprehension on the part of the plaintiffs.

At this stage, the parties produced their evidence and gave lengthy explanations regarding them, after which the plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine Mr. Sakura, an official of the Yokosuka Naval Office, who superintended the opening of the tenders. After consultation, the Court rejected this request. Plaintiffs' Counsel asked the Court to adjourn the hearing for further preparations of evidence. The Court gave consent and adjourned the case till Oct. 26th.

CLAIM FOR LIFE INSURANCE.

The hearing of a case lodged by T. Kimoto, headman of the village of Awano, Yamaguchi prefecture, against the New York Life Insurance Co., claiming yen 9,859.60 was resumed on Oct. 12th in the Yokohama District Court. On this occasion, Mr. K. Kitasato, the manager of the Teikoku Life Insurance Co, Tokyo, was examined as witness.

K. Kitasato stated that on Dec. 25th, 1903, Mr. Fumio Kimoto, younger brother of plaintiff, made an application to them for insurance for eight thousand yen. On the following day, Dr. Shimamura examined the applicant and found that he was suffering from lung-disease. Consequently, the company refused to insure him. Witness did not know whether the late younger brother of the plaintiff had insured himself with the New York Life Insurance Co.

Counsel asked the Court to adjourn the hearing for further preparation of evidence. The Court adjourned the case till Nov. 8th 11 a.m.

CLAIM FOR SHORT-DELIVERY OF CARGO.

In the Yokohama District Court, a case filed by Messrs Mendelson Bros., against Messrs Butterfield & Swire, agents for the Ocean Steamship Co., and the China Mutual Steam Navigation Co., claiming twelve hundred yen, came up again on Oct. 12th before Judge Nakanishi. T. Ishii, a Japanese employee of Captain-Weston, was summoned as a witness.

T. Ishii deposed that he is a bookkeeper in Capt. Weston's landing office. Consequently he knew that two lots of tin-plates consigned to Messrs. Mendelson Bros. were brought in June and July by the steamers Kaisow and Diomed respectively. The lot by the Kaisow was marked "P.M.B." in rhombus and the other with "M.B." in triangle. For the "M.B.P." lot, 48 cases are still short delivered and for the "M.B." lot, 24 cases are also short delivered. These shortages are still kept in a godown of the Customs compound. Witness further stated that he did not see personally the cases lying in the warehouse so that he could not say anything about their condition. In June, Yamaguchi attended as tally-man at the landing of the cargo brought by the Kaisow and he was now employed by Messrs. Siber, Wolff & Co. In July, H. Oshima attended to the landing from the Diomed, and he is now employed by Messrs. Butterfield and Swire.

Defendants' Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine as witnesses the two Japanese mentioned by the present witness, and also Mr. G. Syme Thomson, of Messrs. Dodwell & Co., as an expert-witness as to the clause in the Bill of Lading with regard to the usual packing of tin-plate.

The Court gave consent to this request. Plaintiff's Counsel presented an objection to Mr. Thomson and stated that Messrs. Dodwell and Co. are acting as agents for a certain steamship company on conditions similar to those of Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. Counsel thought that probably an impartial opinion would not be obtained from Mr. Thomson. The Court cancelled the decision for summoning Mr. Thomson and decided to appoint another man—foreigner or Japanese—as an expert.

The hearing was again adjourned till Oct. 24th 1 p.m.

THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On the night of Oct. 10th, a thunder-storm was experienced in Gifu prefecture.

The Osaka Shosen Kaisha's new steamer, Taishin Maru, is to be launched at Nagasaki on Oct. 16th.

Lieut.-Commander Taniguchi has been appointed naval attaché to the Japanese Legation in Washington.

Mr. Hayashi, Japanese Minister in Seoul, left there on Oct. 11th for Fusan on his way to Tokyo on official business.

Three of the Russian prisoners at Otsu have applied to the Home Minister through the local authorities for naturalization papers.

The Jiji says that the grand naval review will probably take place on Oct. 23rd. The Emperor will hoist his flag on the battleship Asahi.

The British cruiser Alacrity, with Lady Noel and her daughter, is expected to arrive at Yokohama to-day, Oct. 13th, from Weihaiwei.

A British torpedo-store ship and some destroyers which left Weihaiwei on Oct. 9th are expected to arrive at Nagasaki to-day, Oct. 13th. The citizens are making preparations to welcome them.

Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff, gave a garden party on the afternoon of Oct. 11th at the Shiba Detached Palace. On this occasion, the foreign officers who have returned from the front, military and naval attaches of the foreign legations and high Japanese officers were present.

In connection with Russian recrudescence of activity it is significant that the St. Petersburg papers publish a telegram from Teheran representing that the Persian Press is complaining that the British Commission has unfairly awarded to Afghanistan a considerable portion of Persian Seistan and two-thirds of the lake of Helmund, the effect of the latter being that there is danger of Persian Seistan becoming a desert. A telegram says that an address has been published in the Press urging the Shah not to ratify the protocol of the Commission.

The directors of the Kwansei Railway Co. met on Oct. 11th in Osaka. They decided to submit to the shareholders a proposal to raise a foreign loan of fifteen million yen with interest at 5½ per cent. Negotiations have already been opened by the directors with the representative of a foreign capitalist.

Amongst the passengers by the P.M. steamer Siberia are H.B.M.'s Consul and Mrs. Playfair, who are proceeding home, via America, on furlough. Mr. H. G. Parlett, from the Legation at Tokyo, has been appointed to the charge of the Consulate at Nagasaki during Mr. Playfair's absence in England.

The monthly issued by the Nagasaki Press (Cherry Blossoms) continues to be as interesting as ever. There is a chatty article by Rev. Henry Stout recalling "Nagasaki in Days of Yore," with a good portrait of Baron von Siebold; "Unzen: the Sanitarium of Nagasaki" is the subject of another special contribution which will not fail to interest. The current number, like its predecessors, is carefully edited and neatly got up.

Y. Kato (48), a coolie, on the evening of Oct. 8th rushed suddenly into the dwelling of another coolie, B. Ishida (30), Ishikawa, Nakamura, Yokohama, and assaulted the latter with a large knife, severely injuring him. The assailant stabbed his victim in the breast in two places. He was arrested on the scene of the crime by the Kotobuki-cho police, and on Monday morning was removed to the District Court. The cause of the attack is said to have been some monetary dispute. During the commission of the crime, the wife of the coolie assaulted also received a severe injury to her right arm while struggling to protect her husband.

According to official investigations, at the end of August convicts throughout the Empire totalled:—

"THE COSMOPOLITAN."

The first number of The Cosmopolitan, an illustrated monthly published at Shanghai, is to hand. It is a very promising publication. The pictures are excellent—we may instance those which accompany the articles on the North Saddle and "In the mouth of the Yangtze." But indeed the illustrations are quite up to the level of the letterpress, and when one looks at this book of 96 pages one wonders how it is to be produced month after month.

The Tokyo City Assembly has decided to establish a triumphal gate. As to the site, a committee are conferring with the authorities of the Army and Navy. The height of the gate will be 60 feet and the dimensions 58 by 26 feet.

MR. BATCHELOR'S AINU APPEAL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STUDY OF THE CHINESE CHARACTERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The article of the Missionary upon the study of Chinese characters is most interesting. I should be glad to join in his game or to look on as he plays solitaire, if you would kindly introduce me. A great deal of very real amusement can be derived from the study of Chinese characters, but it is almost if not quite as useless as card-playing or chess.

For after all what is the market price for such knowledge? We must compete with Orientals who have inherited abilities for untold generations and who have daily and hourly practical use with hand and eye for all that they know. But missionaries are not thinking about market and prices, they want to save souls, and to such I would venture to suggest that the best way to do so is to teach the Orientals how to save each others' souls. The Chinese characters are the common language that through the eye reaches the soul of the literati of these three nations, the Japanese, the Chinese and the Koreans.

Dr. De Forest has in his brilliant style written up the account of how the Japanese troops in the Pescadores gave up a Chapel (of the C. M. S. I think) to the native Christians and through the Chinese characters in the hymnbooks and Bibles were able to come to an understanding through the eye and the hand, when the ear and the tongue failed. I met in Sendai one of the Japanese Christians who was in this affair. Most of us absorb some Chinese characters in spite of ourselves by the constant reading of the sacred books.

Why not use what we have, and learn more as we need them for use.

About seven years ago I received from the Venerable and truly Right Reverend S. I. J. Scherschewsky, D.D., a copy of his Classical Chinese New Testament (Yen Li) and I was surprised to find that I could spell my way along through so much of it. About that time a policeman lived in the mission compound in order that he might pick up some English by watching over the hairy foreigner. The idea came to me that it might be amusing to use the Chinese New Testament as a basis of translating into English for our mutual benefit. So every day after Evensong in the Church we took up the second lesson and read it in the Chinese, the policeman helping me over the hard places and listening eagerly to my translation and commentary in English.

The result was that the policeman learned a good deal of English and I learned a few characters. He became a very good Christian, but got a distaste for the duties of a policeman and became a very ardent and successful teacher of English. He is now in service in the country, and I wish that I had him to help me in my mission work. Some years ago on a Pacific Steamer I made the acquaintance of Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, the translator of "Quo Vadis" and other works of the Pole whose name I would not dare to try to spell. Do it if you dare! Mr. Curtin was a very diligent student of Chinese. His method was to put the gospels side by side, English and Chinese, and grind away every afternoon. What his ultimate object was I did not venture to inquire. He had just returned from a visit to the Murats of Mongolia and was full of their ways and doings.

What he did any man may do in the way of study. We can work up from the known to the unknown, English to Japanese, Japanese to Chinese. Most missionaries know at least the Gospels by heart, and can find a following of Japanese students who will most gladly listen to their translations into English from Japanese.

More than that, the Japanese know the Chinese text and can put it into Japanese when they cannot put it into English.

This is the point of contact where the native Chinese student comes in. He wants to learn to speak Japanese; he can read the Chinese text even easier than his Japanese brother, and can help him to read sometimes where the Japanese might grope. Of course there will be disputes about the text, and sometimes the discussion may wax warm but the air is clearer after a storm, and peace like a gentle spirit broods over the scene. This method of international textual criticism is not mere theory; we have been doing it daily all summer by the grace of the Bishop in Holy Trinity Divinity School and now by his favour and that of the Director of Saint Paul's College we have a class at 4 o'clock on Tuesdays free to all interested. A second class has been commenced in the Practical English School in Kanda Nishiki-cho, on Saturdays at 2 p.m. on the same methods and principles. I shall be very glad to open up similar classes anywhere in the city on the invitation of sincerely interested parties.

The New Testaments can be procured from Mr. Toshiro Nakagawa No. 15, Takegawa-cho, Ginza, Tokyo. It is No. 276 Term 天主 by the Shanghai catalogue. No other edition will be tolerated for a moment.

Some months ago, Professor Walter Dening in the pages of the Japan Mail advised missionaries in the study of Japanese to "Read, Read, Read."

He is himself one of the very few who have made an international reputation for success in the language. His advice is good but let us add to it the dictum of Demosthenes as to the making of an orator, "action, action, action."

Or better still let us combine them and teach, teach, teach.

The best authorities on the art of teaching now agree that the best way to learn is to teach what we know.

I shall be most happy to teach anyone all the Chinese that I know.

If anyone thinks me too conceited in thus attempting to storm the castle of Classical Chinese, I will confess quite freely that I do not know it all yet. "Brethren I count not myself to have apprehended, but I press towards the mark for the prize."

Imitation is the sincerest flattery, and if I can induce anyone to attempt to teach the forty thousand Japanese students in the capital, to teach the 10,000 Chinese students here all that they know of the Gospel I shall be happy.

Sincerely your servant,

HENRY SCOTT JEFFERYS.

Yokohama, October 2nd, 1905.

AN APPEAL FOR THE AINU.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE JAPAN MAIL.)

SIR,—Having already had much personal experience of your readiness at all times to assist in any good works of charity, I venture once again to ask you to allow me to appeal for help through the columns of your esteemed journal. It is on behalf of the Kamikawa Ainu, who are really in great distress, that I write. In order not to take up too much of your valuable space I content myself with a bare recital of facts only, which, I think will speak for themselves. Thanking you in advance for your kind assistance,

I am, Yours very truly,

JOHN BATCHELOR.

In the year 1900, a certain Ainu of Otaru was deputed by the Chikabumi (Kamikawa) Ainu to go to the headquarters of the Central Government in Tokyo and endeavour to rescue the land upon which they were then living, and upon which their ancestors had lived for untold ages before them, from the hands of a certain Japanese company which was in the act of getting it away from them, after a semi-legal fashion. He was happily successful in his endeavours and so naturally gained the full confidence of the people for whom he acted.

In the year 1902, this same man, Amakawa by name, having possessed himself of the seals of 36 heads of families, proceeded, without the knowledge or consent of the owners, to sell the land crops for a term of years to a certain Japanese residing in Sapporo. The price paid was 1,500 yen. None of this money ever reached the people for whom Amakawa was supposed to be acting.

Later, this man again sold the crops for a further sum of 4,000 yen, the purchaser being a resident of Kamikawa. This money also Amakawa is said to have kept to himself. The people have for some time been trying to get redress, but the thing has been so cleverly done that the law seems powerless to bring the culprits to justice. Amakawa did the same thing for some Ainu elsewhere years ago, the result being that all the Ainu land there has gone into the hands of some Japanese. This is what the Kamikawa Ainu are afraid will happen in their case.

On the 27th, of last month (Sept.) I went up myself to see some of the Ainu and found that one of the Japanese creditors had already commenced to seize the crops ready for a sale. He had actually taken millet and beans, and other necessities of life, which the women had planted close round their hut doors for winter food. He had taken several bear cubs from the old men, which were being reared for sacrifice; and also chickens (eight in number), a chest of drawers and a gun among other things.

The frightened women and children were weeping loudly while this was being done and a few of the men were actually in tears! Some of them have now no food to eat. Such being the case it has been found necessary to commence feeding the people.

Mrs. Pierson, who is at Kamikawa, writes me:

* Kossage (an Ainu woman) came to see me yesterday with her four daughters and grandson. She was very discouraged, as her beans and millet crop had all been taken. To-day O Teru's mother and sister and 5 Ainu children came. The poor mother was utterly discouraged. She has lost 2 daughters, and her grown son was drafted and sent to the war and she does not know whether he is dead or alive. I think I never saw a sadder face. She wept and sobbed and I felt like crying with her. I felt I must help them, so I gave the old mother one sho of rice and the same of wheat (she has three in family), and one and a half sho of rice and wheat to the other woman, as she has 5 in her family."

Of course the Ainu cannot live under such conditions in this place. Two families have already been obliged to clear out. Were it possible, the people would sell some of the land (which is of considerable extent) so as to pay off the creditors. But the protection afforded the Ainu is not of such a nature as to allow this: for no title-deeds have ever been allowed them, and without these it is impossible to sell the land.

Much help has been given for the families of Japanese soldiers so bravely fighting in Manchuria, but it should not be forgotten that many Ainu also have been sent to the front and some have died there. Mrs. Pierson mentions one, the only son of his widowed mother, who is left to starve! Will not some one help to feed these people during the winter months? Kamikawa is a very cold place in winter and the suffering of the people arising out of all this miserable business must be intense from December till April. Contributions towards the work of feeding the needy (which is the only form of help we are proposing to give at present) will be most thankfully received by either myself at Sapporo or by Mrs. Pierson at Kamikawa. [Any contributions sent to this office will be duly acknowledged and forwarded.—ED. J.M.]

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

GERMANY'S POLICY.

London, October 6.

Prince Buelow, interviewed by a correspondent of Le Temps, said that Germany had no idea of obstructing French colonial policy, provided that Germany's commercial interests and dignity were respected. He said the talk of the inevitableness of an Anglo-German conflict was nonsense. Both Governments were too alive to the consequences to be influenced by any press outburst. International solidarity was now too deeply founded to allow any one to become tertius gaudens in any quarrel whatever. He was convinced Anglo-German prejudices would vanish. The Anglo-French entente was an example of the possibility of an Anglo-German reconciliation in which it was hoped France would have an opportunity of assisting. He hoped that Anglo-German relations would be the prelude to that mutual confidence which Germans would welcome once they were convinced that France had ceased trying to isolate Germany.

BELATED STEAMERS.

Later.

Seventy-seven steamers are laid up at Port Said, including 16 mail boats.

ENGLAND AND GERMANY.

English newspapers, while agreeing with Prince Buelow that an Anglo-German understanding is not inevitable, comment on the gruffness and cynicism of German diplomacy. They are inclined to be sceptical of Prince Buelow's assurances of good-will.

STIKES IN BERLIN.

There is a grave situation in Berlin, arising out of the strikes of the electrical workers, by which 50,000 men are idle, including those indirectly affected. The metal manufacturers have now declared a lock-out, to begin on the 14th, in sympathy with the electric firm. The number then idle will be 120,000 or over one-twentieth of the population.

AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

London, October 7.

The investigation being conducted at New York into the methods of American Insurance Companies daily discloses fresh irregularities and wastefulness. The Governor of Missouri was vigorously applauded for a speech, in which he declared that when the President of a great Insurance Company contributed money from the Company's funds towards a political campaign, he committed embezzlement.

THE BLOCK IN THE CANAL.

Later.

In view of the anticipated complete opening of the canal to-morrow the steamers at Suez have been allowed to enter the canal and proceed to Ismailia.

A SENSATIONAL STORY.

The Matin has published the detailed history of the Morocco embroglio. It says that just prior to M. Delcassé's resignation the situation was such that the Germans would have been in Chalons within four days. The French forts were unprepared, and the batteries largely unprovided with new guns.

MOURNING HUNGARY.

London, October 8.

Yesterday was a day of mourning in Hungary, being the anniversary of the execution of the leaders of the war of 1849. As usual great processions to the graves of Kossuth and Count Bathany took place, but the day passed quietly.

DIPLOMATIC DISCLOSURES.

Later.

The Matin continues its disclosures. It affirms that England offered Delcassé to mobilise the fleet, to seize the Kiel Canal, to land 100,000 men in Schleswig-Holstein, and said she would confirm the offer in writing if France desired.

CANAL RE-OPENED.

London, October 9.

The Suez Canal has been re-opened.

BRITISH TRADE.

Imports into the United Kingdom for September showed an increase of £2,658,642 and the exports an increase of £3,421,801.

NO NEWSPAPERS IN MOSCOW.

No newspapers are being published in Moscow in consequence of the strike of compositors.

THE ROYAL TOUR.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to leave Genoa on Oct. 21st.

RUSSIAN TROOPS ON THE MANCHURIAN BORDERS.

London, October 10.

It is reported that Russia will station 300,000 troops on the Chinese frontier after the peace, partly because of apprehension that they will join the malcontents at home and partly with the view of intimidating the Chinese.

GERMAN ENTERPRISE IN THE FAR EAST.

It is stated in Hamburg that the Hamburg American and the Norddeutscher Lloyds contemplate starting lines in Far Eastern waters especially with the view of combatting Japanese competition on the Yangtze.

THE "MATIN'S" ARTICLES.

Later.

It is believed that the articles in the Matin were inspired by M. Delcassé. They have caused a profound sensation in France. They tend to augment the animosity of France towards Germany. English papers are sceptical as to Britain volunteering her support.

TRAFFIC ON THE SUEZ CANAL.

Traffic on the Canal is free in the day time. In another couple of days it will be free at night.

THE "MATIN'S" DISCLOSURES.

London, October 10.

In an inspired article, the Koelnische Zeitung says it does not believe that England offered France military assistance, and is reserving its verdict with reference to the rôle ascribed to Great Britain until the British press has offered explanations. The German papers generally demand explanations from the British Government.

THE HUNGARIAN CRISIS.

Later.

The Emperor Franz Josef has again prorogued the Hungarian Diet until the 19th of December, in consequence of the failure to form a new government on the basis of securing Parliament against disorder.

In spite of the prorogation Count Andrássy moved a resolution protesting against the unconstitutionality of the Crown. This was adopted practically unopposed. The Government supporters refrained from voting.

THE "MATIN'S" DISCLOSURES.

London, October 12.

The Editor of the Matin says that M. Delcassé is in no way responsible for the newspaper's statements. The German press is betraying some irritation because the British Government has not denied the Matin's story.

(Received by the Naval Department, p.m. 4th inst.)

RUSSIAN STEAMER INSPECTED.

Admiral Kataoka reports that at 7.40 a.m. on the 4th instant he received a report by wireless telegraphy that a Russian steamer was passing from the south eastward. A war-ship was sent out and at 1.30 p.m. she overtook the steamer near Juzo Cape (Shirakoto). She proved to be the Augan, owned by the Russian Government, carrying provisions and daily necessities and no other contraband of war. She also had a permit from Admiral Shimamura, and she was therefore released.

(RECEIVED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE ALLIANCE.

The Dutch papers now discuss the new Anglo-Japanese alliance. They all regard it as a defensive compact which will secure peace to East Asia for several years. The gist of what they say is this:—"Japan had become weary of the war and not seeing fit to augment her forces, desired peace. She has attained her object. Russia also was exhausted and had no residue of strength to employ in recovering her position. The new Alliance seems to have for object the restraint of German activities in China. There is nothing strange in the fact that it recognises Japan's predominant position in Korea, for what preserved Korea's independence was Russia's policy of turning it to aggressive advantage. As for England the great advantage she has gained by securing the tranquillity of her Indian dominions is a thing of the future, for Russia will not resume her activity in Central Asia. The new alliance augments the prestige of England and Japan."

The Koelnische Zeitung, discussing the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, says:—"By their present alliance Japan and England desire to preserve the status quo in East Asia and have recognised the policy of the open door, from which two points of view the Alliance concerns the interests of all the Powers, and they will welcome it since they regard these two objects as legitimate, what they have themselves hitherto aimed at being identical with this procedure. It is the very best plan for securing China's immunity from aggression and thus averting friction. Should any country threaten China's independence and aim at securing exceptional advantages, trouble would at once arise and to that extent all the Powers take the same view. We can not anticipate that any State will essay to disturb the present situation in East Asia, and at any rate this alliance gives a fresh public guarantee of peaceful competition in trade and navigation. On not a few occasions Germany has clearly shown her earnest desire to pursue this policy, and consequently when the Japanese Representative in Berlin communicated the contents of the treaty of alliance Prince Bülow did not hesitate to express his opinion in that sense with reference to the purpose of the alliance. It is for merchants not soldiers to undertake the tasks of civilization in the Far East. The alliance seems to embody a spirit of mutual guarantee against the attacks of Russia, but it is difficult to anticipate that Russia, confronted by a domestic situation of much difficulty, will neglect the great work demanding her attention at home and will resume the aggressive policy which involved her in a disastrous struggle with Japan. Further, there is none among the European Powers that desires to extend its territory or its advantages in East Asia. They wish merely for the security of what they have. Therefore in so far as Japan and England sincerely hold to the policy with which their present alliance has been formed, thus affording to the world a guarantee of peace, there will be no objection on the part of the Powers."

The Novoye Vremya discusses the Anglo-Japanese alliance thus:—"The development of Japan's commercial interests in China is opposed to the interests of England, and therefore it can not be said that the alliance is based on uniformity of interests in Asia. It is simply inspired by dread of Russia. Therefore should Russia's activity in Central and Eastern Asia cease, the Anglo-Japanese alliance would lose its raison d'être. We believe that the more the two countries' dread of Russia is removed and their confidence is restored, the less will the value of the alliance become. Hence we fail to see the advantage of Russia joining hands with Germany. To make the relations closer between Russia and Germany would be nothing more than a means of giving strength to the Anglo-Japanese alliance."

RUSSIAN NAVAL ARRANGEMENTS.

The Russian Official Gazette announces that the torpedo-depot ship after the Erisi model, which is now on the stocks at St. Petersburg, is to be called Anhur. The battle-ship (15,000 tons) which is building in London is to be called the Rurik, and Imperial sanction has been given for placing her on the register of the Russian Navy. The Tsar has also sanctioned the transfer of the Doniople and the Rion to the Volunteer Fleet, and their removal from the list of war-ships.

ENTERTAINING THE BRITISH SQUADRON.

According to the originally published programme of welcome to the British Squadron the officers were all to have been entertained at a Japanese dinner in the Maple Club on the 12th instant, but it appears that this plan was altered, for Admiral Noel and his principal officers dined at the Naval Club by invitation of Admiral Yamamoto. Sir Claude MacDonald was present and His Imperial Highness Prince Arisugawa was the principal guest on the Japanese side. Marquises Ito and Yamagata, Count Katsura and many other notables attended. About 110 Japanese and 58 Englishmen constituted the party. Prince Arisugawa proposed the health of King Edward and Sir Claude MacDonald proposed that of the Mikado.

Admiral Yamamoto, in proposing the health of Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, expressed regret that as the war with Russia had been at its height when the Admiral reached the station, no opportunities had offered for forming with him and his officers the intimate acquaintance which the Japanese people desired. Thus the meeting this evening was particularly happy, above all in view of the fact that the two nations were now united by the bonds of a firm alliance. It was needless to say that Great Britain is the first naval Power in the world, but he desired to note that whatever development the Japanese Navy had made was largely due to English instruction and example. He himself had been the pupil of a British naval officer. Referring to the former alliance His Excellency said that there could be no doubt about the highly beneficial part it had played in restricting the limits of the war and thus preserving the general peace. The British Government and the British squadron had observed strict neutrality throughout the war, but the British people had shown many marks of sympathy with the Japanese which the latter would long hold in grateful recollection. The new alliance, like the old, had no object but to guarantee the preservation of peace. In giving effect to it what was essential was not merely united action on the part of the allies' fleets should occasion arise, but constant and daily friendship between the two nations. The Minister concluded by proposing the health of the British Navy and of Admiral Noel.

Sir Gerard Noel in replying said that his business was fighting not talking and that he feared his audience would find him a poor speaker. (A fear, says the Kokumin, which was little justified by the event). Still he could not but deem it a great honour to be invited to address such a distinguished assembly. It was a source of the greatest satisfaction and pleasure to the British Navy to think that the latter had contributed in any way to the growth of such a Navy as Japan possessed. Among the officers who had taken earnest part in instructing Japanese naval students several were still alive, a fact which showed with what extraordinarily rapid studies the Japanese Navy had grown to its present fine stature. He could not too warmly express his admiration of such an achievement. Alliances were not necessarily powerful instruments. History furnished examples of their impotence, as in the case of the Franco-Spanish alliance. But when the Japanese and the British navies ranged up together as allies, there could be no doubt about their world-power. He concluded by expressing on behalf of himself and his officers a sincere sense of the honour done them that evening.

Sir Claude MacDonald, who was lustily cheered, said that he had often heard from his friends the Minister and the Vice-Minister of the Navy how much they appreciated the aid their Navy had received in its career of development both materially and theoretically from the British Navy. It was indeed astounding to observe what heights of efficiency the Japanese Army and Navy had reached, but they must never forget that without the support of the nation the most perfect warlike organizations would be inefficient. Behind "the man behind the gun" stood the people, whose loyal support was absolutely indispensable. Only a degree less important were a country's relations with foreign Powers. During the siege of Peking he had had opportunities of personally observing what kind of stuff the Japanese people were made of, and on returning to England he was able to say that the British nation would gain incalculably by allying itself with such a nation. The blockade of Port Arthur had again demonstrated what kind of men the Japanese are—men who do not hesitate to march up to the "gates of hell" for the sake of their country. The whole world had looked on in admiring surprise. To have formed an alliance with such a nation was not merely for England's benefit but for the benefit of the world. He begged their pardon if he did not speak of the Navy but rather asked them to drink the health of the people behind the Navy. "Banzai" for the Japanese Nation.

This banquet took away many of the guests who were to have been entertained at the Maple Club. The Captain of the Diadem and 57 officers assembled at the latter, and were received by Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Mayor of Tokyo. On the following evening (13th) Admiral Noel and a much larger party of officers partook of the City's hospitality at the Maple Club. So far as the general programme of welcome was concerned the events on the 13th were a replica of those on the 12th, but Admiral Noel and his chief officers were received in audience by the Emperor and had the honour of luncheon with this Majesty. Several decorations were bestowed by the Emperor. The Admiral is now the guest of the British Legation, but from the 15th instant he proceeds to the Shiba Detached Palace and becomes the guest of the Navy.

We are requested by Mr. J. C. Hall, British Consul-General in Yokohama, to state that any residents of Yokohama who may desire to visit the ships of the British squadron now in port, will be welcome to do so any afternoon between 2 and 5 o'clock.

The festivities in Tokyo on the 13th inst. were a replica of those on the 12th, except that Admiral Noel and his staff were present at the evening entertainment in the Maple Club, and that an audience and luncheon took place at the Palace. To correct the comparatively vacant aspect which the Hibiya Park presented on the 12th instant, the Municipal authorities imported a crowd of geisha to officiate at the refreshment booths on the 13th, and these fair Ganymedes contributed so much to the thirst of the blue-jackets that some scenes very far from edifying were witnessed. The Tokyo Municipality is not considered to have acquitted itself very wisely in its management of this affair. We say nothing of the fact that no invitations were issued to the British residents of Tokyo, though considering the nature of the occasion the omission was not in the best taste. But the leading Japanese residents were omitted also. With the exception of the officials of the Municipality, a comparatively small and not very distinguished body of men, there was no one to receive the visitors, and this discrimination robbed the demonstration of much of its import. The prominent citizens of the capital have determined, therefore, to organize an independent entertainment, the date of which is not yet fixed.

At the audience in the Palace on the 13th instant, General Burnett and the other British military attachés were present. The Emperor conferred on General Burnett the First-Class order of the Sacred Treasure; and various other Orders were given to a number of officers. Colonel Hume, R.A., the popular Attaché of the British Legation, received the Third Class Order of the Sacred Treasure.

As an illustration of the lackadaisical manner in which the Tokyo Municipality fulfilled its responsibilities with reference to its receptions to British sailors in Tokyo it may be mentioned that an invitation to a foreigner was posted in Tokyo on the 14th—one day after the last day of the fetes—and delivered in Yokohama five days after it should have been received. Was this the only one?

The officers and men of the British Squadron on this station have subscribed the handsome sum of 3,521 yen to the fund for the relief of the families of those that perished in the Mikasa disaster. The money was handed to Admiral Yamamoto, Minister of State for the Navy, by Sir Claude MacDonald on the 14th instant.

Count Okuma has thrown open his garden to Admiral Sir Gerard Noel and the Officers of the British Squadron for the 16th and 17th instant. The Count is represented as having said that this Alliance is a union of Japanese bushido and English gentlemanhood. The duty and pleasure of welcoming the British officers, ought not to be left entirely to official hands which are necessarily disfigured by more or less of cold formality. Private individuals must take their part, so Count Okuma does what in him lies. He has no special entertainment to offer, and his garden offers no exceptional attractions, especially as it has not yet donned its autumnal tints and chrysanthemums are not in bloom. But his guests will understand that everything is in the intention and will make allowances for shortcomings.

That is very Japanese, and after all we know no country more refined than that of this nation.

Presumably the visit of the officers to Count Okuma's garden will be late in the afternoon of the 16th, unless indeed it be postponed until the 17th, for on the former day Admiral Noel and the officers were invited by the Minister of War to luncheon in the Arsenal Park, and a great part of the afternoon was devoted to various exhibitions of fencing, jujitsu, etc.

On the 18th instant the Medical Staff of the Army will entertain the Admiral and his officers at the Kagetsu-no in Mukojima.

On the 21st Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda give a garden party in honour of the visitors at their residence in the Shirokane suburb, and that evening the Business Men of Tokyo will entertain the officers and the leading British residents of Tokyo and Yokohama in the Kabukiza.

General Terauchi's garden party to the officers of the British Squadron on the 16th instant was pronounced a signal success. General Burnett and the military attachés were among the guests. General Terauchi welcomed the officers of the Squadron and those of the Army in warm terms, and Admiral Noel and General Burnett replied. The Admiral said that he had from the first reposed entire confidence in the ability of the Japanese Fleet to hold its own, and the signal character of its successes had more than verified his forecast. As for the Army, he had always known that the Japanese were good fighters and that Japan had kept fully abreast of the march of military science, but nevertheless what the Japanese Army had accomplished must be called astounding. At the investment of Port Arthur, at the great battle of Liaoyang, at the Mukden engagement, the Japanese had shown themselves the finest troops in the world. General Burnett on his own account and on account of the British officers who had been attached to the Army, returned sincere thanks for the courtesy of which they were now the recipients. It was of a piece with the kindly treatment they had always received at Japanese hands; treatment which would always remain with them a delightful memory. He could not find words to fully convey his sense of the honour he felt in having been privileged to accompany into the field an Army which not only showed bravery and competence of the very highest type, but also gave to the whole world a lesson in the true meaning of the word patriotism, namely, that sentiment which nerves a man to make any sacrifice of treasure or life in return for the privilege of his national birthright. For the sake of His Majesty the Emperor's might and for the sake of the security of the Empire, he trusted that now, when an honorable peace had been restored, these high qualities of unflinching endurance and patient courage which the Japanese Army had displayed so conspicuously in the field, would never become impaired. He concluded by proposing the health of the Japanese Army, now the comrades of the British forces. This speech created a great impression.

The Tokyo Municipality has made another blunder. Count Okuma had been asked by the Municipality to throw open his garden and he had gladly consented, making all the necessary arrangements. But no step was taken by the City Authorities to convey any invitation to Admiral Noel and his officers, the result of course being that Count Okuma's garden waited in vain for visitors. The omission was repaired on the 17th instant, and in one sense the accident proved an advantage, for the weather on the 17th was much more favourable than that on the 16th. Five British destroyers and a torpedo depot-ship entered Nagasaki on the 13th and received an enthusiastic welcome.

The Ball at the British Legation, which took place on the 16th instant, was undoubtedly the most brilliant ever held at the British Legation in Tokyo. The rooms were decorated with admirable taste, the arrangements were all unexceptional, and Sir Claude and Lady MacDonald showed themselves inimitable as host and hostess. Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Arisugawa, Princess Higashii-Fushimi and Princess Nashimoto arrived at about 10 o'clock. By that time some four hundred of the most distinguished Japanese and of the leading British residents of Tokyo and Yokohama had assembled to do honour to Admiral Noel and the officers of the British Squadron. In the opening quadrille Sir Claude MacDonald led out Princess Arisugawa and Sir Gerard Noel Princess Nashimoto. Dancing was kept up with vigour until one o'clock when the naval officers had to leave by special train for Yokohama.

On the 17th instant Admiral Noel and the officers of the British Squadron attended a garden party at the Waseda residence of Count Okuma. The day was very beautiful and the garden looked particularly lovely. Count Okuma, though indisposed, welcomed his guests, and an interesting conversation took place, Admiral Noel recounting some of his experiences in the sixties on the occasion of his first visit to Japan. Count Okuma alluded to Sir Claude MacDonald's recent speech eulogising the people who stood behind the troops. He said that the Minister's remarks had been much appreciated not only by the two services but also by the nation at large. The party then visited the conservatories and the garden, finally reaching the refreshment marquees, where Count Okuma's habitual profusion of hospitality was displayed. Admiral Noel, the British Minister and their party were welcomed as they passed through the Waseda district by the local officials and a crowd of the inhabitants, who also gave a hearty send-off to the visitors.

The Minister President of State gave a banquet to Admiral Noel and General Burnett on the 17th instant. Sir Claude MacDonald proposed the health of the Emperor in a graceful speech and Count Katsura proposed that of Admiral Noel, who, in reply, said that Japan's signal successes in modern times might be partly attributed to the fact that she had grafted a new civilization on the stock of her own old civilization and there had thus been a combination of most vigorous growth. He complimented the Army and Navy on their wonderful achievements, which had excited the admiration of the whole world.

From 9 o'clock a conversation was held and was attended by a great number of naval and military officers. Among the guests were the Minister of State for the Navy, the Minister of State for War, Admiral Viscount Ito, General Murata and other prominent personages.

The Business Men of Tokyo are to entertain Admiral and Lady Noel and the officers of the British Squadron at the Kabukiza, Tokyo, on the evening of the 21st. There will be theatrical performances and probably dances, with supper by way of interlude, and a special train, leaving Shimabashi at mid-night will carry home the naval officers and the Yokohama guests. The Committee representing the hosts consists of Baron Shibusawa, Mr. Kondo Rempai and Mr. Sonoda Kokichi. At 8 o'clock the performance begins and it is expected to conclude about half past eleven.

Six destroyers belonging to the British squadron in Asiatic waters arrived at Nagasaki on October 13th from Weihaiwei. The Mayor and members of the Nagasaki City Assembly paid a visit to the senior ship. The citizens gave a garden party on Monday and entertained the officers and men of the destroyers. A telegram says they will stay there till the arrival of the fleet on the way from Yokohama.

Mr. K. Yamamura, the photographer of Benten-dori, has made up a very artistic souvenir of the visit of the British Far Eastern squadron to Yokohama on October 11th. It consists of a dozen collotype plates beginning with pictures of the principal ships of the squadron, then giving views of the landing at the hatoba of the men and the officers, with Admiral Noel in a carriage on his way to the cricket ground; sights at the cricket ground, including one representing the Anglo-Japanese alliance—a Japanese bluejacket between two British tars—; a view of the geisha-dancing, etc. Altogether this souvenir should appeal to the squadron as just the sort of thing most appropriate to send to the home-land.

DEPARTURE OF MISS ROOSEVELT AND MR. HARRIMAN.

Mr. Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, entertained Mr. Harriman at lunch in the Imperial Hotel on the 11th instant. In the evening Mr. Harriman and his party dined at the United States Legation where a brilliant reception was given in their honour from 9 p.m.

Mr. Harriman, in reply to the toast of his health proposed by Mr. Matsuo at the above luncheon, expressed the hope that Japanese merchants and manufacturers would follow the example set by the Army and Navy of their country, and would emulate the high qualities which had shed such lustre upon Japan's arms. The speech was somewhat of a didactic character, if it be rightly reported in Japanese journals.

Referring at the American Legation to the disturbance on the 5th instant of which he had been an eye-witness, Mr. Harriman made light of the matter, and observed that they were well acquainted with mob law in the United States. The rapidity with which the disturbance had been quelled showed what an order-loving people the Japanese are.

In the Nichi Nichi Shinbun we find it stated that Mr. Griscom has expressed himself much gratified to see that the best and most influential class of Americans are now beginning to visit Japan in increasing numbers.

Mr. Harriman left Tokyo on the afternoon of the 12th. Marquis Ito, Count Inouye, Count Katsura, Mr. Chinda and the United States Minister and Mrs. Griscom were at the station to speed the parting guests.

Miss Alice Roosevelt and Mr. E. Harriman left Yokohama on the afternoon of Oct. 13th by the Siberia for San Francisco. Miss Roosevelt left the English Hatoba at 2 p.m. by the Oriental Palace Hotel steam-launch, together with Madame Nagasaki, the wife of the Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies, Count and Countess Terajima, Madame Sufu and the Governor of this prefecture, etc., whom she had entertained at noon at the hotel. Many Japanese ladies representing the Ladies' Patriotic Society and other public bodies, and leading citizens assembled at the hatoba to wish the departing visitor bon voyage. When Miss Roosevelt reached the Siberia, day fire-works were sent up from the compound of the Yokohama Customs and from a steam launch which carried prominent members of the American Friends Society. This boat was fully dressed and hoisted a flag with the initials "A. F. S."—in characters of white on a red ground. Baskets of most beautiful flowers, presented to Miss Roosevelt by American and Japanese friends, filled the saloon of the steamer. About 2.30 p.m. Mr. Harriman came on board the Siberia by the Pacific Mail Steamship Co's tender, being escorted by his American friends and many Japanese traders. On this occasion also bombs were sent up from the Customs compound. On board the Siberia many foreigners and Japanese crowded to see Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Harriman off. By the Japanese, enthusiastic hansai were shouted and taken up by many foreigners, with best wishes for the safe voyage of the distinguished passengers. The Siberia started at 3.30 p.m., when more fire-works were again let off. The steam launches with the members of the American Friends Society escorted the Siberia until the latter was off Hommoku.

Mrs. Takahira, wife of Mr. Takahira, Japanese Minister in Washington, paid a visit to Miss Alice Roosevelt at the Oriental Palace Hotel, Yokohama, on Oct. 11th, to say bon voyage.

NOTES ON THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Yamaza has given to the Nippon an interesting account of the progress of the peace conference. We reproduce the gist of it from the day when the discussion really commenced, namely, the day after M. Witte had examined Japan's terms.

12th September.—The first Article was taken, namely, that relating to Japan's freedom of action in Korea. The Russian Plenipotentiaries listened to the arguments advanced in support of Japan's claims, but put forward and obstinately maintained some conditions which Mr. Yamaza does not define. Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira rejected them most positively, and the Russians abandoning them, confined themselves to asking that the Russian State and the Russian people should receive most-favoured-nation treatment. Baron Komura was willing to concede this so far as the Russian people were concerned, but declined in the case of the Russian State. This dispute lasted until the time of the Conference's rising and remained unsettled, but after their return to their hotel the Russian Plenipotentiaries sent word that they accepted Japanese proposals.

14th (one day's interval).—On this day the withdrawal of the Japanese troops from Manchuria (Art. II.) and the withdrawal of the Russian troops (Art. III.) were taken. This included the questions of mining privileges in Kirin province and of enterprises at Mukden, both of which problems evoked vehement protests from the Russians, but finally Japan's terms were conceded on the whole.

15th.—On this day Arts. IV. V. and VI. came up for discussion. Art. IV. related to the open door in Manchuria. This was settled without any special difficulty. But Art. V., the cession of Saghalien, proved the occasion of a strong discussion. The Russian Plenipotentiaries insisted that to cede territory was demanded only of a conquered Power and Russia was not yet conquered. Her armies stood intact in the field and she was prepared to continue the war. Moreover the island of Saghalien was the gate of the Maritime Province, and further any cession of territory would be an obstacle to the permanent peace of the two empires. The Japanese replied by a statement of the historical facts during the past 250 years, and claimed that this could not be called a cession of territory since it was really a restoration. No sign of yielding was shown by the Russians, and after a controversy of some hours it was seen that an agreement could not then be reached, so the Article was deferred for subsequent consideration. Thereafter Art. VI. was taken. This related to the lease of Liaotung. It had been expected that the Russians would here raise keen objections. Liaotung represented to them the realization of their perennial policy of obtaining an ice-free port, and moreover they had spent immense sums on Dalny and Port Arthur. It seemed that they must struggle much more vehemently against the surrender of all this than they had struggled against the cession of Saghalien. But they had evidently made up their minds that on this point surrender was inevitable, Liaotung being in Japanese possession, having been won by the sacrifice of thousands of Japanese lives, and having already been unjustly wrested from Japan ten years previously. They offered few objections except on points of procedure, and the article was disposed of without much discussion.

16th.—Article VII., the surrender of the Manchurian Railway, and Article VIII., relating to restrictions upon Russia's use of the portion of the line remaining to her, were the theme of discussion on this day. The Russians contended stoutly that the Manchurian Railway belonged to a private company which had received the concession from the Governments of China and Russia. It was therefore impossible that the road could be ceded direct to Japan. Moreover, whatever might be said about such portions of the line as were already in Japanese hands, no proposal could be justly entertained as to portions not yet so held. After much dispute it was finally agreed, however, that the section of the line south of Changchun should be handed over to Japan. The condition that the railway should not be used for purposes of military transport was accepted without much discussion.

17th.—On this day the great battle commenced. Art. IX. stood first on the list, namely, the Article relating to an indemnity. The same day's programme included Art. X, namely, the surrender of interned ships; and Art. XI. relating to the limitation of Russia's naval forces in the Far East. The Russian Plenipotentiaries insisted as to the indemnity that their country was not conquered; that her armies still held their ground; that indemnities were never paid except when the existence of the payer was threatened; that even after the fall of Sevastopol there was no talk of indemnity; that to establish a title to an indemnity the Japanese armies would have to force their way to St. Petersburg, and that it would be far more to Russia's advantage to continue the war than to be mulcted in the cost of continuing it at this stage. Concerning the surrender of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval strength, their argument was simply that a great State like Russia could not possibly consent to such humiliating demands. The discussion lasted from morning until evening without any prospect of success, and was continued throughout the 19th, the 23rd and the 26th. Argument after argument was adduced on each side and contention after contention was advanced. The only substantial result of this interval's work was that on the 18th the article relating to fishing privileges in northern seas was decided in Japan's favour. M. Witte now submitted a compromise and sought the consent of the St. Petersburg Government, but the Tsar telegraphed his total dissent from all these Articles, and conveyed to the Plenipotentiaries an emphatic order to stand firm. (Mr. Yamaza does not mention the nature of this compromise, but there can be little doubt that it was the repurchase of the northern part of Saghalien for a sum of 1,200 millions of yen. There appears to prevail in Japan a conviction that the Tsar's obduracy in this matter, his refusal to accept the compromise suggested by his own Plenipotentiaries, was prompted by the Kaiser at the meeting on board the Hohenzollern.—Ed. J.M.) The President of the United States frequently urged the Tsar to yield, but his counsels produced no effect. Finally M. Witte abandoned all hope of a settlement. In effect, he gave up the case, with an expression of bitter regret that these long and patient efforts had borne no fruit. Japan had then to choose between two courses: either to make a large concession or to continue the war at an immense cost of life and treasure, and without getting any nearer to an indemnity. There could be no doubt which plan would conduce more to Japan's best interests, and which plan was more in accord with the dictates of humanity. The great concession was made, and on the 29th of September peace was restored.

Mr. Yamaza concluded by referring to the rumour circulated confidently by American journals and apparently credited in some circles in Japan, the rumour that Baron Kaneko had acted over the heads of the Plenipotentiaries as a medium of communication between the President and the elder statesmen in Japan. There is not, said Mr. Yamaza, the smallest scintilla of truth in this story. It is a libel on the President, on the Japanese Government, on the Plenipotentiaries, on the Elder Statesmen and on Baron Kaneko.

Another misunderstanding is corrected by Mr. Yamaza, namely, the rumour that the Japanese Government failed to convey its thanks to President Roosevelt, and that Baron Komura was thus considerably embarrassed. The fact is that the cable between Shanghai and Nagasaki was interrupted at that moment, and the telegram suffered delay in transmission. President Roosevelt was entirely cognizant of the facts.

It is now expected that the Treaty of Peace will be ratified before the return of Baron Komura, which event is expected about the 15th or 16th. Japanese journals state that the Emperor will then summon to Tokyo Marquis Oyama and Admiral Togo, and will receive from them a report of the campaigns on shore and at sea. General Baron Kodama will remain in Manchuria in chief command, directing the operations of withdrawing the troops. It is expected that the Field-Marshal and the Admiral will make a triumphant entry into the capital on the occasion of their summons by the Sovereign.

An alleged member of the Peace Commission is quoted by the Asahi Shinbun in explanation of the Article relating to the free navigation of the Straits of Soya and Tartary. This explanation coincides, in the main, with that long ago suggested in our own columns. The strait of Tartary is a closed water, being only 3 miles wide and being bounded on the east and the west by Russian territory. Consequently, when Russia pledges herself not to "take any military measures which may impede the navigation" of that strait, she binds herself in effect not to construct fortifications on either coast. But the Strait of La Perouse is 25 miles across, and consequently the Power in possession of its northern and southern shores has no right to take such military measures as would obstruct its free passage; that is to say, no right under existing international law. "Military measures" in this context would of course include the laying of mines. International law, however, is pretty sure to be soon altered in this respect. The obsolete estimate of an old smooth-bore cannon's range will cease to be the boundary of territorial authority. In that event the Strait of La Perouse might cease to be an open passage and Japan might have the right to close it by means of mines. It is against such a conjuncture that the 9th Article of the Treaty provides. So, at least, we understand the explanation printed by the Asahi Shinbun, but we confess to some remaining obscurity.

Our readers are aware that some surprise has been expressed inasmuch as the Peace Treaty contains no direct reference to a Changchun-Kirin line, though the Prime Minister was understood to have stated that if such a line were built, it had been agreed that the concession should go to Japan. We were present when the Prime Minister made the statement, and we noted distinctly that he referred to the minutes of the proceedings, not to the Treaty itself. That is the explanation now offered. Indeed it is plain that such a matter could scarcely have been embodied in the Treaty.

ADMIRAL TOGO AND THE FLEET.

On the 13th instant Admiral Togo's flagship, the Shikishima, entered Ise Bay, accompanied by the Fuji and the Asahi, and anchored 4 miles from the shore. The great commander and his officers and men received a splendid reception. Admiral Togo, in replying to an address of welcome from the Governor and the officials who proceeded on board, said that the successes won by the Navy had been due to providential assistance in the first place, and in the second to the valour and ability of the officers and men under his command. It grieved him excessively to hear people speak of "Togo," "Togo," as though the credit rested with him.

On the afternoon of the same day Admiral Kamimura's squadron arrived, the Izumo flying the Admiral's pennant. Ise is said to have presented a scene of the greatest excitement and animation. It was arranged that on the 16th the officers of the two squadrons should be entertained in the public park and that presents of fish and wine should be sent to the men.

Admiral Togo's visit to Ise is understood to have been prompted by a desire to worship at the Shrines of Ise as the first act of triumph. It is pointed out that this is in accord with the opening words of the Admiral's report when announcing the victory in the Sea of Japan (Tenryu to shinto ni yotte: By the help of heaven and providence), and with the exordium of the Emperor's message to the Fleet (Nanjinra no churetsu ni yotte soso no shinrei ni kotoaru zo uru zo yorokobu: It pleases Me that by your loyalty and valour I am enabled to stand up before the spirits of my ancestors). At the Ise shrines the spirits of the Imperial Ancestors are worshipped, and there the Admiral and his officers bow their heads in thankfulness for the victories heaven vouchsafed to their country's arms. One can well imagine that to a quiet, self-effacing man like Togo, when on his way to worship at the shrines, there must have been something incongruous and painful in the intrusion of any public homage to his own prowess.

The expectation is that the Admiral will leave Ise on the 17th and reach Yokosuka on the 18th or 19th. He will assemble his ships in Tokyo Bay on the 22nd, and the grand review will take place on the 23rd, or on the 25th should the weather on the former day be unpropitious. Tsurumi Bay will be, it is said, the central point of the review, and the northern and southern limits will be Kawasaki and Kanagawa respectively. The expectation is that the captured vessels will form part of the assemblage and that some 200 ships in all will parade. After the ceremony the organization of the united fleet (Rengo Kantai) will be dissolved, and the squadrons will return to their respective duties.

A ceremony of unexampled magnitude—unexampled so far as Japan is concerned—will be organized by way of triumphal reception to the Navy. The 23rd is confidently spoken of in some quarters as the fixed date, but concerning that it is not yet possible to speak certainly. Nothing is known except that the authorities have very liberal ideas on the subject. Only in the case of the Navy is such a demonstration possible. The troops must return piecemeal to their respective divisional head-quarters. Even the Guards and the First Division, which belong to Tokyo and which might be supposed to be available as the joint recipients of an ovation, will arrive in the capital not only separately from the divisional point of view, but also in fragmentary sections of divisions. There may be something in the nature of a grand review and a fete after these troops have all assembled in the capital, but there can not be any demonstration on account of the Army as a whole. It is much to be regretted, and the only hope is that the localities constituting the head-quarters of the several divisions will spare no pains to show the nation's appreciation of the splendid services rendered by these gallant men. The Navy, however, can come in its entirety to Tokyo Bay, and there will thus be a possibility of organizing a really effective demonstration. Yokohama will probably be the best place for observing the movements of the ships. The report that the Emperor would embark on the Asahi for that purpose is now contradicted, and it is said that His Majesty will make use of the steam-yacht Hatsukase, presented to him some years ago by the Mitsubishi Firm. She is now being prepared at Yokosuka, and will presently be sent round to Yokohama where His Majesty is to embark.

Preparations are in progress to erect a triumphal arch opposite the Shimbashi station. The dimensions of the structure are given as 60 feet high to the highest point of the crest, 58 feet wide and 20 feet deep. The work has been undertaken by the Shintizu-gunji at a price of 4,000 yen.

Admiral Kataoka's Squadron has left Awamori for Ise and Admiral Dewa's Squadron reached the latter place on the 14th. Thus in a very short time the whole of the ships which have been engaged in the war will be assembled in Ise Bay. There are four squadrons, commanded in their numerical order by Admiral Togo, Vice-Admiral Kamimura, Vice-Admiral Kataoka and Vice-Admiral Dewa. It is stated that Admiral Kataoka will call at Kobe en route for the rendezvous.

It is stated that permission to witness the impending naval review from boats will be granted to all relatives of those killed in the fighting at sea, within limits of age from 10 to 60 years. The permission will apply to the families of men killed in the China-Japan war also. But it can not be extended to the families of soldiers also, as the number would then become quite unmanageable. All persons having the necessary qualification and desiring to attend, must be at the appointed places before the Emperor reaches Yokohama, and it may well be expected that the crowding and inconvenience will be very great. Tokyo newspapers remark that there might be some sense in viewing the affair from the sea if no other place were available, but the fact is that a much better sight can be obtained from the shore without any confusion or danger. The best positions will be elevated points from the neighbourhood of Honmoku to Tsurumi, but in truth any vantage ground along the coast will serve.

It is stated that the naval review will be conducted in all respects as though the ships were actually in action, the idea being that His Majesty the Emperor will inspect the vessels on the supposition of their victorious return from the war. There will be no pro-sion of special viands, those present by invitation being furnished merely with nigiri meshi. Admiral Togo will arrive in Tokyo Bay on the 21st or 22nd, but as he has to proceed to the Palace to report to the Emperor, it will be impossible for him to make any circuit of the streets in accordance with the desire of the citizens. On the day after the review, however,—namely, the 21st—he will visit the capital, accompanied by all the commanding officers of squadrons and ships. He will then make whatever progress through the streets the citizens may desire.

Admiral Togo and his staff arrived at Yamada on the 17th instant, and in accordance with Imperial instructions these officers together with two thousand seamen from the Fleet, proceeded to the Shrines of Ise on the 18th instant and worshipped there. At Yamada they had a most enthusiastic reception.

ENGLISH OPINION ON THE RIOTS.

The Times, writing editorially when the first news of the riots reached it, said:—

We greatly regret to record that the rioting which began in Tokio on Tuesday continued intermittently during the next forty-eight hours, and yesterday the Japanese Government felt compelled to place the capital under martial law. There is a bitter irony in the contrast between the splendid self-possession manifested by the Japanese through eighteen months of strenuous warfare and the unreasoning turbulence of the demonstrations against an unpopular peace. Even if we are to assume that these lamentable exhibitions of ungovernable passion are due to a total misapprehension of the terms upon which peace has been concluded, it is none the less a deep disappointment to all admirers of Japan that the popular displeasure should have been manifested in a fashion which must inevitably detract from the reputation for dignified self-restraint to which she has won so good a title. The terms of peace have not yet been officially published in Tokio, and it is more than probable that the general public very imperfectly realize the extent to which Japan has succeeded in asserting all the principles, and securing all the objects, for which she originally went to war. It is certain that they can have very little appreciation of the moral advantages which accrue to Japan in consequence of the magnanimous and statesmanlike decision of her Government to refrain from prosecuting a war in which she had every prospect of continuous military success. They are too near the centre to be able to see things in their proper focus, and imaginary blemishes in the treaty bulk more largely in their vision than the solid advantages which result from its timely conclusion. * * * Happily, it seems that the rioting has been confined to irresponsible persons, and that men of weight, such as the Marquis Saionji, the leader of the principal political party, and the heads of the business community, are adopting a moderate attitude towards the peace terms. They have the wisdom to see that, if Japan surrenders some of her hopes, she obtains counterbalancing advantages of immediate importance, and that it is better to devote the energy of the nation to the development of its industries, rather than to an attempt to wring from Russia the cost of the war. For the credit of Japan, it is to be hoped that every effort will be made to inspire the mass of the people with similar ideas. The repetition of scenes such as those which have been enacted in Tokio during the last three days will do an amount of harm out of all proportion to their actual importance. Japan has numberless enemies, who will rejoice to see her deliver herself into their hands, and will preach everywhere that the true inwardness of the Japanese character has at last been disclosed. She has made a triumphant entry among the nations, but the ground beneath her is slippery, and she must take heed to her going.

The Times certainly can not be accused of writing in an unfriendly spirit. Its warning expresses the sentiment animating the best and most moderate classes of Englishmen. Some of the Tokyo newspapers may well lay to heart the words of the great London journal, for it altogether beyond doubt that had the leading organs of public opinion in the metropolis treated this question with anything like wisdom and insight, rioting would never have taken place.

IMPERIAL AND OTHER MESSAGES ON THE PEACE.

The following Imperial message was issued to the nation on Monday:—

We have always deemed it a fundamental principle of Our international policy to maintain peace in the East and to assure the security of Our Empire, and the promotion of these high objects has therefore been Our constant aim. But last year for reasons dictated by the necessities of self-preservation We were unfortunately forced into hostilities with Russia. Since the war began Our Army and Navy have made adequate provision for home defence and for military preparations within the Empire itself and have withstood hardships of all kinds in their campaigns abroad, and have thus achieved glorious success. Our civil officials have in concord with Our Diet diligently performed their duties in furtherance of Our will. All measures for the prosecution of the war and for the administration of domestic and foreign affairs have been properly taken as the exigencies of the situation demanded. Our people, frugal and prudent, have cheerfully borne the heavy burden of national expenditure and have generously contributed to the war funds, thus assisting, as with one will, in advancing the prestige and maintaining the dignity of the State. The result is due in large measure to the Benign Spirits of Our Ancestors, as well as to the devotion to duty of our civil and military officials and the self-denying patriotism of all Our people. After twenty months of war the position of the Empire has been strengthened, and the interests of the country have been advanced, and inasmuch as We have never wavered in Our desire for the maintenance of peace, it is contrary to Our will that hostilities should be protracted and Our people should be unnecessarily subjected to the horrors of war.

When the President of the United States, in the interests of peace and humanity, suggested that the Governments of Japan and Russia should arrange terms of peace, fully appreciating his kindness and good will, We accepted his suggestion and at the proper moment appointed Plenipotentiaries to confer with those of Russia. The Plenipotentiaries of the two countries having met and conferred frequently, the Russian Plenipotentiaries have agreed to the proposals of Our Plenipotentiaries which were essential having in view the objects of the war and the maintenance of peace in the East, thus manifesting the sincerity of their desire for peace. We have examined the terms agreed to by the Plenipotentiaries, and having found them to be in entire conformity with Our will We have accepted and ratified them. Peace and glory having thus been secured We are happy to invoke the blessing of the Benign Spirits of Our Ancestors and to be able to bequeath the fruits of these great deeds to Our posterity. It is Our earnest desire to share the glory with Our people and long to enjoy the blessings of peace with all nations. Russia is again the friend of Japan and we sincerely desire that the relations of good neighbourhood now reestablished shall become both intimate and cordial.

In this age when there is no delay in the World's progress there should be no cessation of effort to improve the administration of the Nation's affairs, both internal and external. While military efficiency should be maintained in full vigour even in time of peace, earnest endeavour should be made to attain success in peaceful pursuits, so that, in equal measure with the power, the prosperity of the country may be maintained and its permanent progress insured. We strongly admonish Our subjects against manifestations of vain-glorious pride, and command them to attend to their lawful avocations and to do all that lies in their power to strengthen the Empire.

On the 16th instant at 4.30 p.m. the Emperor received Baron Komura and addressed to him the following Message:—

"In accordance with the suggestion of the President of the United States, I appointed you Plenipotentiary and directed you to proceed to America there to meet the Envoys of Russia and undertake the duty of concluding peace. In careful conformity with the task and with due regard for the situation, you arranged terms that conform with My wishes, thus well maintaining the strong position of the Empire and accomplishing the objects of the war. I earnestly appreciate your labours and strongly approve them."

His Majesty also addressed the following message to the Army and Navy:—

"I address the well-loved troops of the Empire's Army and Navy:

"I formerly communicated to you the five precepts that constitute the morale of a warrior, and at the conclusion of the War of 1894-5, being deeply solicitous about the future, I again issued to you certain instructions.

During the past ten years My Army and Navy, in conformity with the progress of the times, made large advances, and from the commencement of the war which unhappily broke out with Russia last year, you discharged your duties with unanimity and zeal; your plans were excellent, you seized opportunity with skill; you won unprecedented victories on sea and on shore; you extended the prestige of the Empire throughout the world, and you thus satisfied My desires.

By your loyalty, faithfulness and valour I have achieved the purposes of the war, and have been enabled to discharge the duties devolving on Me towards the Divine Ancestors and towards my people. I rejoice that such has been the case, but I deeply grieve for those whose who fell in battle, who perished of disease, and who were disabled by wounds.

I have now made peace with Russia. But in proportion as the fame of My troops has added to the honour of the Empire your duties have grown heavier, and the future welfare of the country will depend largely on your exertions. Remember My desire, and whether you remain with the colours or return to your native places, never lose sight of My instructions, and keeping before you the duties that devolve on you as your Sovereign's right arm, strive ever harder to be worthy of your country."

The following is the Rescript of Ratification:—

I, Mutsuhito, who by the grace of Heaven and in the perpetual succession of the Imperial Line, sit upon the Throne of Japan, hereby declare:—

Having carefully examined the various clauses of the Peace Treaty signed on the 5th day of the 9th month of the 38th year of Meiji at Portsmouth in the United States by the Plenipotentiaries of this Empire and those of Russia, I find them in full accord with My wishes and in no respect defective. Therefore I ratify the said Treaty.

(Signed)

At the Palace in Tokyo on the 14th day of the 10th month of the 38th year of Meiji, being the 2565th year from the coronation of Jimmu Tenna.

It is the custom in this country to compose Imperial Rescripts in language so classical that only to accomplished scholars is their full import clear. That is essentially true of the gracious expression of approval and exhortation which the Sovereign has conveyed to the Army and Navy. An interpreter is required between the Throne and the soldiers and sailors. General Tera-uchi, Minister of War, has consequently addressed the Army in the following sense:—

"The war you have just fought has no precedent for magnitude in the history of our country. In spite of the enemy's great superiority of force you, never fought without winning, and the splendid results you have achieved, though primarily due to the virtues of the Imperial Commander-in-Chief, owe much to the loyalty, bravery and ability of officers, non-commissioned officers and men. His Majesty, persuaded that to continue the fight for a longer period would not be for the benefit of the State, has sheathed the sword in the interests of humanity and civilization, and the moment has come for the army to return triumphant from its protracted and severe labours in the field.

"His Majesty, of his great Benevolence, is deeply grieved on account of those that fell in the war, and has issued orders that, in accordance with law, the families of those that have died or been maimed should be succoured and that steps should be taken to investigate the cases of the survivors who distinguished themselves.

"Making war and concluding peace are among the prerogatives of the Crown, and it is for soldiers simply to comply with His Majesty's instructions. Anything like discussion, however slight, as to the propriety or impropriety of peace or war would be entirely inconsistent with the position of a soldier and could not be tolerated for a moment by discipline. There are, it is true, certain persons who harbour discontent about the present peace, but military men who have the honour to be known as the Sovereign's right arm will firmly hold to their duty, never lending an ear to such discussions. The war is now over. The fame of our troops is noised abroad throughout the world. Those of you who remain with the colours will discharge your functions with greater diligence than ever; those who are released and who return to their homes will be modest, and by strenuously prosecuting their various tasks will take care that the fame they have won is not impaired. Valiant and loyal in the field, they will be sincere and diligent as private citizens. Nay more, as the country's fortunes develop, the future may bring vicissitudes calling once more for the active service of those now released. Therefore it is for them to habitually guard their character as soldiers, so that at the first call of their country they may be ready to range themselves under her standards, and to fight for her safety."

The Minister of State for Home Affairs issued on the 16th instant a proclamation to cities, prefectures and the Hokkaido Government. The gist of the document is as follows:—

"The war having now come to an end I desire earnestly to call the attention of the various local officials in important positions to the following:—

(1) Peace has been restored and none can have failed to be moved by perusal of the Emperor's Rescript. Now is the time to place the State on an everlastingly solid basis and to enhance the glory of the Empire.

(2) The position of the Empire imposes on it the great duty of preserving the peace of the Far East. A new Anglo-Japanese Alliance has been formed, and the methods, words and conduct of the Empire will attract correspondingly increased attention from the Powers. We have again become one of Russia's friends. There has ceased to be any reason why we should treat her differently from another country. It is therefore to be hoped that the people in your various jurisdictions will be restrained from any uncivilized words or acts. Special care should be taken in the treatment of any matters relating to religion.

(3) Peace having now been restored, it is inevitable that temporary distress should overtake many of those who in the demand for materials of war found a means of subsistence. All thought must be taken to provide means for succouring such persons and for making due adjustments in the economic situation.

(3) At the beginning of the war the industrial associations in the various localities reduced their enterprises and the completion of many administrative tasks was postponed in order to lighten the burdens of the people. This point now demands special attention in order that effort and expenditure already made may not be wholly lost. Nevertheless there can be no rash pursuit of a positive policy in advancing the national fortunes. Adjustment and enterprise must be mutually considered and solidity aimed at no less than development.

(4) The war has animated the nation. It has become possible to inaugurate useful works of production, of education, of industry and of economy which would be difficult in ordinary times. That is a matter for sincere congratulation. To begin is, however, easy whereas to achieve is difficult. The restoration of peace may possibly induce a spirit of inactivity. Therefore no effort must be spared to rouse the sentiment of perseverance, so that what was undertaken during the war may be completed during peace, to the benefit of the Empire's future.

(5) In spite of the heavy drafts made by the war on the youth of the country, there has been no diminution of production. This is because the old folks, the women and the children all coöperated to fill the vacancies. Efforts should be made to develop and maintain this fine habit. The business men in the localities ought to take by the hand the young men returning from the war, ought to find work for them, and to employ for purposes of peaceful development the high qualities shown by these men in the field, so as long to conserve the fame of their deeds.

(6) The families of soldiers killed in battle and those maimed by wounds should be objects of general succour and should be treated with all benevolence in return for the sacrifices they have made.

(7) Special care should be taken in the sanitation of places where the troops land.

In a word the spirit of the people, which has been so splendidly displayed in time of war, should now be turned to peaceful purposes; high and low alike should seek to assist the national policy of progress and to enrich the country, thus responding to the gracious intentions of the Sovereign."

Baron Kiyoura has also addressed the Shinto Officials in the following sense:—

"Throughout the war you have well performed your religious duties and the results of your sincere efforts have been signal. It is to be hoped that you will continue to bear in mind his Majesty's intentions and will seek to educate the best qualities of the nation."

Addressing the Shinto officials and prelates of Buddhist sects together, the Minister says:—

"The thorough discharge of their duties by all dignitaries of the two religions has contributed not a little to the victories won in the war. Now that the responsibilities of the nation have become heavier than ever, those concerned in religious instruction should take thought for the fortunes of the State and should so direct the people's minds as to respond to the Sovereign's purpose. The import of the constitution must always be kept in mind, namely, that men's minds should be freed from all apprehension as to freedom of conscience. This is the cardinal duty of religious teachers, and prelates having authority should instruct and guide their subordinates in that sense."

The Emperor has issued a rescript thanking the officials at Port Arthur and praising their ability in raising the Russian warships and adding them to the strength of the Japanese Navy.

ARRIVAL OF BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura, with most of the staff of the Japanese Plenipotentiary Mission, arrived in Yokohama on Monday, Oct. 16th, by the steamer Empress of India, which left Vancouver on the 2nd. The Empress was signalled at Inuboye about 3 a.m. and was therefore due in Yokohama between 11 and 12 but the thick weather retarded her and it was not till some time later that she arrived at the Quarantine ship. There a wait took place, and about one o'clock she got up her anchor and proceeded to work her way in very misty weather (rain had begun to fall) towards her moorings. On board there were Barons Komura and Kaneko, with the staff of the former, consisting of Messrs. Sato and K. Honda, and among the others present were Mr. Hamada, of the Kokumin Shimbun.

When the Empress was sighted a party of officials consisting of Baron Kioura, Minister for Agriculture, and Commerce, Baron Oura, Minister for Communications, Mr. Kubo, Minister for Education, Mr. Hadano, Minister for Justice, Mr. Chiada, Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Yamaza, Director of the Bureau of Political Affairs, Mr. Adachi, Mr. Ochiai, and Mr. Nabeshima, Secretaries of the Foreign Department; Major Tachibana, Messrs. Denison and Stevens, of the Foreign Department, with Governor Sufu, Mayor Ichihara, Mr. Watanabe, President, and Mr. Kobayashi, Chief Public Procurator, of the Yokohama District Court, and as representing Yokohama merchants, Messrs. K. Otani, and Kurusu, left the Hatoba, Mr. K. Hashimoto, Director of the Yokohama Customs, being also present.

The police arrangements, which were of an elaborate description, were under the charge of Mr. H. Yuasa, Superintendent of the Harbour, and reflected great credit upon him. Mr. Ikariyama, of the Kagacho Police, was also present.

At one o'clock the Empress swung off from her anchorage at the Quarantine ship and as she came in flying appropriate British flags at her fore and mizzen, with the Japanese national flag at the main, the Japanese flagship Yusei and the British flagship Diadem fired 19 guns each.

Arrived at her moorings the Empress quickly unloaded her passengers and shortly before two o'clock Baron Komura landed at the Detached Palace in Bente, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Inouye, Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor, and there he was received by Marquis Ito, and various officials of the Imperial Household. His staff meanwhile landed at the Hatoba and proceeded direct to the railway station. Baron Komura rejoined his party at the station and they proceeded to Tokyo by 3 p.m. train. The streets through which they passed were heavily guarded by police and no decorations were shown.

The Fiji Shimpō has an article on the return of Baron Komura. The tone suggests that our contemporary is somewhat embarrassed between the obligation of consistency and the duty of recognising that even the most vehement opponents of the peace-terms can not lay the blame chiefly on Baron Komura's head. He had to obey orders from Tokyo, and there is every reason to think that individually he did the best possible for his country. The Fiji even suggests that his illness was due to excessive mental trouble in connexion with the negotiations. It declines, however, to absolve him of responsibility, inasmuch as he could have resigned had he felt that the terms were too onerous and too injurious to his country's interests.

From such writing we infer that the Fiji Shimpō actually suspects the Japanese statesmen of having failed to foresee and provide for the contingency which ultimately confronted their Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth. Is it possible that our astute contemporary labours under such a misapprehension? The probability that Russia would resist the payment of an indemnity was palpable long before the Envoys set out. It had been loudly proclaimed by responsible Russians again and again, and we may confidently affirm that not one thinking man expected this particular demand to be settled without desperate trouble, and not one in a hundred expected that it would be settled in Japan's favour. It may therefore be taken for certain that before Baron Komura left Tokyo, the contingency of Russia preferring to fight on rather than to pay an indemnity had been fully considered by all the Empire's leading statesmen in conclave, and the course to be adopted by Japan in that event had been decided. Baron Komura must have known exactly how to proceed, in a general sense, and must have anticipated the actual result as one of the most probable outcomes of the conference. We do not imagine that there will be found on his part the slightest desire to shirk his responsibilities or to assume the attitude of having struggled against his instructions. He doubtless has the confidence of his opinion that the course taken was essentially and unquestionably the best for Japan under the circumstances, and if the Japanese nation is not yet sufficiently clear-headed to appreciate the fact, Baron Komura can afford to await its enlightenment.

The Kokumin Shimbun has an article on the same subject. It insists that Baron Komura comes home entirely successful. He has achieved all the cardinal objects of the conference. It is true that the claims for an indemnity and for the whole of Saghalien were abandoned, but these did not constitute essential parts of the peace programme from Japan's point of view. They had great importance doubtless in Russian eyes, but to the Japanese nation they did not compare with the objects for which the war was fought. Those objects have been fully obtained, largely through the skilful diplomacy and unbending resolution of Baron Komura, whose impaired health did not weaken his determination to serve his country on this arduous occasion. Petty causes of friction and small differences of opinion ought to be laid aside at such a juncture, and the nation should frankly welcome its Plenipotentiary. The Kokumin believes that even those who at one time professed to be disappointed, are now rejoicing secretly that peace has been concluded.

THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE TROOPS.

The orders for commencing the withdrawal of the troops from Manchuria are said to have been issued on the 14th instant and will take effect from the 16th. The organization of the railway guards in the proportion of 15 men to each kilometer will be effected during the course of the withdrawal, and this corps will be placed under the command of General Haraguchi, who has just returned from Saghalien.

It is expected that the Russian prisoners will begin to be sent home before the close of this month, but there is nothing yet known as to the actual preparations or the order of procedure. It is thought, however, that the first embarkation will be at Kobe. Orders have been issued, it is alleged, to treat the prisoners with the utmost possible consideration so that they may enjoy every convenience connected with their coming departure. They are said to be very busy purchasing souvenirs and getting their baggage ready.

THE PEACE TREATY AND THE JAPANESE PRESS.

The publication of the Peace Treaty has not silenced its most inveterate opponent, the Jiji Shimpō. As to the grand concessions our contemporary sees no use in repeating its protests, but in the details of the terms it finds much to condemn. Thus the second Article, while recognising Japan's paramount position in Korea, binds both of the contracting parties to abstain from taking "on the Russo-Korean frontier any military measures which may menace the security of Russian or Korean territory." The Jiji reads this as a veto against the construction of any defensive works whatever, and asks why, in the name of common sense, such a restraint should be imposed upon Japan in the face of a Power whose aggressions were the sole cause of the war. But is that a correct interpretation? Defensive works on the frontier of an empire certainly do not necessarily menace the security of the neighbouring Power. And under any circumstances surely the best way to preserve tranquillity along the frontier would be that both sides should refrain from any military preparations there? Our contemporary is also much dissatisfied with the length of the period, 18 months, allowed for the withdrawal of the Russian armies from Manchuria. These armies may be said to have been sent out from Russia in 18 months, and the task of dispatching an army to the field with all its equipment is much more arduous than the task of withdrawing it when peace is restored. Nine months would have sufficed, in the Jiji's opinion. So long as Russian troops remain in Manchuria Japanese troops also must remain there. The Jiji further expresses itself perplexed about the 9th Article of the Treaty. The contracting parties agree not to construct on Saghalien or the adjacent islands any fortifications or other similar military works. That is plain enough. But they "also respectively engage not to take any military measures which may impede the free navigation of the straits of La Perouse and Tartary." What "measures," our contemporary asks, are here referred to. Undoubtedly the provision is perplexing. So soon as the construction of fortifications on Saghalien and the adjacent islands is vetoed, no method remains for obstructing the straits except by means of mines, or by the construction of works on the mainland. Would Vezo be regarded as an island adjacent to Saghalien for the purposes of this Treaty, and if not so regarded, would its fortification be forbidden as a "measure impeding the free navigation of the Strait of La Perouse"? We too (Japan Mail) are puzzled to interpret this clause.

It will be observed that this detailed criticism is of a most trivial nature. Nothing of the kind would have been heard had the Treaty provided for re-imbursement of Japan's outlays and for the cession of the whole of Saghalien. These remain the true fontes et origines mali. The Emperor, however, has now declared himself unequivocally satisfied, and much as we respect the Jiji Shimpō, we are bound to say that its persistent complaints are assuming the complexion of sheer obstinacy.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun finds that the Treaty loses rather than gains on perusal. Our contemporary criticises the document article by article. Taking the 2nd article, which pledges Russia not to interfere with or obstruct any measures of guidance, protection and control which Japan may find it necessary to take in Korea, the Nichi Nichi finds in the explicit character of these expressions a reservation of which Russia may at any moment take inconvenient diplomatic advantage. The criticism is not very explicitly worded but it evidently means that Japan is bound to stop short of reducing Korea to the position of a dependency. As to that, the verdict must be that no language which did not clearly indicate such a step could be framed so as not to exclude it by implication. Looking carefully at the Treaty, we find that the very next clause of the 2nd article provides for the treating of Russian subjects in Korea exactly as the subjects or citizens of other Powers are treated. From whom is that promise exacted? From Japan. Does it not then follow by construction that Russia recognises Japan's right to regulate the treatment extended within Korea's borders to subjects and citizens of foreign Powers?

The Nichi Nichi objects also very strongly to the veto against military measures on the Russo-Korean frontier, but here its arguments are identical with those of the Jiji.

Articles 3 and 4 meet with our contemporary's approval, but it condemns the provision in Art. 5 which requires that China's consent must be obtained for the transfer of the Liaotung lease and the assignment of the public works and properties within that district. China's assent would have been obtained as a matter of course, but the inclusion of such a provision in the body of the Treaty confers on Peking an inconvenient power of veto.

The acquisition of the railway south of Chang-chun is very satisfactory, but since Japan does not obtain the section northward to Harbin, the Nichi Nichi wants to know how it will be possible for Japan to assure herself that Russia observes the engagement not to exploit her Manchurian lines for strategical purposes.

In connexion with this article much surprise is expressed at the discovery that not a word is said about a future railway from Changchun to Kirin. The Prime Minister was understood to have announced distinctly to the meeting of journalists summoned last month, that such a concession had been made by Russia. But it does not figure in the Treaty. We can only conclude that some special arrangement was made on the basis of the military line which Russia is understood to have run between the two places. But the matter demands explanation.

Another question put by the Nichi Nichi is, "What measures are contemplated for enforcing the provision that Russia shall not exploit her Manchuria railway for strategic purposes?" But surely that is hypercritical? Treaties seldom embody provision of machinery for their own enforcement.

It need hardly be stated that the article relating to Saghalien meets with undiluted condemnation from the Nichi Nichi. In addition to its previous contention that the restoration of territory already occupied is more humiliating than to dispense with an indemnity, our contemporary utterly condemns the restrictions as to defensive works, and declares that the presence of these in the Treaty is distinctly at variance with the Prime Minister's declaration that only freedom of navigation in the Straits was guaranteed.

The Nichi Nichi further regrets that some provision was not inserted with reference to the use of Northern Saghalien by Russia as a convict station. The article relating to fishing privileges is condemned on the ground that it contains a proviso which can be employed to destroy its validity, the proviso that the engagement shall not affect rights already belonging to Russian or foreign subjects in these regions. Is it not easy for Russia to find here a loop-hole for completely evading her promise? Besides, there is nothing said about stations on shore, though such are essential to the successful enjoyment of fishing privileges. The plain course would have been to provide that Japanese subjects should be placed on precisely the same footing as Russian subjects, but that was not done. Concerning the term fixed for the withdrawal of the troops from Manchuria, the Nichi Nichi shares the Jiji's opinion that such a term is dangerously long, and it asks how Russia is to be practically limited to railway guards in the ratio of 15 per kilometer. We suggest to the Nichi Nichi that Russia may possibly ask the same question about Japan's railway guards, and that no treaty was ever made which did not rely more or less on the good faith of the contracting parties.

The Shogyo Shimpō (business organ) finds no comfort in the Treaty, and declares that the exultation of the Russians is justified.

Thus far no other journals have spoken, but it can scarcely be doubted that they will take the same tone as the Jiji and the Nichi Nichi.

The Kokumin has a long and illuminating article on the subject of the Peace Treaty. We have not space to reproduce it in anything like its original dimensions, but we may note a few points in the argument. Dealing with Korea, the prime cause of the war, our contemporary insists that Russia has been completely effaced there, and that Japan's supremacy has received unequivocal recognition. Nothing could prove the fact more unequivocally than the second clause of the 2nd Article where Russia is obliged to sue her adversary for the sake of securing equal treatment for her subjects in Korea. There can be no mistake about the import of that clause. Again, in Manchuria, Russia has had to abandon all her work and all her pretensions in Japan's favour. There is no occasion to recapitulate. As to the objections that China's consent has to be obtained, the Kokumin recalls the fact that Manchuria is Chinese territory and that to obtain her consent to any arrangement relating to it is only natural. Besides, considering that Japan has recovered Manchuria for China, there is not the least probability of the latter proving recalcitrant. Commenting on the restriction as to the employment of the railway for military purposes, it is pointed out that whereas Japan has no occasion to put her part of the line to such uses, Russia is thereby precluded from transporting troops to and from Vladivostock, her sole remaining fortress in the Far East, and if she desires to have a railway for such a purpose, she must proceed to build another line within her own territory. Dealing with the engagement not to fortify Saghalien or the neighbouring islands, the Kokumin makes light of it, chiefly on the ground that such fortifications would not be built in any case since they would have no uses. We may mention here that with reference to the mutual pledge not to construct defensive works along the Russo-Korean frontier, our contemporary argues against the extreme unwisdom, alike from an economical and a practical point of view, of Japan and Russia engaging in a competitive programme of fort-building in those remote regions such as Germany and France has pursued in Alsace-Lorraine. The complaint that the re-imbursement of expenses was completely abandoned is not just, since Russia has engaged to pay the expenses of the maintenance of her prisoners in Japan; and with regard to Saghalien it is to be noticed that if Japan has restored the northern half, she has received instead valuable rights of fishery.

Other journals discuss the Treaty in adverse terms, but in no case is their argument so exhaustive as those of the Jiji and the Nichi Nichi, which have already been epitomized in these columns.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun, alluding to the rumours that Baron Komura was constrained by orders with which he did not agree, calls upon him to explain the facts so that the nation may be able to distinguish where the responsibility rests. Our contemporary does not appear to believe these rumours, since had Baron Komura been thus over-ruled, it would have been his duty to resign immediately after the signature of the Treaty. He has now associated himself with the result. Possibly it may be his intention to resign after all his reports have been presented, but at any rate he owes it to the nation to elucidate the situation. The Nippon, alluding to the same subject, assumes that Baron Komura was obliged by orders from Tokyo to take a course opposed to his own judgment, and while acknowledging that to resign at once would have been injurious to Japan's interests, urges him to resign now in his own interests.

The Yomiuri Shinbun severely condemns the instructions issued by the various Ministers of State, but it is very plain that whatever course the Cabinet has taken would have been equally condemned by this journal. The fact is that we have returned to the era of political party strife. Relieved from foreign pressure the old animosities have broken out and every journalistic criticism is tinged with partizanship.

THE TSAR'S APPRECIATION OF M. WITTE.

According to a telegram received at the Foreign Office in Tokyo the Tsar addressed the following message signed by his own hand, to M. Witte on the 8th instant:—"The pacific development of Russia being my earnest hope, I endorsed the suggestion of the President of the United States with reference to the meeting of plenipotentiaries of Russia and Japan with the object of determining whether a stop could be put to the horrors of the long war which had cost the two countries such heavy sacrifices. I therefore appointed you, gave you the qualifications of senior plenipotentiary, ordered you to proceed to America and entrusted you with powers to open peace negotiations at once should Japan's proposals prove acceptable. You completed the discussion of the preliminary terms and proceeded to the making of the treaty, in which transactions you well carried out my wishes and discharged your duty faultlessly. You also maintained your propositions ably and, without departing from the attitude suited to a plenipotentiary, proclaimed the impossibility of acceding to any conditions such as would be in conflict with the conditions existing in Russia or injurious to her essential interests, while at the same time you gave assent, so far as justice required, to the results accruing from the enemy's victories, and, making suitable concessions, achieved the contemplated object. In obedience with my instructions you refused to make any re-imbursement whatever of war-costs, and you agreed to the ren-" tion of the southern part only of Saghalien, which island, until 1875, had been a Japanese possession. Thus you achieved the work of restoring peace in the Far East in the interests of all concerned. I applaud your ability and your statesmanlike achievement, and by way of reward for your distinguished services to your country, I confer on you the title of a Count of the Russian Empire."

There is no undue boasting in this document nor any repetition of the foolish claims said to have been asserted by the Tsar with reference to the peace terms and Japan's submission to his "will." But in one part of the message His Majesty is unfortunate, namely, in his reference to Saghalien. He says plainly and unequivocally that although the island belonged to Japan up to 1875, only the southern half of it has now been restored to her. If Karafuto was really a part of the Japanese Empire in 1875, what conceivable excuse can be found for the Russian ambassador's contention at that time that no such title existed, or for the Russian Government's occupation of the island? It appears that the Tsar, for the sake of magnifying the achievements of his Plenipotentiaries at the Conference, has not hesitated to blacken the reputation of his predecessors.

THE KANEKO STORY.

We begin to understand why the story of the Ito-Kaneko influence was so confidently received in America when we read a long article in the Boston Evening Transcript of Sept. 11th. The article is signed "A Japanese student," and there are internal evidences that it was not written by an Anglo-Saxon. The following are the portions bearing on the matter in question:—

The real source of trouble lies farther back. The old Marquis Ito is it. There are a few other statesmen who have influence with the emperor and who have probably shared the same opinion with Ito in regard to the settlement of peace. But nobody approaches Ito in influence. This is not strange. There is no doubt that he has done more for the country than anybody else alive. His service was rendered entirely while the nation was in its infancy and weak. It is natural that such a man should have influence and power. But the very fact that he has done so much for the nation when it was in infancy unfits him for the proper appreciation of the strength and peculiar needs of the nation at present, when it is in a full-grown manhood. He is too timid. He is subject to the white phobia. And this is natural. He suffered too much from the Western nations in the past. He is afraid to fight and is apt to give in when fighting only can save the national honour. Before the war was declared against Russia he opposed it with all his might. He was the only and a very strong obstacle to the course of the war. This was known generally. He was threatened with assassination on many occasions and at last he yielded to the pressure of popular sentiment and war was declared. Now this same Marquis Ito, it is supposed, compelled Baron Komura to conclude peace on terms that are proving so unsatisfactory to the people. How the thing was done is reported as follows:

When President Roosevelt invited both Russia and Japan to negotiate for peace, and the invitation was accepted, Premier Katsura went to the emperor and suggested Marquis Ito as the chief envoy. Katsura did this purposely. He knew that the negotiation would either result in failure or in peace, with terms unsatisfactory to the people of Japan. In either case the chief envoy must become the centre of criticism. Now Ito is personally opposed to the present Government, and his failure would strengthen the position of the Katsura Government, both before the emperor and in the eyes of the people. Ito has still his ambitions. So he was inclined to accept the offer made by the emperor to serve as the chief envoy, as suggested by Katsura. Ito spoke of his inclination to accept to Mr. Ooka, one of his men, who is the editor of the one of metropolitan newspapers. The next morning this paper was out with portraits of Ito and Komura as chief and junior envoys to the peace conference. In the afternoon of the same day, Ito received three letters from different parts of Tokyo, threatening him with assassination, should he accept the emperor's offer. This was due to the people's general conviction that Ito would conclude peace at any price, and that the terms he would be able to make would be entirely unsatisfactory. At the same time Mr. Kato and Baron Ito, both Marquis Ito's men, went to him and told him how he was falling into the trap set by Katsura, and that both his own personal interest, as well as that of his party demanded that he should decline to serve on the mission. Thus this peculiar combination of circumstances induced Ito to decline, and Baron Komura was chosen instead as the chief envoy.

Now Baron Komura is an unusually strong man. He is a man of independent character and is free from the partisan influence. When he entered the present cabinet he did so on the condition that his policy in the foreign department should remain independent of the policies in other departments of the Government. He does not like to be hampered by the influences of party politics and of the elder statesmen. Being responsible for the diplomacy leading up to the war and for the diplomacy during the war, he was naturally the man to be chosen for the peace negotiations. Baron Komura accepted the offer, not unaware of the many difficulties in the way, but inspired by the sense of patriotism and by the sense of responsibility, with the condition that he should be given a free hand in the negotiation within a certain limit.

To understand how this was done, if it was really done, we must know the relation of Kaneko to Ito. The former is a trusted servant of the latter. That is the reason why Kaneko is sent here. His position is due to Ito's influence. Kaneko is making reports directly to Ito, it is reported, on the public sentiment of this country, especially of opinions of men like Roosevelt and others of importance. Ito's judgment is based upon Kaneko's reports and what Ito says goes very far with the emperor. Thus the reader can see how it may be possible for Kaneko and Roosevelt to make an arrangement between themselves without any sanction from the Tokio Government or Komura, and control the Mikado through Ito, thus upsetting the plan of Komura.

Thus Ito's personal relation with the emperor and with Kaneko, who was in touch with Roosevelt, it is supposed, was responsible for the peace settlement. This is the real source of trouble, and explains why Ito may be stoned, and how America comes to be misunderstood by the populace.

Such an analysis could not have been penned by any one conversant with the methods of diplomacy or disposed to think seriously. Neither should it have any weight with a clear-sighted publicist like the editor of the Boston Journal, and we are surprised to find him endorse it as "throwing a good deal of light on the intricacies of Japanese politics." The negotiation of a treaty in the sequel of a war of enormous magnitude is not such a haphazard business as "A Japanese Student" appears to imagine. The Plenipotentiaries do not enter the conference unprepared with any plan for dealing with contingencies which are practically certain to arise. According to the writer in the Boston Evening Transcript one is to believe that the possibility of Russia refusing to pay an indemnity and refusing to surrender the whole of Saghalien had not been foreseen by the Japanese Government from the outset, nor had Baron Komura been instructed as to the attitude he should assume in that event. But of course all that is out of the question. Baron Komura before he left Tokyo must have understood perfectly well that in all human probability Russia would prove obdurate on these two points, and must have been fully prepared as to his own course. The Kaneko-Ito tale is a pure figment of some one's imagination, and the credence attached to it for a moment was due to the relations known to exist between the two statesmen.

An interesting display of old Japanese pictures—including specimens from the brushes of Utamaru, Hiroshige, Hokusai and other well-known artists—can now be seen at the rooms of Mr. Kobayashi, Sancho, Houcho, Yokohama. There are on view some very good works of the old masters, which will well bear the inspection of foreigners.

KOREA.

Friday, October 13.

The insurrection continues. Seoul reports that on the 10th an outbreak occurred at Chung-ju and all the machinery of communications was destroyed. Pak Wi-do and two or three other leaders of the disturbance have been apprehended, but this does not seem to have produced any sensible effect.

The Korean newspapers are arguing that Korea is not under any obligation to recognise the Anglo-Japanese treaty of alliance. Threatening letters have been sent to the Japanese Legation and to the Japanese journals as well as to the Korean Ministers. The Jiji Shimpō says that this disturbance is fomented by men who seek, not their country's good, but personal notoriety.

It is stated that the Japanese Minister has intimated to the Korean Government that concessions for railway building in certain districts if made to Korean subjects, can not be recognised, as the latter have neither capital nor experience to utilize such grants. This is evidently the old story. To avoid having railways built at all the Korean Authorities profess to have given the concessions to their own people. They are not altogether undeserving of sympathy.

Saturday, October 14.

News has reached Seoul to the effect that the insurrection in Chhungchhyong-do continues to gain head. Two Japanese postmen have been assassinated and the telegraph line has been destroyed. The Japanese authorities have consequently ordered that the letter-carriers shall hereafter be escorted by gendarmes.

From next month the Korean Customs will pass under the management of Mr. Megata. It must be confessed that the British Government has shown much complaisance in the matter of Mr. McLeavy Brown. He had become one of the traditional representatives of British interests in the Far East, and though it was certainly an anomaly that he, a foreigner, should have virtually autocratic control of one of the most important sources of Korean revenue, the wholesome results of his control so far as concerned Korea's interests was universally recognised, and it is certain that he would never have been removed from his post had not Japan desired to take into her own hands the regulation and reform of Korean finance. Personally Mr. McLeavy Brown has nothing to complain of. He is a man of such mature years that the idea of rest must have presented itself pleasantly to his mind, and the liberal treatment he has received will enable him to realize that idea very effectually.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes a telegram from Seoul saying that there are signs of the restoration of tranquillity, the provincial rioters having partly dispersed. A sentiment of apprehension and umbrage about Japanese designs still exists in certain quarters, and letters of lamentation or menace are received by Japanese and Korean officials but the climax of the agitation is supposed to have passed.

The Jiji Shimpō has a leading article on the subject. It attaches little substantial importance to these plots; they have no strength of endurance or influence. The really important feature is that the Emperor is confidently reported to have issued secret instructions forbidding the employment of any strong measures or even of ordinarily efficient measures against the Hwanghai-do and Chhungchhyong-do insurgents. In short His Majesty may be said to have fomented the trouble, and since its spirit was anti-Japanese he is placed in an exceedingly equivocal position. The Emperor knows the Japanese and is known by them. They do not imagine for a moment that he would adopt such a course of his own unprompted initiative. There can be no doubt that he acted at the suggestion of his entourage, in which there have long been included several men of the bigoted conservative type. Their advice is always given secretly against progress and against the Japanese, and so long as they remain near the Throne and are enabled to influence the Sovereign's actions, it will be impossible to accomplish anything really solid in the way of improvement. The Jiji urges, therefore, the drastic removal of these old-fashioned courtiers. Possibly such a step would be hard for the Emperor to bear since these persons have long enjoyed his confidence and even friendship, but sentimental considerations of that nature must yield to the pressing necessities of the time. The Yomiuri Shimbun writes much in the same strain. It declares that a strong anti-Japanese feeling has been fomented by the agitators. The results are, on the one hand, provincial disturbances, and on the other persistent obstruction at the hands of the central Government officials, who, among other evidences of ill-will, recently granted to a bogus Korean company a concession for building a railway south of the Han river, which line should manifestly form a branch of the Seoul-Fusan road. There is not the smallest prospect of the work being seriously undertaken by the native company, but the disposal of the concession puts a solid obstacle in Japan's way. It was against this that Mr. Hayashi recently protested. The Yomiuri thinks that something more emphatic than mere protest is needed, or the situation will become such as to injure Japan's prestige and her prospects in the peninsula.

Sunday, October 15.

On the 13th instant the Korean Government, through the Minister of Foreign Affairs, is said to have replied to the communication of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance Treaty by the Japanese Legation. The gist of the reply was that the relations between Japan and Korea were already definitely fixed by recently concluded conventions, and the Government failed to see that this new Treaty should affect them. Nevertheless they observed that the Treaty contained a clause inconsistent with the conventionally fixed nature of those relations. This reply is interpreted as preliminary to the resistance which Korea may be expected to offer to the changes plainly contemplated by the terms of the Alliance.

Mr. Hayashi, in an interview reported by telephone from Osaka to the Jiji, makes light of the present disturbances in Korea. The rioters will disperse at the first symptom of vigorous steps to deal with them. The trouble is that they hide in the hills so long as there is any danger of pursuit, and the people, fearing the consequences, will not betray them. As to the relations between Korea and Japan, Mr. Hayashi considers that the course has been made quite clear by recent international documents. He denies, however, that there has been any withdrawal of Foreign Representatives from Seoul, though he admits that their presence there is quite superfluous; in fact he compares them to flowers set in vases. Mr. Hayashi speaks of the editor of the Korea Daily News and his writings. He describes the editor himself in appreciative terms, but attaches little importance to his writings so far as concerns their power to stay the course of events. Concerning Li Yong-ik's visit to France, it may have some connexion with Russia, but Mr. Hayashi does not think that the latter will post any Representative in Seoul after the restoration of peace. Korea is now virtually a Japanese dependency, and it would be false statesmanship to allow useless forms to interfere with the realization of the fact.

Korea and Manchuria offer numerous opportunities for profitable enterprises, but the Japanese seemed disposed to fold their hands idly and suffer these opportunities to elude them.

Monday, October 16.

Korea is evidently in a very unsettled state. Recent statements as to the rioting having subsided, are not borne out by the latest news, which indicates that at Chihung-ju and five other places in that region bodies of insurgents, varying from 50 to 200 in number, are raiding the country. A serious feature of the affair is that Chhin Sang-hieun, formerly Prime Minister, is said to be inciting this disturbance and to be acting at the instance of the Emperor. It is observable that the Court is constantly reported to be implicated in the intrigues and disturbances that torment the Korean nation. This tends to confirm the frequent assertion that much of the peninsula's unrest is due to the machinations of the corrupt officials who form the Emperor's immediate entourage.

Wednesday, October 18.

It is rumoured that the son of the late Prime Minister Chhin is acting as chief instigator and leader of the insurgents and that vehement efforts are being made to obtain the cooperation of Chhin himself. The so-called "righteous troops" are discrediting themselves by wholesale pilfering. Meanwhile the Cabinet is said to be again disturbed. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Pak, on receipt of a copy of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, replied that it had nothing to do with Korea, and in framing that answer he is reported to have been guided by the Emperor's instructions, who told the ministry that it would be as much as their own heads were worth did they in any way give their consent to the terms of the Alliance. Altogether the state of affairs seems to be very unquiet.

Thursday, October 19.

The Hochi Shimbun has a telegram from Seoul which throws very clear light on the attitude which the Korean Government intends to assume towards the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The telegram embodies the gist of a despatch said to have been sent by the Korean Minister of Foreign Affairs to the British Representative in Seoul. His Excellency says plainly that the 3rd article of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is manifestly at variance with the Anglo-Korean treaty of amity and commerce, since the article evidently disregards the independence of Korea. The Minister asks whether the principle is to be adopted that merely because a country is small it must forfeit its independence. There are other small states in the world besides Korea. Does England intend to admit that they also may be made objects of aggression on account of their size? It appears to the writer of the despatch that England's action in this matter is lacking in the spirit of friendship and he asks for an explanation. The Nichi Nichi, publishing a similar telegram, describes the language used by the Korean Minister towards the British Representative as inquisitorial. In the same journal we find it stated, however, that some of the Korean Ministers are beginning to have an intelligent perception of the situation. They have been warned from Japanese sources that their country can only be injured by undue agitation or anti-Japanese intrigues at this juncture, and they are said to have given advice to the Throne in the same sense.

The Fiji Shimpō has a very strong article upon this question. Its gist is that the Japanese authorities must resolutely pursue their policy in Korea, looking neither to the left nor to the right but going straight ahead. What that policy is may be inferred from our contemporary's assertions that Korea has now been recognised internationally as a Japanese protectorate and that any temporizing with the situation will only have the effect of complicating it.

No thoughtful person, it seems to us, can deny the justice of the Fiji's remarks. The better nature of civilized men necessarily revolts against every spectacle of seeming aggression; every interference with the independence of a small state. Doubtless to that instinct may be ascribed the campaign carried on by some local journalists in connexion with Korea; a campaign which would have more chance of doing good and would involve less risk of causing mischief were it purged of the extravagant abuse indulged in by some of its leaders. But, after all, when this problem is considered in its ultimate form, what is found to be at stake is something very much larger than the independence of Korea, namely, the security of Japan. Were there in Korea's modern history the smallest evidence that she can be trusted not to abuse her independence to the detriment of her neighbour, Japan might be justified in leaving her to her own devices. But if history teaches anything it is that an entirely independent Korea would be a seed-plot of international complications, would prove quite fatal to the maintenance of peace in the Far East, and would constitute a perpetual danger to Japan. We say nothing of the Korean people from Japan's point of view. It may be that, as a correspondent has just alleged, they desire nothing better than to be left wallowing in the mud of unprogressiveness and corruption. But if altruistic considerations for the welfare of a nation have little influence on the political counsels of Powers directly concerned, such considerations constitute the sole title to interference by third parties, and it is therefore pertinent to ask whether any pretence can be advanced that the Korean nation's welfare would be best consulted by leaving it as it is. That question deserves to be carefully pondered by the stalwart foreign champions of the little Empire's independence. With Japan, however, charity begins at home. It is as certain as anything human can be certain that unless she asserts her protectorate over Korea in a resolute and practical manner, she will lay up for herself a multitude of future troubles. Two wars have already been fought on Korea's account. We can not think that sentimental arguments about national status are sufficient to compensate for the risk of a third war. No one can doubt what England, or France, or America or Germany would do in presence of the same conditions, and we trust that Japan will do it, careless of the clamour of irresponsible emotionalists.

The leader of the disturbance in Chhang-chhyong-dō is reported to have been apprehended, and there is a prospect of quiet being restored in that quarter.

The transfer of the Korean Customs to Japan's control is to take place on the 5th of November. Mr. McLeavy Brown was to give a farewell entertainment to his friends at Chemulpo on the 19th.

In the Fiji Shimpō it is stated that some complications are caused in connexion with concessions obtained by Messrs. Collbran and Bostwick. These concessions relate to water-works and mining. They are said to be of a vague character and to have been secured by vague means. The concessionaires have approached English capitalists, and the latter have sent out experts to make investigations in loco, with the result that the British Representative is considerably embarrassed.

The Varyag has made a trial trip at Chemulpo and her machinery having been found to work satisfactorily, she will soon set out on her voyage to Japan.

WEDDING IN TOKYO.

On the 14th instant the marriage of Miss Yei Theodora Ozaki and Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Mayor of Tokyo, was celebrated at St. Andrew's Church in the capital in the presence of a very large assemblage of friends, both foreign and Japanese. A novel feature of the ceremonial was a guard of honour—30 blue-jackets, 20 marines and 2 officers—sent by Admiral Noel as a token of respect towards Tokyo city. The men were drawn upon on either side of the approach from the gate of the enclosure to the door of the sacred edifice. Much taste had been shown in the decoration of the latter, but the space available did not nearly suffice to accommodate the numerous friends who attended. At 2.30 p.m. the bridal procession entered the Church headed by the bridegroom and bride after whom came the best man, Mr. Ozaki, brother of the bridegroom, and seven bridesmaids, Miss Denning, Miss B. Ozaki, Miss Blanche Brinkley, Miss Gubbins, Miss J. Ozaki, and the Misses Miller, and the page, Master Schaeffer. We shall not attempt to describe the toilettes of the bride and bridesmaids, further than to say that they seemed at once chaste and pretty. The service was performed by the Rev. A. E. Webb, the benediction pronounced by the Right Rev. Bishop Awdry and the bride given away by her father, Baron Ozaki. When the strains of the wedding march made themselves audible at the conclusion of the ceremony, the guard of honour outside gave three ringing British cheers. Thereafter the whole party repaired to the Nobles Club, the whole of which had been thrown open for the occasion. During the collation His Excellency Baron d'Anethan made the following speech:—

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.—I have been asked to propose the health of the Bride and Bridegroom; and I am much gratified to have the honor of fulfilling that very pleasant duty, as I know that I am expressing truly and sincerely the feelings of the numerous friends gathered together on this auspicious occasion, in wishing every happiness and prosperity to Mr. and Mrs. Ozaki.

The bride is an old friend of ours, of us all! We have admired her in many ways; for her literary talents, social charm and gracefulness. All those qualities will fit her most admirably to the new part she has to play in the future. Among the numerous duties of the distinguished Mayor of Tokio he has had often—and will have now more than ever, as the friendly relations of Japan with the other countries of the world are daily increasing—to act as host at many official and social functions.

We shall look forward to see his charming and accomplished wife assist him in those receptions that always leave such a lasting and pleasant impression on the Foreigners who have the opportunity of partaking of the kind hospitality of the Municipality of Tokyo.

We wish the bride and the bridegroom long, successful and prosperous lives in the prominent position it will be their fate henceforth to hold in the capital of Japan. Above all, however, ladies and gentlemen, above all we pray each may be that mutual help to the other which is so necessary in the difficult path of life which when pursued in solitude is oft-times so very hard to accomplish, but which in the company of, and aided by the help of, a loving and sympathetic companion is rendered happy and easy, full of joys and blessings!

Ladies and gentlemen, we raise our glasses to the health, happiness and prosperity of Mr. and Mrs. Ozaki.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio in reply expressed, on behalf of his bride and himself, a lively sense of the honour done to them by the gathering of so many distinguished personages at this celebration. The marriage had been arranged many months ago but they had thought that so long as the war lasted the time would not be auspicious, and even now he felt it somewhat incongruous that such a ceremony should take place while the city of which he had the honour to be mayor was still under martial law. It had not been his intention or his expectation that the event should assume any considerable dimensions, but the friends of his wife and of himself had proved more numerous and more enthusiastic than he could have ventured to hope, and thus the original programme, comparatively quite unostentatious, had finally grown into a demonstration which embarrassed him by its magnitude. His Excellency Baron d'Anethan, in a most sympathetic and gracious speech, had alluded to the part Mrs. Ozaki would be called upon to take at social functions connected with his office as Mayor, but he did not look forward to that honour, as a quiet unostentatious life was better suited to his means and his inclinations. He hoped, however, that the many friends who had shown such kindly interest on this occasion, would continue to give to his wife and himself the advantage of their valuable intercourse and the pleasure of their society, and he begged again to thank them all most heartily for their warm-hearted interest and genial participation.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE PHILIP.

Many foreign residents in this country will learn with melancholy interest and the deepest regret of the death of Mr. George Philip, formerly of Yokohama. Mr. Philip, who was a native of Inverurie, Scotland, came to Japan in 1886 as an assistant in the firm of Strachan & Co. and after some years' stay in Kobe was removed to Yokohama where he remained up to the time of his departure for home some two years ago. He made himself very popular all round, and took a special interest in racing, being a member of the Nippon Race Club and more than once a starter at the meetings. He was also a prominent member of the local St. Andrews' Society. A most genial and kindly gentleman, Mr. Philip was greatly esteemed by all who met him, and his decease at the age of 42 years will be lamented by a large section of the foreign community.

A telegram was recently received at the well-known Buddhist temple Yenaku in Kamakura, saying that Mr. Ujemura, one of the priests of the temple, who is a Lieutenant of the reserve, was attacked by a crowd of Hungtutze while scouting at a certain point in Manchuria and killed. He belonged to the force under Lieut-Colonel Hanada.

URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MR. BRYAN.

The great Democratic leader, Mr. Bryan, arrived in Japan by the Manchuria on Saturday. He will spend about a fortnight in this country, and will then proceed to the Philippines, the Straits Settlements and India. Interviewed by a representative of the Jiji Shimpō, he said that he had come to Japan convinced that much was to be learned in a country which had just achieved such successes in war. He declined to speak of Japanese politics.

The Association of American friends entertained Mr. Bryan at the Maple Club on the afternoon of the 17th instant. Viscount Nagaoka presided and proposed the health of the President of the United States. Mr. Bryan replied by proposing that of the Emperor of Japan. He quoted the Bible saying "better is he that ruleth his temper than he that taketh a city," and declared that to the Emperor of Japan might justly be ascribed both of the qualities indicated by this scripture. Baron Kaneko spoke at some length. He declared himself very reluctant to address the meeting in the presence of such a renowned orator as Mr. Bryan, whose gift of eloquence was universally famous. Speaking of his own reception in the United States he said that its cordiality, a cordiality equally marked wherever he went, was due simply to the fact of his being a Japanese, and was thus another mark of the friendship felt by the Great Republic towards this country. American possessions extended from the northern seas to California, Hawaii, Guam and the Philippines; Japan's stretched from Formosa to Saghalien. The two Powers between them dominated the Pacific, and so long as the Pacific itself lasted so long would the relations between the two be pacific. The Anglo-Japanese alliance was written on parchment; the Anglo-American-Japanese alliance was written on the hearts of the three peoples. He proposed the health of their illustrious guest.

Mr. Bryan, having remarked how little Baron Kaneko's eloquence was consistent with his depreciatory exordium, reciprocated the wish that the friendship between America and Japan might be as deep and enduring as the ocean which washed their shores. He himself had no knowledge of Japan but he remembered that many years ago a Japanese gentleman, moved by some speech of his, had come two thousand miles to visit him, an honour which he had appreciated most sincerely. Then for the first time he had learned something about this country now so illustrious. It had long been his hope to see national ideals raised to a higher level and to bring about the time when the reign of justice would replace that of the sword, and men would settle all their disputes by friendly arbitration rather than by killing one another. The peace recently concluded between Japan and Russia at the instance of a third Power had materially contributed to that result. There was no instance in history of any country having made such progress and in so short time as Japan had made. The name of Meiji had well been chosen by the Mikado for this wonderful era, and His Majesty must feel that the spirits of his ancestors were gratified by the choice. The object of his (Mr. Bryan's) travels was uniquely to collect information, and he found that he had much to learn in Japan.

The party broke up at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Bryan visited Waseda University on Wednesday and had a splendid reception. He spoke before an assemblage of over 3,000 students upon the position which oratory filled in the world and upon the ideals which young men should place before them on entering life.

CHINA.

There is a rising in Shantung, but whether it bears a political character or is merely an affair of brigandage we can not discern. Several hundreds of rioters, all armed with foreign rifles, are said to have established a reign of terror at Kwangchin, and as their hostility to foreigners is marked, the German Representative has applied to the Imperial Government to adopt vigorous measures for quelling them.

It is said that Viceroy Yuan's political power is greater than even that of Viceroy Li was at the time of the latter's greatest popularity. The Viceroy's relatives and friends occupy all the important posts in Peking, and there is now talk of placing Shantung, Honan and Hupeh under his jurisdiction.

Chang Kun, Governor of Illi, is endeavouring to arrange for stationing General Ma's forces in Illi as a measure of protection.

Rumours continue to arrive of Russian settlers reaching Illi and of demands for railway and mining concessions. The Chinese Government, sufficiently experienced as to the significance of these preliminaries, has warned the Governor of Illi against granting anything which can be withheld. There is no legitimate objection to Russian enterprise in the hands of private Russian subjects, but Russia has established for herself such an aggressive reputation that every movement of her people is viewed askance. Men find it hard to believe in any bonâ-fide exercise of private Russian enterprise.

Naturally the persistent rumour as to Russia's intention of stationing 300,000 troops on the Chinese frontier has caused much uneasiness in Peking. Steps are being taken to discover whether the St. Petersburg Government has any such purpose, and unless satisfactory assurances to the contrary are obtained a very strong protest will be lodged. We have already pointed out the extremely improbable character of the rumour. Russia has no arrangements for stationing an immense army of three hundred thousand men on the immediate north of Harbin, and the cost of such a measure would be enormous. These considerations have now been explained to the Yomiuri by an official, and one imagines that they must have occurred to the Chinese Government also. Russia may draft a part of her huge Far-Eastern Army into the Siberian and Amur forces, but as to stationing three hundred thousand men north of Harbin, the idea seems chimerical.

The great military manoeuvres alluded to more than once during the past two months, are to take place, it is said, from the 23rd to the 26th instant in the Ho-hsien district of Pechili. Viceroy Yuan will be present.

A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō from Peking indicates a very alarming state of affairs in the Chinese capital. It states that a movement to overthrow the Tsing Dynasty of Tartars is on foot and is gaining ground with astonishing rapidity. From the evening of the 15th the gates of the Legation enclosures were shut and all Chinese attempting to pass were subjected to strict examination. This telegram comes via Shanghai and is attributed to a German source in the last resort. It does not command credence.

A censor has memorialized the Throne urging that a Viceroy be appointed in Manchuria and that Governors be appointed in the three provinces. He also urges that a Manchurian army should be formed on the model of Viceroy Yuan's North-China force, and that the Hungtusz be invited to join. The memorial further includes suggestions as to the establishment of a bank, the issue of paper money and the organization of a coast-wise carrying service.

STUPENDOUS LYING.

The Manila American continues its wonderful series of falsehoods. Whether there exist any other American journal that can be mentioned in the same breath with this newspaper of the Philippines for colossal lying we do not know, but it is scarcely possible to believe that the Manila sheet stands in a class entirely to itself, especially as it professes to obtain all its telegraphic news from San Francisco, which statement can scarcely be a pure fiction. At all events the romances appearing in two recent numbers of the American are worth quoting:—

San Francisco, September 13.

Five hundred and fifty nine lives were lost and two hundred more were injured, many of them fatally on the Japanese battleship Mikasa which was destroyed to-day. The government has officially announced that the disaster was due to improper electric wiring, which started a slight blaze in the forward quarters of the marines. Before the fire could be checked, it reached the magazines, two of which exploded simultaneously and instantly the huge battleship was a mass of twisted and torn steel and iron. She sank within two minutes from the time the explosion occurred.

One significant feature of the press cablegrams received from Japan regarding the disaster is that no mention is made of where the Mikasa was stationed when she was destroyed.

The Japanese Government has persistently denied, that there have been riots in any city other than Tokio, and there is a growing impression that the ship was destroyed by the rioting element, and that to admit this, or tell the name of the place where the accident occurred would be an admission that riots have occurred in other places than Tokio.

San Francisco, September 13th.

A cablegram has been received from Tsingtau, China, saying that the rioting in Tokio has gotten beyond control of the military authorities, and that thousands of soldiers have refused to attack the rioters. The despatch says also, that a report has been received there to the effect that Baron Komura's family have been assassinated, and his Tokio residence burned. All attempts to get the Tokio correspondents to confirm or contradict the Tsingtau despatch have been fruitless. In fact, except the statements of number of dead and injured on the Mikasa nothing has been received from the Tokio correspondents today. This points to an exceedingly strict censorship. There is a steamship line between Kobe and Tsingtau, and the information which comes over the cable from the Chinese city, was carried there by German passengers.

San Francisco, September 15.

Lloyd C. Griscom, the American Minister to Japan, has made a formal demand upon the Government to guarantee protection to Secretary of War Taft and the members of the congressional party who are accompanying him. The party is due to arrive at Yokohama, to-morrow, the 16th. The leaders of the rioting element have announced by placards posted throughout Japan, that they mean to wreak their vengeance on the distinguished Americans for the wrong that has been done Japan in the peace negotiations just ended, which wrong they say is due to President Roosevelt's interference in the war.

The Government has made no reply to Minister Griscom's note.

San Francisco, September 15.

Rioters have burned the town of Kanagawa, the first station on the railway between Yokohama and Tokyo, and yesterday did many thousands of dollars worth of damage in Yokohama. The offices of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha steamship company were surrounded by the rioters who threw stones through the windows and defied the officials to leave the building. They destroyed a large amount of army stores in the railway freight houses near the steamship company's offices. The mob marched down the water front and made a demonstration in front of the Club Hotel, the new building of the Standard Oil Company and the Grand Hotel. At the latter place the fire hose was turned on them, which only tended to further incense the rioters. They rushed into the hotel in large numbers and completely wrecked the office and bar. The prompt arrival of a troop of cavalry drove them away. The rioting continues, and the foreign consuls have called upon the Government to guarantee their subjects and their property protection. The places attacked on the water front belong to Americans.

The mobs are still active in Tokyo and the Government has made little headway in checking the lawlessness.

As though this budget of unblushing lies did not suffice, there is added a long story headed "Mikado chopped off an American woman's head." If the Rev. Mr. Scherer or any other foreign critic wants genuine examples of the "deep-set dishonesty" which he calls a "cancer at the core of the Japanese nation," he had better conduct his search at home. There is no occasion to go outside America.

D.ATH OF "BALLYHOOLEY."

Mr. Robert Jasper Martin died on Sept. 12th at his residence, Rosscabill, Ross, Galway, at the age of 65. He was a member of an extremely ancient family of Galway, and is perhaps chiefly known in England as the author of the popular songs, "Ballyhooley," "Killaloo," and "Mulvaney's Dog." Mr. Martin was a prominent Conservative, and as cousin to the late Colonel Hugh Hugh M'Calmont was largely instrumental in obtaining his return as member for the Newmarket Division of Cambridgeshire while he was absent on duty with his regiment in South Africa in 1903. Old residents in the Far East will remember another member of the family, Lieut. Martin, of the Perak Rifles, who wrote excellent articles in the Fenang Gazette as "Ballyhooley Junior," and whose sad death some years ago was caused by a fall from his horse.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The October number of the Kokka has just been issued. It is, as usual, rich in beautiful and interesting illustrations and the letterpress consists of essays on "Kenzan Ogata" (unsigned), "Characteristics of Japanese Painting" (Part IV., by Seichi Taki), "Paintings of Popular Amusements" (by Hideyori Kano), "Animal and Arboreal Paintings of Mshi" (unsigned) and "On Kakemono and the Tokonoma" (unsigned). This magazine has now established its character as essential to every student of Japanese and Chinese art, quite apart from the general interest attaching to its illustrations.

Professor Shiga is reported to have discovered important kerosene deposits in Saghalien. The place is not clearly indicated but we gather that it is in the vicinity of Delpinskoi. The Professor accompanied by four Japanese, set out under the guidance of Giljaks, but the latter ultimately left him, and for 20 days the little party continued its explorations far from the haunts of any human beings, and subsisting on reindeer's flesh and berries. In the middle of a dense forest they found a lake consisting entirely of Kerosene. It appears that a relief party despatched by the Japanese Military authorities failed to find the explorers and much alarm was felt on their behalf. Professor Shiga is a well-known mineralogist and his report—if rumour has not distorted it—may be confidently trusted. But if this lake be in the neighbourhood of Delpinskoi it lies in the northern half of the island and the Japanese will derive no advantage from it. The question of locality remains, however, to be definitely answered. We only know that the fact of the explorers' safety is said to have been ultimately reported at Delpinskoi.

The Japanese are evidently and naturally perplexed about the repeated assertions that the meeting of the Kaiser and the Tsar had the effect of strengthening the latter, and was thus directly responsible for the obduracy of St. Petersburg at the peace conference. But the Nippon shrewdly remarks that if credit is to be attached to the various stories emanating from the journals of continental Europe, some obviously false tales will have to be accepted, as for the example the allegations concerning the bogus Kodama representation. The plain fact is that falsehood has come to be regarded as a perfectly legitimate weapon in certain journalistic circles in the West. The only safe plan is to believe nothing.

The number of Japanese officers and soldiers now under treatment in Japan for wounds and disease is 29,626, of whom 25,947 are in hospital and 3,679 are at spas and other health resorts. At one time Tokyo alone was caring for over ten thousand patients, but it has now only 6,800. This suggests what a large decrease has taken place since the war was at its height.

In connexion with this it may be mentioned that the funds collected by the Soldiers' Relief Association total 1,693,000 yen, contributed by 1,476,189 persons.

Tokyo journals publish a table showing the comparative wealth of the richest nations. The figures given are these:—

	Millions of Yen.
U.S. of America—Total wealth.....	188,600
England—Total wealth	118,000
France	96,000
Germany	80,000
Russia	64,000

This table does not take any account of population. The figures per head show a different order:—

	Yen.
England per head of population	2,884
France	2,514
America	2,470
Austria	2,458
Denmark	2,210
Canada	1,870
Holland	1,756

As for Japan, her total wealth is estimated at 12,500 millions of yen, which, divided among her population of 46 millions, makes 272 yen per head, or just about one-tenth of the English figure. That has always been regarded as about the ratio for Japan and England.

The era of martial law has come to an end in all the districts where it was proclaimed at the outbreak of war. This does not refer to Tokyo, where martial law was inaugurated under special circumstances which are not considered to have yet disappeared. The citizens of the capital will doubtless grumble much that they should remain under this ban despite the complete restoration of peace and despite the publication of the Treaty and its ratification, but, after all, they have mainly to thank themselves for this unhappy state of affairs.

Tokyo journals state that the Japanese Authorities have it in contemplation to increase the standing army to twenty Divisions, including the Guards. It has not hitherto been permissible to refer to the fact that since the outbreak of war—within, indeed, the past few months—four new Divisions have been added to the military force, namely, the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th. The idea now is, according to rumour, that in addition to these Divisions there should be 3 others, bringing the total number of arithmetically numbered Divisions to 19, so that with the Guards the establishment would be 20 Divisions in all. The head-quarters of the four new Divisions—from the 13th to the 16th—have not yet been fixed, and it will be necessary to build barracks. There is talk of leaving the Division in Manchuria until that is accomplished, but for economical reasons we doubt such a programme. When it is remembered that the strength of the Army at the outbreak of the war was 13 Divisions, including the Guards, it will be seen that the addition of 7 Divisions means more than doubling the force.

It is estimated that when the armies are recalled from the field and reduced to their peace-footing, something like 200,000 or 250,000 men will be suddenly thrown on the labour market. Further, in consequence of the cessation of any demand for military stores and the consequent closing of factories, a further body of about half a million will be added to the ranks of the unemployed. It was to this forecast that Baron Kioura, Minister of Home Affairs, alluded in his recent instruction to local officials. The subject is causing much anxiety, for it is plainly to be apprehended that disbanded soldiers, who have been long in the field, will have some difficulty in settling down to a peaceful life of industry, especially in the face of great difficulty in finding employment.

It is said to be calculated by the Japanese military authorities that the force to be stationed by this empire in Manchuria for the purpose of guarding the railway will total about 12,000 of all arms. The number originally estimated by irresponsible publicists was 9,500. Twelve thousand is a somewhat inconvenient force, for it exceeds the peace establishment of a Division and is less than three Brigades. Of course this number does not include any force that Japan may see fit to station in Liaotung, south of Pulan-tien. There she is free to fix any limits she pleases.

We have received an intimation from Mr. Inouye, Chief of the Kanagawa Prefectural Police, that the restrictions hitherto imposed upon the publication of news with regard to military operations have been practically removed in consequence of the restoration of peace. It is added, however, that special and detailed information with regard, for example, to the calibre and strength of artillery employed at Port Arthur and in other great actions should not at present be given to the public. The movements of divisions and the names of commanders, both naval and military, may now be freely divulged.

The Prime Minister has been released from his temporary functions as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Baron Komura has resumed his duties.

Lt.-General Oshima, of Nan-shan fame, has been promoted to be a full General, and Major-General Matsunaga Masatoshi has been appointed Lieut.-General.

The Japanese military authorities have rescinded all sentences passed upon Russian prisoners for violations of the law, since August of last year.

THE PEACE.

THE difference of longitude caused some delay in interchanging news about the ratifications the text of the Treaty was published on Monday. The Asahi Shim-bun makes the event a text for another article of condemnation. Commenting on the arguments of The Times that the fact of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance having come into existence warranted the Japanese Government in making some concessions at the conference since the Alliance insured peace, the Asahi admits the justice of that view so far as peace is concerned, but asks what the Alliance had to do with Japan's just claims as victor in the war? Would it not have been natural and proper that Japan should obtain her rights quite irrespectively of the Alliance which was an independent affair? She did not obtain those rights, and the people have not forgotten the failure. They want to fix its responsibility. In everything they are obliged to yield. The promised special session of the Diet has become apocryphal; the metropolis is under martial law; the nation is bid to prepare itself for large post-bellum outlays which are to be made by the statesmen whom the people have ceased to trust. It is not to be supposed that anger has disappeared because its evidences are not apparent. The nation is still as profoundly dissatisfied as ever though it has assumed a smiling face for the purpose of welcoming its British guests.

It continues to be noticeable that journals like the Asahi, which condemn the peace-terms, persistently refrain from saying what ought to have been done. They resolutely refuse to face the issue squarely, and to tell the public whether they would have had the country fight on for the sake of an indemnity and for the sake of the northern half of Saghalien. To fight on was the sole alternative and we must assume that the Asahi, the Jiji and their fellow-thinkers would have approved such a course. But if so they commit themselves to the further proposition that by continuing the war either an indemnity could have been obtained or some compensatory advantages could have been secured. Will they not tell us frankly to which of these forecasts they pin their faith? They talk much of Ministerial responsibility. Have they no responsibility themselves? If they devote their columns to creating popular discontent, is it not their plain duty to assign intelligible reasons for fomenting a mood so dangerous and so injurious to the nation's interests? They seem to avoid that duty carefully. They can not conscientiously pretend to think that if Russia declined to pay fifteen hundred millions of yen now, she would have been prepared to pay three thousand millions a year hence when Harbin and Vladivostock had fallen. No man with any claim to discernment entertains such a view. Is it then in the possession of Harbin and Vladivostock that our contemporaries find an equivalent for a further burden of fifteen hundred millions of national debt and a further list of two hundred thousand casualties? We see no other conclusion, and such a conclusion need only be fairly stated to win universal opprobrium. Nevertheless these champions of the principle of responsibility think themselves justified in preaching discontent and disaffection without attempting to explain clearly what would have really resulted from adopting the programme they recommend.

ADVOCATES AND OPPONENTS OF THE ALLIANCE.

I.

NOTEWORTHY Japanese opponents of the Anglo-Japanese alliance are confined to three men, Viscount TANI, Mr. FUKAMOTO SEI, and Mr. OZAKI YUKIO. That there are no others can not, of course, be affirmed, but these three are alone prominent, and among them Mr. OZAKI YUKIO is a little doubtful. He seems to be "on the fence," and had he not previously shown himself emphatically Russo-phil, his criticisms of the alliance might be regarded as undecided. But there is not the least doubt about either Viscount TANI or Mr. FUKAMOTO, and we propose to set down here the gist of their arguments.

Viscount TANI, speaking in the Nippon, says:—"The Anglo-Japanese alliance has been formed. In a word I am wholly opposed to it. That is not a new attitude of mine, though I am not a Russo-phobe. My views are these, in brief. People regard Russia superficially only: they do not look deeply. The same is true as to England. The present war with Russia was a result of the first Anglo-Japanese Alliance. Russia had originally no idea of going to war with Japan. It was the alliance that drove her into opposition and made her advance in Manchuria. Then we too could not remain inactive and so the fight ensued. It is not altogether unreasonable on the part of Russian and European statesmen to say that the collision between Japan and Russia was incited by England. Nevertheless the alliance has been extended and once again the firmament of the Far East is covered with darkness. Russia, even while fighting Japan, did not for a moment abandon her railway enterprise on the north of India. There are evidences that if occasion offered she would leap upon India, butcher it and achieve her immemorial policy. In the Far East it is impossible for her to succeed on account of Japan, and therefore she doubtless feels that the only policy for her is to throw all her energies into Central Asia. That is why England has borrowed Japan's military strength. She wanted to utilize us and therefore she ogled us. We, incapable of perceiving her design, allied ourselves with her. Outwardly England's navy is the finest in the world. But that was a thing of NELSON's time. Long peace has made it inferior, perhaps, even to Russia's. As for her army, it is astoundingly weak. Her military system has reached the extreme of decadence. Being without conscription she hires her troops, and these fight for their wages as a matter of necessity. Her officers are the sons of wealthy men. They regard the service as a kind of pastime, and are without education or zeal. Her establishment is paltry and in time of war she has no means of expanding it. To take such an England to our arms is like committing suicide for love of a niggardly but rich beldame. Besides England is ungenerous. She condoned the disgraceful doings of the Baltic Squadron at Hull for a million yen and she subsequently allowed the ships to pass the Canal. Had she really sympathised with Japan she would never have given them passage. (To refuse the right of way would have been a declaration of war. This demonstrates the character of Viscount TANI's information.—ED. / M.). Fortunately the Squadron was destroyed in the Sea of Japan. But how would it have been had the positions been reversed? Again in the war between Russia and Turkey when OSMAN PASHA surrendered at Plevna, England looked on idly, and when the peace conference met she cunningly stepped forward and by BISMARCK'S assistance got the better of Russia. But for BISMARCK Turkey would not have been saved. If hereafter war were to break out between Japan and Russia, England, according to her wont, would find some pretext for not assisting us. But if India were attacked she would at once resort to the treaty, and would appeal to our chivalry or stir us up in some other way. There are folks who allege that when Russia is threatened with the Anglo-Japanese alliance she holds her breath. But she is not such a feeble creature. Besides, her financial condition is peculiar, and she will recover from the effects of the war more rapidly than is imagined. To attempt to check her expansion by means of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is like stopping up an ant-hole. Just as the restless insects will find outlet, so she too, sooner or later, will emerge in central Asia or in India. Moreover the result of assuming this Asia-monopolizing mien will be to drive into Russia's arms the hungry-eyed Germany who finds her opportunity in the quarrels of others. France too may join the combination against us, and so the sum of the matter is that this alliance so far from securing peace, has thrown Asia into a sphere of commotion. The folks that shout for joy proclaim their own delusion."

Mr. FUKAMOTO SEI, whose essays generally see the light in the columns of the Nippon or the Nippon-jin, chooses for mouth-piece on this occasion the Keisai Sekai, and writes thus:—"I was not opposed to the former Anglo-Japanese alliance: I approved it. But I fail to see why it has been extended. Look back at the history of the alliance of 1902. When Marquis Iro went to St. Petersburg the world said that the purpose of his journey was to effect an entente with Russia, and the general feeling was that such an entente would be attended with good results.

Then the Foreign Office in London proposed an Anglo-Japanese alliance, which was effected on the 30th of January, 1902. This alliance was suggested by England and agreed to by Japan. Yet no sooner was it effected than Lord LANSDOWNE, announcing it in the House of Commons, said:—"Japan is on the verge of ruin. England can not witness with indifference the ruin of a friendly country. Therefore to save Japan and to preserve her we have made this alliance." (He did not say anything of the kind.—Ed. J. M.) Very kind benevolence truly! I have no desire to probe the motives of others but it seems to me that the ideas of English statesmen were something of this kind:—"Japan and Russia are drawing together. Should they become allies, England will not be able to raise a finger in the Far East. The best plan will be to anticipate Russia, ally ourselves with Japan and have her for our good friend in the Far East." Was not that their thought? Then having made the alliance Lord LANSDOWNE described it as above. The Japanese are simple folk. In the face of such obvious inferences they nevertheless accepted the proposition gladly. The alliance thus formed was expected to preserve the status quo and peace in the Far East. Would not the same alliance have sufficed for the same purpose to-day? What necessity was there to expand it? Are we to understand that unless it were expanded Japan could not be saved from her evil plight? I fear that England's proposal for extension was not prompted by any such benevolence. (The idea of extension was first mooted by a Japanese journal.—Ed. J. M.) It was because she saw that she herself was threatened by serious danger from another quarter. Prudent men do not allow themselves to be egged on to their own destruction. * * * After the defeat she has suffered at Japan's hands twenty years must elapse before Russia can again think of facing us at sea. On land she is far away from us. * * * History shows that when Austria was beaten by Prussia, revenge was freely talked of, and so it was when France suffered defeat at Germany's hands. More than 30 years have passed since then, yet now when the Morocco question offered to France an excellent opportunity for revenge, she herself drew back. Thus it is that those who have been badly hurt do not readily find themselves in a position to retaliate. Even Russia has men that see. Having been so sorely wounded by Japan they know that something must be done to restore their country's prestige; that by lying idle she will not recover her face. It is a case of the proverb "Pay off your Yedo feud at Nagasaki." If Russia once sends an army to India, the place is lost to England. It is the general feeling among the Russians that England led Japan into this war. Therefore their anger is against England, not against Japan. * * * Even while this great war was being waged, they completed the railway communicating with Persia and largely extended two lines in the direction of Afghanistan. Dreading that Russia should make peace with Japan and strike at Northern India, England, on the very day after the news of the destruction of the Baltic Squadron reached London, proposed to extend the alliance. * * * This public opinion in England fully approved, but the strange thing is that the Japanese Government and many Japanese politicians approved it also. Such folly is incalculable. What they say is that though England remained neutral throughout the war, she extended the fullest sympathy to Japan, and thus our great victory was largely due to her kindness. Therefore we should be morally wrong if we did not repay her benevolence. But was it not the main purpose of the war to preserve China's integrity and was not that the object of the alliance? England should thank Japan or account of the war, and if the matter is to be reduced to one of accounts, Japan would still have a large sum in change to receive from England. * * * In speaking thus I wish it to be understood that I strongly advocate the continuance of the old alliance. * * * The fact is that England seeks to be doubly feasted. She expects us to serve two courses of viands, but we think one enough."

It will probably occur to our readers that Mr. FUKUMOTO SEI is neither very well informed nor a very deep thinker. His allegation that England proposed an extension of the alliance on the very day after receiving news of the annihilation of the Baltic Squadron, deserves to be bracketed with his extremely misleading version of Lord LANSDOWNE's statement in the House of Commons. Our readers, however, will probably find interest in these expressions of opinion by the only two Japanese publicists that have hitherto condemned the alliance openly and unequivocally.

WAS THE TSAR DISAPPOINTED?

ONE of the very best informed English publicists, writing on the 16th of September from London, says:—"Peace has come after all. I confess the result has taken me by surprise but I believe the Japanese were right to come to terms. It is an interesting fact that the TSAR did not want peace—for I am convinced that it is a fact. One is disposed to blame the Japanese for bringing forward their claim for an indemnity since they could not be certain of enforcing it, but if they had not brought it forward there would most probably have been no peace. The TSAR only gave way on the other points because he was convinced that the Japanese would stand out for an indemnity, and negotiations would therefore be ultimately broken off on a point which would have given him the best tactical position for defence in the eyes of the world. It seems inconceivable that he should have wanted the war to continue, but it is so, partly because he feared the result of peace on the internal situation and partly because he had deluded himself into the notion that the tide was on the point of turning in Manchuria."

If this analysis be correct, and for our own part we are altogether disposed to endorse it, a great deal is accounted for. Thus the theory that the TSAR derived his obstinacy from advice given by the KAISER on board the Hohenzollern loses all credibility. The Russian ruler was in no need of having his vertebrae stiffened. He was already determined to fight, and since the least favourable version of the KAISER's councils is that his German MAJESTY recommended peace but not cession of territory or reimbursement of expenses, we are forced to the conclusion that Emperor WILLIAM did not go even so far as to endorse the views of the TSAR himself since a renewal of the war was the latter's frank desire. In answer to those who originally suggested that the position of the Japanese would have been much finer had they not asked for an indemnity at all, we ourselves pointed out the very considerations advanced by the above correspondent, namely, that had not the indemnity rock been lying ahead all the while, the Japanese would never have obtained the concessions which they did actually obtain. For supposing the TSAR to have been really desirous of peace, the prospect of the indemnity dilemma must naturally have disposed him to be yielding on other points; and supposing him to have desired war, the indemnity must have presented itself to him as an invulnerable citadel in which he could take safe refuge even after surrendering all the outworks. His programme, then, had two aims only, namely, to win a position in the world's esteem, and to silence the peace party at home. The former purpose he looked to achieve by conceding so much as to convince the nations of his sincerity; the latter, by breaking off the negotiations on a plea which the Russian nation must perforce endorse. But what a boomerang the scheme proved! For after His MAJESTY had made all the concessions necessary to save his fall in the eyes of the world, after he had given to Japan in Manchuria, in Korea, in Saghalien and in the northern seas a great deal more than he would have given had he expected his gifts to materialize, the Japanese suddenly and unexpectedly fixed him to his promises by cutting away the last pretext for repudiating them. Thus in the end the peace which his MAJESTY did not wish for became an accomplished fact, and that too on terms to which he would never have agreed had he looked to be held to them.

We strongly commend this view of the situation to our Tokyo contemporaries. In our opinion, as we have more than once stated, the greatest concession made by Russia was in consenting to peace on any terms. That a Power with such a military reputation should sheathe the sword in the immediate sequel of a series of signal defeats unredeemed by so much as one victory, signified assuredly a greater moral wrench than any terms arranged in the conference chamber. The Tsar never intended to subject himself to that sharp pain. He expected to be saved from it by Japan's refusal to abandon the indemnity demand. Thus he would have emerged from the conference a peace-lover in the eyes of the nations, a much injured monarch in the eyes of his own people. But the Japanese were too much for him in diplomacy as in war. They pledged him to various promises which he never looked to fulfil, and then they suddenly cut down his bridge of retreat. We must, however, pay His Majesty the tribute of admitting that he has taken his discomfiture with dignity.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

■ discussing the connection of Morality with Imperialism before the Ethical Society of the Imperial University a few months ago Mr. K. Ukita made the following remarks:—Among the defects of our morality is a certain formality which has the effect of limiting moral actions to certain fixed occasions or of rendering them obligatory to certain persons only. Where the outward conditions favour certain conduct, there Japanese act up to the standard expected of them. But when removed from the restraint imposed by others and left free to act as they please many Japanese are not to be trusted to do the right thing. Compare Japanese in Korea with Japanese in America and in Japan. In the United States there are many people who wish to get rid of the Japanese and hence the latter are most careful in their dealings with Americans there. But in Korea the Japanese are the dominant race and hence their behaviour is frequently arbitrary and violent. In educating it is necessary to draw attention to this weakness in our ethical system.

Another defect in our morality is its association with classes. Our community is divided up into superiors and inferiors and our moral teaching is mostly concerned with specifying the duties of the latter to the former. If the relationship of people to each other be neither that of a child to a parent, servant to a master, younger brother to elder brother, or subject to his sovereign, but only that of one member of the community to the others, our minds are without any fixed moral principles to guide them. When people are on an equality impoliteness becomes very easy to us and there is a distinct tendency among us to treat the lower orders rudely (Dōto no hito no aida wa holondo reigi mo nai to in yōna fū ni nari yasui. Jibun yori shita no mono ni iai shite wa naosara shitsurei ni naru kei-ko ga aru). We perhaps err in the direction of paying too much respect to persons above us in rank, but certainly we do not sufficiently honour our equals nor show due appreciation of the many excellent qualities of the poorer classes, neither do we respect women. We should like to see the Japanese language recast on a principle of equality between classes. The notion of things being lowered to some people and raised to others derogatory and smacks too much of a regime that has passed away. . . . Our morality is too much confined to warriors and officials and too much limited to stated occasions. It lacks universal and varied applicability. Its sphere of action needs extension.

The following items of information are taken from the Roman Catholic organ, the Koye. According to the most recent statistics the number of temples, churches and priests, &c., in Tōkyō is as below:—Shintō temples, 279; Shintō priests, 105; Buddhist temples, 1,349; Buddhist priests, 1,188; Christian Churches 173; pastors, &c., 357. Shintō temples are most numerous in the Nihonbashi district, there being 31 there, and the fewest in Yotsuya and Kōjinmachi districts, there being only 5 in each of these. In Asakusa there are 397 Buddhist temples, in Shitaya, 201. In Nihonbashi-ku there are only 2, and in Kanda there are none. Among Buddhist sects the Jōdo Shū is by far the most popular, it having 383 temples.

The following statistics relate to the Baptist Mission in Japan: Organized Churches, 38; Church members 2,312; persons baptized last year, 249; Sunday Schools, 95; scholars, 4,208; money subscribed by Japanese during the year 4,367 yen 56 sen, being an average of 1 yen 89 sen per convert; 1 Divinity School; students, 22; attendants at the Tōkyō Gakuin, 52; Girls' Schools, 2; pupils 136; Kindergarten Schools, 3; children attending, 177.

The Eastern and Western Hongwanji have agreed to work together and to assist each other in future. Notices of this new move have been sent to all the subordinate temples connected with the two great mother temples.

A new edition of Mr. R. T. Joly's Shūkyō Kaitei is announced. It is a catechism which deals with all the principal doctrines taught by the Roman Catholic Church. It has already had a very large circulation. The price is 50 sen per copy.

The two great questions of the day in the Protestant Christian Churches are the independence and self-support of the churches and union among the sects, says the Kirisutokyo Sekai. This Congregational organ, in No. 1,140, discusses these important subjects at some length. We give the gist of the article below.

The independence and self-support of Japanese Churches is no new topic, but the war has brought to the nation a new self-consciousness, and Christians are now beginning to regard this subject as of greater moment than they have been wont to do. When it was brought up at the Annual Conference of the Nihon Kirisuto Kyokai (Presbyterian) last year it was evident that opinion was divided on the subject. The Fukūin Shimpō is on the side of the progressives, and according to it there is nothing whatever anti-foreign in the movement started by certain leading members of the Japanese Presbyterian Church. But everybody must perceive that though not anti-foreign the question will affect foreign missionaries very seriously, as if it be decided to accept no more help from foreign Mission Boards the relation of foreign missionaries to native churches will be entirely changed. On the proposed attitude of the independent Churches to foreign Missionary Societies the Fukūin Shimpō tells us nothing. The wave of feeling that is passing over the Protestant Churches in reference to this question has reached the Episcopalians, according to Mr. Hayakawa Kishiro, who writes in the Kirisutokyo Shūhō (Christian Weekly News) in the following terms:—Though our Episcopal Churches are united and though various measures for the organization of self-supporting bodies have been adopted, yet the fact remains that we have as yet no Japanese bishop. The Japanese Episcopal Church without a Japanese bishop cannot be said to be a properly organized body. All races are alike before God, but it would seem that a difference is made in as far as we Japanese are concerned in our Episcopal Church. And coming to finance, how many churches are there in our mission that are thoroughly independent and self-supporting? I only know of five in the whole country. Take our Dendōkyoku, a body that represents the whole of our 10,000 odd Christians. Is it not constantly dependent on the help of our foreign brethren?

The Methodist organ, the Gakyo, in a recent issue writes thus on the organization and self-support of churches, observes the Kirisutokyo Sekai. According to our view since religion is greater than the State and greater than any nation there is nothing to be ashamed of in our receiving pecuniary aid from foreigners but when the question is considered in connection with the development of the Churches, it at once becomes plain that independence and self-support are essential. While in the receipt of pecuniary aid from foreigners the power wielded by church officers is necessarily very limited. If there be no desire for independence in a church, then it is in an unsatisfactory state. This feeling has been intensified by the new experiences of the nation during the past 18 months.

The Kumiai Churches have for a long time past discussed and taken practical steps for attaining independence and there are several foreign missionaries who have earnestly supported the movement. On June 15th last there appeared in the Kirisutokyo Sekai an important article entitled Mission to Senkyōshi Mondai no Kaiketsu (Missionary Societies and the Solution of the Missionary Question), which owing to absence from home and delay in receiving the copy of the paper containing the article we have not yet reproduced in these columns. We find that the article has attracted considerable attention, expressing as it seems to do the views of certain leading members of the Japanese Congregational Church. A reply to it from Dr. Atkinson of Kobe appeared in the Kirisutokyo Sekai of July 6th. We now proceed to give the substance of the original article and the reply: The question of the future of missions and the relation of missionaries to native churches is second to none in importance, and thoughtful men in Europe and America are giving much attention to it. The Missionary Societies are finding it hard to maintain themselves on the old lines, but very few of them have devised new progressive schemes for the future*. It would seem that our Kumiai Church has arrived at a state in which it is in a position to solve the problem of the relation of missionaries and missions to native Churches. As far as our work is concerned during the past 20 years the connection of the missionaries with it has been very slight, consisting chiefly of the running of mission schools (Saikin jū nen kan no Kumiai Kyōkai rekishi ni oite Mission Kwankei no gakkō jigyo no hoka ni Sen Kyōshi ga nashitaru tokoro wa hatashite ikubaku arya?). Does the work done warrant the heavy expenditure involved? This is a question which the American Board and the missionaries now working in various parts of the country ought to seriously consider. The first thing that we desire to respectfully lay before the American Board of Foreign Missions is our ability as a Church to take over the work now being paid for by that Board. The cost of maintaining the preaching stations now under the charge of missionaries does not exceed some seven or eight thousand yen. To say that the 12,000 Christians belonging to our body could not provide this money at such a time as the present, when the whole nation is bent on new progress and development, would betray ignorance of the spirit of our Christians. Since this can be done, in our opinion, steps should be taken to acquaint the American Board of Foreign Missions with the fact, and to ask them to withdraw and take measures for the disposal of the missionaries now in the field. Now to the missionaries in the field we would say, dissolve your present organization and join the native church as co-workers with our native pastors on equal terms. Thus will you succeed in making converts rapidly. Should it be found that our Japanese Missionary Society is not in a pecuniary position to pay the missionaries adequate salaries, then there would be no objection to their being supported by foreign boards while working in connection with our native church. We have been informed that as one of the results of this war certain business houses have decided that it will be to their interest to employ Japanese agents in China and Korea for transactions with the Chinese in preference to Europeans or Americans. That business men should move in this direction ahead of missionary societies is something of which we are ashamed. It is our earnest hope that the American Board of Foreign Missions will have the honour of inaugurating the movement we have recommended.

Here is the gist of Dr. Atkinson's comments on the above article:—We have the warmest sympathy with the desire of the Kumiai Kyōkai to become entirely independent. But we think that the scheme proposed in the article published in the Kirisutokyo Sekai on June 15th is quite impracticable. Moreover, the writer of that article has misunderstood the views of the American Board of Foreign Missions and the missionaries on the question at issue. I have no authority to represent the missionaries, much less the American Board. What I say I say as a private individual. Though doubtless eventually the Japanese Church will take over the work of the missionaries labouring in Japan, it seems to me that things have by no means reached this point as yet. When the native Churches are in a position to take charge of the whole work without foreign assistance some of the missionaries will go home, others will proceed to new fields of foreign labour and some may join the native churches. When that time comes the connexion of the American Board and its missionaries with the work will by no means have ceased, since they have from the first looked forward to this time. But it seems to me that the question of the proper time to effect this change and the means of bringing it about require careful consideration. I feel that the time is past for missionaries to take the lead in evangelistic work. Up to a few years ago, though not a good preacher, I used to go off on preaching tours, and because it was comparatively rare to hear a foreigner speaking Japanese many people would assemble. But at the present time there are so many good preachers among the Japanese that our help is not needed. There are two or three missionaries who may be pronounced powerful preachers, but they are an exception to the rule. Then so many of us are too old to compete with energetic young men. Doctors Greene, Davis, De Forrest and myself are all over 60 years of age.

To tell the missionaries of the American Board that they should join the Japanese Church and work under it is to suggest an impracticable course. These missionaries as private individuals might do this, but since they are in the service of the Board they cannot do so without getting rid of their responsibilities to it. Even were the proposed step possible it would not be likely to answer. If the Board and the Kumiai Churches are to separate, the Board had best carry on its work on its own distinct lines.

There is no objection whatever to individual missionaries joining native churches as Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett have done in Tottori. Such a step does not involve the dissolution of the missionary body by any means, since this exists for many other purposes. There is no reason why a man should not belong to various bodies in order to attain different objects. The organization of the Congregational Churches is very simple both here and in America, and as long as a Church is independent it cannot be interfered with by other Churches. Each Church governs itself. Therefore to me it seems that the connection of the foreign missionary with native churches as far as our body is concerned can present no serious difficulties. We missionaries desire to live on the friendliest terms with native workers. We can each work in our own way with the same end in view. We can unite as did the allied forces that marched to relieve Peking; each section of the Church pursuing its own methods and living at peace with fellow-workers.

We note in the report of the Annual Conference of Missionaries and Workers held by the American Board Mission in May an item which is worth recording here for comparison with the views championed in the article published by the Kirisutokyo Sekai on June 15th. It is stated that the condition of the Kumiai Kyokai finances is such that unless the American Board is prepared next year to increase their grant-in-aid to an amount unknown in recent years the evangelistic work of the mission will have to be decreased by 7 per cent. It was hence agreed that an earnest application for a substantial increase be made to the Board.

In the Kirisutokyo Sekai we find an article entitled Heimin Dōtoku, written by Mr. Hino, in which he argues that high class morality is essentially plebeian; that is, according to it actions must be the same whatever the rank of the persons performing them. Mr. Hino thinks that the traditional morality of this country is essentially aristocratic. Two kinds of aristocracy were recognized by it (1) An intellectual aristocracy; (2) An æsthetic aristocracy. The importance attached to knowledge and to intellectual development by the Confucian teaching accepted and followed by the Japanese is well known to everybody. That notable opening passage of the Daigaku traces the origin of all virtue to knowledge of one's own mind and the external world. In this respect, according to Mr. Hino, the doctrine of Confucius agreed with that of Socrates. He thinks that Buddhism assigns an equally important place to the intellect in its moral and religious teaching. To him it seems that Christianity is opposed to this view. There is perhaps no denying that Japanese and Chinese morality attaches undue importance to rank and authority, that the doctrine of the equality of all men is utterly ignored by it. But as to Buddhism many people would hesitate to say that its teaching is in favour of the moral superiority of the intellectual. Mr. Hino's essay is unfinished.

The Kirisutokyo Sekai has certainly much improved of late. It publishes many more suggestive and thoughtful articles than it used to do. One that appeared recently calls attention to the simplicity of Eastern Civilisation when compared with Western. It reveals itself, says the writer, in architecture, in the arrangement of the streets, in family and social customs; while Oriental civilisation is uniform, Occidental civilisation is multiform. Go where one will in Europe one is struck by the diverse elements that in the course of ages have been combined. The writer includes America in his comparison, but new countries like America display little variety compared to that to be seen in the historical cities of the West. The writer of the article entitled Tōyō Bummie no Tanchō (異調), to which we are alluding, is of opinion that the development of the original Japanese was arrested midway by the introduction of the stereotyped Chinese system to which the Japanese have adhered with scrupulous punctiliousness. But during the past 30 years a new current has set in and now Japan must undertake the task of moving her neighbours out of the political, educational and social ruts to which they have kept for ages.

The publication of Vol. I. of an Exposition of the Synoptic Gospels by Dr. Learned of Kyōto has been announced. The title it bears is Shin Yaku Seisho Kyō Kwan (其觀) Kōkai. It is over 800 pages in length. The work consists of a number of lectures delivered at the Dōshisha Divinity School by Dr. Learned, which were taken down by Mr. K. Ōmiya. The price of the work is 1 yen 80 sen. The style of the book is said to be very simple, being that known as Gembun Itchi. The wide reputation of the author and the success of his former work called Shinyaku Seisho Chūsaku, should insure a large sale for the Kyōkwan Fukuin Kōkai.

The Fukuin Shimpō discusses in a very clear and uncompromising manner the allusions to supernatural power found in Admiral Tōgō's despatches. The view of the Fukuin Shimpō differs entirely from that expressed by a writer in the Gokyō, quoted in a former Summary. In conversation with Japanese on this subject we have observed that there is a wide difference of opinion as to the sense in which the allusions to the help of Heaven, the Gods and ancestral spirits are to be understood. The general opinion seems to be that they were dictated by modesty of a high order and displayed that self-depreciation which has ever characterized really great men. But the Fukuin Shimpō asks, what is the religious value of the references in question to a Christian? The answer is that they only show how far Japan is from what Christians believe to be the truth in reference to the Supreme Being. Had Admiral Tōgō only used the term Tenryū, and *Shinryō says the Fukuin Shimpō, some people might have argued that this was his way of referring to the one Supreme Being, but he also speaks of the protection of the Ancestral Spirits (Rekidai Shinrei no Kago); so it is plain that he refers to those gods in the existence of which the Japanese have a shadowy belief. Though then Tōgō may be said to have drawn people's attention to religion by his allusions to supernatural power, he has also shown in a most distinct manner how mistaken are the notions entertained by the nation on this subject, says the Fukuin Shimpō. The official naval reports are therefore a kind of spiritual warning to the nation of its erroneous views and a stimulus to greater efforts on behalf of Christianity. (Kaku no gotoku kangeru to kano hōkoku wa onozukara waga kokumin no reiteki Ryujō wo bakuro sechimete, sukoshi mo Kakusu tokoro nashi de aru. Shitagatte Nihon-kai Shōri no Sempō (war reports) Kokumin ni taishite, reiteki no Keikai lomo mi-nasare, Kirisutokyo ni nukatte wa demoto no Shōri de aru.) The mixing up of polytheistic and monotheistic notions in the minds of certain persons is as eccentric and laughable as was the dress of our troops at the beginning of the Meiji era, when the upper part of the body was clad in the old native warrior's style and the lower in foreign style. Monotheism and polytheism cannot both be true.

* God's help, or the gods' help, most probably the latter interpretation is the correct one.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

A newspaper called the Jindō (Humanity) has just been started. It is published on the 15th of each month and discusses charities, social topics, religion and ethics. Dr. Miyagi and Mr. Otsuka Koichirō contribute articles to the second number of the paper. It sells at 4 sen a copy.

Mr. Ebina Danjō's article on the present state of the Dōshisha and the fate of the school, epitomized in a former Summary, has attracted much attention. These are some, says Dr. Takagi in the Gokyō, who argue that if the Dōshisha is no longer needed on account of the changed condition of education generally, none of the mission schools are needed. Dr. Takagi in No. 730 of the Gokyō discusses the whole question of mission schools at some length in a very impartial manner. He says that no fair-minded person can refuse to admit that up until perhaps 6 or 7 years ago the Mission Schools did an enormous amount of good educational work. But in recent years, he adds, their influence has been on the decline. Some of them, it is said, are only just holding on and some have been given up. (Izure mo wazuka ni sonza iro maitau suru bakari nite, naka niwa sude ni sono sonzai saye ushinaweru mono ari to iu). Dr. Takagi advocates their continuance. He thinks that the need for them is as great now as it ever was from a missionary point of view. He does not attach much importance to a large attendance at such schools. The world is not saved by numbers, but by character, by strong personality in a few individuals. If these schools can turn out young men and young women of a type that is superior to anything found elsewhere then at all costs they should be maintained. What Dr. Takagi finds fault with in the conduct of these schools is the manner in which some of them have altered their strictly Christian character for the sake of obtaining official patronage from the Mombushō. This Dr. Takagi compares to Esau's sale of his birthright. To Dr. Ebina's assertion that the fate of the Dōshisha was sealed by the death of Dr. Nijima Dr. Takagi takes exception. The fate of the institution was, according to Dr. Takagi, sealed by the action of Mr. Yokoi Tokio, the President of the School at the time of Dr. Nijima's death, when he acted in opposition to the principles and spirit of the institution for the sake of pleasing the Department of Education. The mission of the Dōshisha failed in fulfilment on account of the neglect of the successors of Dr. Nijima. It was not the falling off in the attendance that killed the institution, but the perversion of the principles on which it was founded. And what applies to the Dōshisha applies to other Christian schools. If they have failed from a Missionary standpoint, they have failed because they have been secularized, in some way or other. They have themselves only to thank for the failure. Mr. Ebina's argument that Mission schools should be discontinued because they are poorly attended is not one that we can endorse for one moment, says the editor of the Gokyo. The source of the trouble in the Yoshisha is deeper than Mr. Ebina seems to imagine. It originated in the development of rationalistic views of a pronounced type in the minds of some of the managers of the institution.

The Gokyo states that the circulation of the paper is gradually increasing. In the month of January alone there was an increase of 150 copies.

In an article on Peace and International Morality the Seikyō Shimpō (Greek Church) makes the following observations:—Neither what is called an "armed peace" nor a diplomatic peace can be considered reliable. It is when nations thoroughly respect each other's moral standards that lasting peace between them is guaranteed. The discrepancy that exists between the moral principles scrupulously observed by individuals in their dealings with each other and those habitually followed by diplomats when representing their respective countries in the council chambers of the world is a very serious one. Because of it the relations of states to each other are perpetually in danger of becoming quite hostile. It seems to be taken for granted that in international conferences moral considerations count for nothing and each party contends for its own national interests only. We do not mean to say that no etiquette or general politeness is observed when diplomats meet to discuss great international questions, but the fact remains that no moral considerations carry weight in the settlement of these questions. A diplomat as a private individual may possess and observe high moral principles, but he has to ignore them totally in the council chamber. It is true to say that at the basis of diplomacy there is no morality whatever. (Kore wa matiatu Gwaiko no Konkei ni dogi wo ohasu, Kokusai Kwankai wa mudotoku Kwankai no Kwannen yori Kitaru Kekka wa nari.) Agreements are perpetually drawn up so as to facilitate evasion by one party or the other in case evasion is desired. Though one party may perfectly understand the meaning which certain language conveys to the other party when the treaty or agreement is drawn up attempts are perpetually made to interpret it in an entirely opposite sense at a later date when national interests may be furthered by adoption of this course. As long as diplomacy and international law remain as they are now without anything to back them but the convenience of the nations using them, the peace of the world can never be assured. Till nations treat each other more after the fashion of private individuals in their daily social intercourse with each other not all the treaties in existence will keep nations from flying at each other's throats. Harmony in society is not maintained by written rules but by right feelings. If nations respected each other's rights and considered each other's interests to the extent that individuals do wars would be of rare occurrence.

THE SAN-YO-DORI.

In that pretty bit of woods which extends down from the knoll where the Venerable Archdeacon Shaw used to take his summer home at Karuizawa, and which lends its shadow to the laughing limpid stream from the slopes above, may be seen or heard, year by year, a pair of interesting birds which the Japanese call San-yō-dori, or San-kō-chō. Neither bird is ever found alone, and no third bird appears in their company, "Two is company and three is a crowd" being evidently their first article of faith. The note, or call, is peculiar. One of the pair, which in the verses below appears as the male bird, voices all his sentiments in the phrase "Tsuki-tsuki," and the mate always replies "Hoshi-hoshi." The Japanese name the birds San-yō-dori, or San-kō-chō, probably because even in the broad light of day, the sun overhead, the one is constantly referring to the moon and the other to the stars. Miriam suggests that the third light, in the presence of which they converse of moon and star, is a more romantic glory than that of the sun, even that which never shone on sea or shore until Amor and Anabel walked together in the Garden of God, and hears in their gentle note words of softer meaning, "Suki-zuki, Hoshi-hoshi," words resonant of liking and longing, sweet with the fondness and affection that are the charm of "Love's young dream."

Miriam Loquens.

In the Plain of Karuizawa,
Fast beside that baby kawa
Singing smiling down the village
Twixt the homesteads and the tillage,
In that shady hillside mori
Dwell the gentle San-yō-dori.

List, I pray, their simple story.
One, a fine and gallant duke he,
Hath no word but "Tsuki-tsuki;"
While the duchess, singing low she Gives him answer, "Hoshi-hoshi."

Mate and mate and they two only,
Never theirs a moment lonely,—
Can it be that each is jealous,
She of maids and he of fellows?—
Each with other aye conversing,
Some fond thought their bills rehearsing,
To the murmur of the brook he Whistles blithely, "Tsuki-tsuki,"
To the winds that come and go she Chirps beside him, "Hoshi-hoshi."

And the Japanese translating—
From of old the legend dating—
Say they sing the moon and starlight,
He the near and she the far light.
So they name them San-yō-dori,
Birds that see the triple glory.
Though the sunbeams gild their nook he Hymns the moonshine, "Tsuki-tsuki,"
And beneath the noonday glow she Lauds the starlight, "Hoshi-hoshi."

Thus Nippon's folk-lore pedantic
But our western ears romantic Deeper meaning may discover,
Converse sweet of Maid and Lover.
And we think we hear him saying,
Through the sun-flecked shadow straying,
Or where waves the plumed susuki,
"Much I love thee, suki-zuki," Whispers by the silver flow she,
"Well I love thee, hoshi-hoshi."

Thus it is with man and maiden
When the heart of youth is laden
With love's thoughts and fancies golden.
Thus it was from ages olden.

As they roam thro' wood and meadow,
As they dream in shine and shadow,
Thinking thoughts beyond a book, he Cries, "What moonlight! Tsuki-tsuki!"
And with soul responsive, "Oh," she Sighs, "What starlight! Hoshi-hoshi!"

But he sees no moon in heaven;
From her face his glow is given.
And her only stars are gleaming
Close beside her tresses streaming.
Talk of moon hath meaning tender;
Word of star a softer splendor.
Shy his lips, but with his look he Says, "I love thee, suki-zuki," Shy her heart, but well they know she Means, "I love thee, hoshi-hoshi."

Well I mind that happy June time,
It was just the full-of-moon time.
In the eastern sky Orion
Glowed, methought, like gate of Zion;
And the moon, in his sweet notion,
Silver ship on azure ocean.

While my hand in his he took he
Said, "What moonlight! Tsuki-tsuki!"
I with pulses wild as soshi
Sighed, "What starlight! Hoshi-hoshi!"

From those high-hung orbs descending
Drooped his gaze, our glances blending;
Whispered he, as soft as twilight,
"In your eyes I find my sky-light,
In your face my moonlight holy,"—

Drooped my head to posture lowly,
Blanched my cheek to winter's yuki—
"Moll, I love you, suki-zuki," Low I faltered, "This is s'koshi
Sudden, Jack—well, hoshi-hoshi."

All the fields seemed attar scented,
Moonbeams danced like things demented.
All the woods broke out in singing,
Heaven was full of joy-bells ringing.
From the mystic stellar spaces
Fell a wind upon our faces.

"Eden's gale and Heaven's chinook!" he Cried and kissed me, "Suki-zuki!"
Sweet to learn when Love is kyōshi!
Blushed my answer, "Hoshi-hoshi!"

In that Land of fairer River
Where they walk in light forever,
Moon is not, nor planet glowing,
Fairer shen those shores are showing.
But what saint or angel chideh
If within the heart abideth,
Beauty of that night when "Look!" he
Said, "What moonlight! Tsuki-tsuki!"
Glory of that sky when "Oh!" she Said, "What starlight! Hoshi-hoshi!"

Know they there no love's young dreaming,
Deeper joy in Heaven is streaming.
Life's best bliss is but as sorrow
To the rapture of that morrow.
But can one be quite forgetting,
Till the eternal day is setting,
If such could be, with what look he Said "I love you, Suki-zuki?"
With what shining eyes aglow she Shyly faltered, "Hoshi-hoshi?"

True and faithful San-yō-dori!
In my heart I'll store thy story.
For earth's daily toil and burden
Here shall be my ample guerdon.
All the tides of life's Atlantic
Shall not quench my love romantic.
Long as blows the Yama-buki
Shall I hear that Tsuki-tsuki,
Till shall set my life's last toshi
I shall murmur Hoshi-hoshi.

L'Envoi.

O ye men so slow to marry,
Shame upon your okotari!
Here are these nice girls unmated,
(Blessings unappropriated.)
From of old the wild birds cooing
Teaches man the art of wooing.
Some night by that baby brooky
Can't you just say Suki-zuki?
In my woman's heart I know she 'll say you fair with Hoshi-hoshi.

THE LATE MR. D. L. SMITH.

The late Mr. David Laurence Smith, who died at the General Hospital, Yokohama, on Saturday, at the age of 57, was a native of Cornish, New Hampshire, U.S.A., and in the homeland was a prominent Mason, and a Knight Templar. Mr. Smith was a Grand Army Veteran. He came to Japan seven years ago.

The funeral service for Mr. D. L. Smith was held in Union Church, Yokohama, on Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. E. S. Booth officiating. The pall-bearers were Mr. T. Herlihy, Mr. D. H. Blake, Mr. Chandler Gibbons, Capt. Ekstrand and Mr. J. Rosenthal. The widow was supported into the Church by Mr. E. W. Frazar, while Mr. N. F. Smith, President of American Asiatic Society, attended in an official capacity. There were also present many members of the Masonic fraternity, though deceased had never affiliated with any of the local lodges, and several ladies. Mr. W. K. E. Vincent presided at the organ and played the customary music. One of the two hymns sung was "Nearer my God to Thee"—a favourite of the deceased's. The cremated remains will be sent to the United States for burial.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

The annual general meeting of the Yokohama Literary Society was held in Van Schaick Hall on Friday evening, with Mr. A. Bellamy Brown, President, in the chair. There was a fair attendance.

The minutes of the previous annual general meeting having been taken as read,

The PRESIDENT said:—There is little to add to the report drawn up by our Secretary, for he has covered the whole field of the Society's activities. The meetings last season were all well attended, especially so on the occasion of Mr. George's Kennan's talk and the Christmas Meeting, and the list of addresses, lectures and illustrated papers set forth in the report tells its own story of the wide range of subjects which claimed our attention from October to April. The musical portion of the programmes certainly showed no falling off in variety and interest and we had the pleasure of welcoming several newcomers in the course of the season. The Society continues to grow, but I am sorry to say that the Committee do not find their task of arranging programmes any lighter in consequence. When the Society was started each member joined with the idea of contributing his or her quota to the general entertainment, and this feeling of mutual obligation remained a strong feature for many years. But it has weakened with the growth of membership, as perhaps was only natural, and the entertainment of members on both the literary and musical sides has been left to a very small minority. This is not quite as it should be. In a community such as this, thrown entirely upon its own resources for intellectual, musical and literary stimulus, it behoves all who have been blessed with gifts and opportunities in either of those lines to help forward any organization which tends to benefit all who do not wish to sink into a condition of mental torpor or drift into an intellectual backwater where currents from the more vigorous life and stimulating thought of the outer world seldom or never penetrate. I fear we are too apt, amid the easy circumstances of our lives in Japan, to forget the injunction, "as freely as ye have received so freely give." I am sorry the essay competition failed to attract, but it was late in the season ere the idea was broached and this, together with the subjects first suggested, accounts perhaps for its failure. Undaunted by their chilling experience I understand the ladies and gentlemen who first took the matter in hand are ready, in the event of their re-election on the committee, to take it up again and if possible will endeavour to push the competition to a successful issue. I should have liked to have seen more entries for the musical competition. The underlying idea of this examination can no longer be viewed, even by the most conservative, with distrust on account of untried novelty, while the lines upon which the two examinations have been conducted should inspire confidence as to the thoroughness and impartiality of the examiners. The competition, as now divided into four divisions, allows of any persons musically inclined, from nine years old and upward, to set up before themselves a definite standard of achievement similar in many respects to those which prevail in the home lands. Not all can hope to win first honours, but surely it is good to strive to see how close one can get to winning them. I am sorry to say that many in this community do not view the matter in that light. They must be first or else they prefer to stand aside altogether. That is scarcely a healthy mental attitude to assume in any walk or aspect of life. I noticed recently with some surprise that the Committee of the Literary Society have been charged with planning the programmes too exclusively for the delectation of the infant mind. Of course everyone is entitled to his or her opinion, and it is well that free expression should be given to all sincere opinion, for it is only by such straws that the Committee can gauge the direction of the critical wind and set its course along the channels the majority of the Society wish to navigate. Speaking recently with a very old resident of Yokohama who has known the Society from its inception, I caught a glimpse of the other side of the shield. Looking back over the twenty years of the Society's existence and recalling to memory the days of long ago, he said he had come to the conclusion that the standard of musical, intellectual and literary taste in this community was higher now than when he first knew it. How much of stimulating influence the Yokohama Literary Society has contributed to the bringing about of this happier condition of affairs, it is not for me as its President to even as much as guess at. But I think I may venture to assert that the Society need not be ashamed of its work in the past, nor with such a record behind it need it fear to face the future with assured confidence. It is now entering upon its 21st season with all the fervour of vigorous manhood and if its new committee shoulder their responsibilities as wholeheartedly and as broad minded as did the Committees of by-gone years, then the Society has a long career of varied usefulness before it. A word before I sit down as to the accounts. I wish to congratulate Mr. Frank Booth on his balance sheet. He deals with but 71 sen less than did his predecessor in office, the gross figures for the previous year being yen 1,537.94 and for last year yen 1,537.23—that is surely a bit of close finance. Our balance at the bank is yen 476.55. With these remarks I now move that the Secretary's Report and the Treasurer's accounts be adopted.

Mr. Nicolle seconded and the resolution was carried unanimously.

The next business being the election of Officers and Committee Rev. E. S. Booth proposed and Mr. P. L. Smith seconded that Mr. Brown be re-elected President. Carried.

Mr. Brown said that he accepted the office for the fourth time with reluctance. He had hoped that the Society would have relieved him this year and put another and abler man in the place, but great and unexpected pressure had been brought to bear from several quarters and he had consented to take the office for another season. He thanked them for the honour they had paid him in thus re-electing him and hoped that they would be as forbearing towards his shortcomings in the future as they had been in the past. He anticipated plenty of work, but that he did not mind. At any rate he would proceed, as in previous years, "clad in the armour of a good intent."

The President proposed that Mr. W. K. E. Vincent be re-elected Vice-President; Mr. F. S. Booth be re-elected Treasurer; and Mr. Jesse Gray be elected Honorary Secretary in the place of Mr. R. Wallace, who to the regret of all concerned in the welfare of the Society retired owing to pressure of business. The nomination was seconded and carried unanimously.

For the Literary Committee Dr. Dearing and Mr. W. S. Argent were proposed and duly re-elected.

For the Musical Committee the following were elected: Miss Hall, Miss Blundell, Mrs. MacBeth, Messrs. C. H. Thorn, B. C. Foster and R. Wallace. Mr. W. K. Vincent proposed a vote of thanks to the retiring and other members of Committee, which was carried.

It was decided to continue the Musical Competition for another year, and to hold an Essay Competition on lines to be drawn up by a sub-committee.

The PRESIDENT said that the Season would start on October 27, when he hoped that a distinguished public man now on his way from the United States on a tour of the world would be induced to address the Society; failing this gentleman, he himself would give a lecture on Maori Myths of the Creation, to be followed by some pictures of New Zealand; Mr. W. Karl Vincent had promised a paper on the Passion Play of Ober Ammergau; Mr. Satchell and Mr. Cyril Allen offered papers on literary subjects; Mr. Chas. Thorn would speak on some Humours of American Journalism; Mr. Somerton was arranging for an evening with "Maritana," for which Mr. Quinton had promised an introduction and notes; Mrs. P. S. Hubbard had discovered another of her husband's interesting letters, a letter dealing with events during the Satsuma rebellion of which he was an eye-witness, and for this Mr. W. B. Mason was writing an introduction and contributing some personal recollections of the same stirring time; Mr. Karl Lewis would give some personal reminiscences and stories of the hot spring district of New Zealand, which he visited while touring the North Island from Auckland to Napier; Mr. E. B. Clarke would contribute a paper on "Genzai Murai"; while other papers and addresses were being sought, particulars of which would appear in due season.

Some new members having been nominated, a vote of thanks to the Chair brought the business proceedings to a close, and the following musical programme was discussed:—

LADIES' INTERNATIONAL READING ROOM.

A fete was held in the Public Hall on Tuesday afternoon and evening in aid of the funds of the Ladies' International Reading Room, and was fairly well attended. In addition to a variety programme several side-shows were introduced for the amusement of the children. Thus there was a fishpond, in charge of Miss Gladys Howard, Miss Frazar and Miss Copmann; an Aunt Sally run by Miss Sharp, Miss B. Sharp, Miss Waddilove and Miss Talbot; a Candy Stall attended by the Misses Merriman, Miss James, Miss Hilaire Moss, and the Misses Lloyd Thomas, all in costume of a Dutch vogue. Tea was dispensed by Mrs. E. S. Booth, Mrs. E. J. Moss, Mrs. N. W. McIvor, and Mrs. Post, assisted by the Misses Miller (2) and the Misses Cary Hall (3). SASEHO PRIZE COURT.

On Oct. 18th, a decision was delivered by the Saseho Prize Court as to the German steamer Lydia, confiscating the hull and cargo. This steamer was captured on Aug. 13th in the neighbourhood of Okinawa prefecture (Luchu islands) on her way to Petropavlovsk with iron materials, oil, salt, etc.

On the same day the Court concluded the examination of the French steamer Quandnam (1,431 gross tons). The decision in this case however, is postponed till Nov. 15th at the request of the vessel's owner. The ship was captured on May 16th, before the battle of the Japan Sea, in the neighbourhood of the Pescadores, Formosa, by the converted cruiser Bingo Maru. The charge is that the French steamer was reconnoitring the Japanese naval movements on behalf of the Russians.

THE INTERPORT FESTIVAL.

KOBE BEATS YOKOHAMA AT BASEBALL.

The series of interport baseball matches between Yokohama and Kobe began in 1896 and up till this year Kobe has won 5 and Yokohama 4 of the events. On Friday when the teams met for the tenth year in succession the climatic conditions were perfect, and the Yokohama Cricket-ground has seldom been seen to better advantage. Betting from the outset was heavily in favour of the visitors and as the record below shows, the prophets were for once in a way quite in the right. The game began at half-past two and lasted till three minutes to four and in that time the K.C.C. piled up fourteen runs and the home nine made four. Three was the favourite number. Kobe began with three in the first inning and Yokohama responded with three in the second. After this Kobe made 3 runs apiece in three consecutive innings, and then the over-worked numeral was given a rest. The play of the visitors, though by no means faultless, was much stronger all round than the home team's, their pitcher being decidedly the better man, while we have seen Yokohama do better work during practice games than they showed on Friday, Mollison being far and away their surest fielder.

There was a considerable attendance, a large number of ladies being present, while the bright red uniforms of two members of His Majesty's Royal Marines lent a splash of colour amid the summery frocks which the warm weather allowed to be worn. The band of the U. S. S. Wisconsin was in attendance and played an excellent selection of music. After the game tea was served in the Pavilion, Mrs. D. H. Blake and Mrs. W. L. Merriman presiding. The teams lined up as follows:—

Kobe.	Yokohama.
F. E. Barto	B. D. H. Blake.
A. J. Chalfant	B. W. L. Merriman, Capt.
A. T. Hellyer	B. J. M. Mollison.
L. B. Dickie	S. S. C. W. Atkinson.
G. Stephens	P. F. G. Correa.

Kobe won the toss and sent Yokohama in to bat at half-past two o'clock. Thorn, after hitting a foul, put up the next ball which Hellyer, stepping in from third base, held. Atkinson died at first and Blake followed suit, his liner to second not coming off.

Kobe began with Chalfant getting down to first off a hit to the centre field, and a passed ball allowed him to reach second. Dickie got round to second base on a passed ball, and Chalfant reached third, but Hellyer succumbed, putting up a fly to Mollison. McChesney got down to first on a ball which was rather clumsily fielded, and Chalfant got home, followed by Dickie. Barto and Watrous reached first safely, but McChesney was forced off at the plate, on a hit by Stephens. All bases were filled when Nock went in to bat; a passed ball took him to first and Barto got home. Then Nock was forced off first and the side retired.

Jenks was forced off at first, but Merriman reached the base safely and a hit by Mollison to the right field, which Barto missed, took him to second. He sneaked down to third, and then a hit by Gonzales brought in Merriman and Mollison, Barto perpetrating his second error. A wild pitch from Stephens enabled Gonzales to reach the plate. Then Correa, being missed in the right field, got down to second but Thorn putting up a fly the side retired.

Chalfant was smartly put out at first by a bit of pretty play between Atkinson and Blake, while Dickie was struck out by pitcher. Hellyer took the base on balls, and McChesney died at first.

Atkinson began with a foul fly, which Hellyer missed, but next ball he was put out at first. Then Blake with a hit to the left field got to first, only to be put out at second by a hit from Weed.

Weed being put out at the same base the side were out.

Barto never got to first but a high throw from Mollison to first base allowed Watrous to reach second, and Stephens took him to third. Nock's fly was missed by pitcher, but Stephens not leaving first the batter was put out. Kuhn took the base on balls, and then Chalfant, with a hit to the right field, brought in two men—Stephens and Nock—and Kuhn moved on to third. A hit by Dickie brought Kuhn home. Hellyer succumbed to a fly and the side retired with three more to their credit.

Jenks failed to reach first, but Merriman got there safely. Then Mollison put up a fly to the right field which was not refused by Nock, and Gonzales retiring at first, found Merriman left at second, with no addition to the score.

McChesney opened with a hot one which Atkinson stopped smartly, but the batter reached first. Barto went out on strikes, bringing Watrous to bat. He made a sacrifice hit, allowing McChesney to reach the home-plate; then Stephens got down to first and Nock went to bat. A wild throw by the pitcher took Stephens to second, while Nock got to first on balls. A loose ball from pitcher brought Stephens home. Then Thorn, not seeing Nock advancing from third, threw down to first in an attempt to put out Kuhn at that bag. The field yelled but the next moment Kuhn leaving his base was put out at first by Blake and the side were out:—

Correa reached second and then a bunt enabled Thorn to reach first and brought Correa to third. Atkinson took first on balls. A hit by Blake to the centre field brought in Correa, but Thorn attempting too much was forced off at the plate. Weed went out on strikes, and Jenks followed suit.

A safe hit to centre field took Chalfant to first, while Merriman fumbling a ball, Dickie reached first safely. Hellyer brought home Chalfant, while McChesney brought in Dickie. The errors in the field were very plentiful. Barto got down to first with a hit to centre field, and Hellyer came home, but McChesney was put out at first. Watrous made his base, but Stephens was caught by Weed, and Nock was put out at first.

Merriman reached first on balls, but Mollison succumbed to a fly, held by Barto. Gonzales went out at first, and then Merriman being forced off second, the side retired again for nothing.

Kuhn got down to first but was forced off second; Chalfant failed to reach first, while Dickie went under at the same place, Gonzales fielding smartly.

Beginning the seventh inning for Yokohama, Thorn died at first, while Atkinson sent up a fly to centre field which Kuhn held; Blake failing to reach first the side retired.

Hellyer, first missed by Thorn at the Ladies' tent, was held next ball by Mollison at 3rd; then McChesney was held by Blake at 1st; while pitcher put out Barto.

K. C. C.	12

Weed began by putting up a fly for Barto at first, but Jenks reached the base safely on a hit past short-stop. Merriman took the base on balls. A hit by Mollison forced Merriman off second, but Jenks reached third. Gonzales went to bat and was badly hit on the head with the ball, but he pluckily recovered and went on playing, only to be forced off first from a bunt, Stephens fielding very smartly.

Watrous reached first, but Stephens put up a fly for Atkinson, which was not declined. Then Nock took the base on balls, while a passed ball sent both men a base further on their journey. A bunt by Kuhn took him down safely to first and all bases were full. Chalfant was held by Jenks in the centre field, and then the pitcher presented Dickie with the base and Watrous walked home. Nock came in from a hit by Hellyer, but McChesney going out at first, nothing more was scored.

Correa opened the ninth and last inning at six minutes to four. He failed to reach first, and Thorn met with a similar fate. Atkinson going out on strikes the game concluded, leaving Kobe the victors by ten runs.

KOBE WINS THE BASEBALL MATCH.

The Interport week closed on Saturday when Kobe won the second of the baseball matches by the extraordinary score of 20 runs to 3. The game on the whole was disappointing, though individual men saved it from being altogether a case of "bumble-puppy," and perhaps the least said is criticism about it the better. There were fewer errors than in the first game, Yokohama perpetrating 9 against 13 in the previous match, while Kobe had only 2 errors against 5 the day before. The game was down on the programme to start at 10 o'clock sharp but in accordance with time-honoured Far Eastern sporting traditions it was exactly 10.38 a.m. when Stephens tossed the opening ball of the match. Hoary convention was no doubt honoured, but the patience of spectators who had turned up early in the desperate hope of the game starting on time, was solely taxed.

Thorn, bunting a ball, was put out at first, but Atkinson with a safe liner, got down at his ease. Blake put up a fly, which Kuhn held in the centre field, and Atkinson gradually worked round to third. Weed was presented with his base, but Jenks failing to reach first, the side retired.

Chalfant opened for Kobe with a fly which dropped into Merriman's hands at second, while Dickie died at first, and Hellyer shared a similar fate.

Merriman went out at first; Mollison fanned out while Gonzales popped one straight at Dickie, which retired the side.

A miss by Atkinson enabled McChesney to reach first, but he was forced off second in attempting a steal. Barto after sending several fouls to the left field, was missed by Merriman and got down to first. A hit past centre field by Watrous took him to first, but Barto was forced off second. Then Stephens went to first and Watrous moved to third. A bunch of errors followed a hit by Nock to the right field and two men ran home—Watrous and Stephens. Kuhn died at first and the side retired.

Correa and Thorn failed to reach first, but Nock missing Atkinson in the right field this batter got his base. Blake put up a fly, which McChesney held in the centre field, and again Yokohama wrote down nought on the score.

A pretty hit to the centre field took Chalfant to first, while Dickie gained the bag with a liner through short-stop. Then Hellyer brought in Chalfant and Dickie and made a home run for himself with a hit which carried the ball right down the right field almost to the fence. The spectators cheered wildly. McChesney rapped out a safe one for first, he stole second and third, and then a wild throw from catcher enabled him to reach the home plate. Barto made first, and reached second, but Watrous was caught by Atkinson and Stephens was forced off. Barto got home but Kuhn failed to reach first.

K. C. C.	7

The next inning was very short, neither Weed, Jenks nor Merriman getting down to the first bag. Chalfant took the base on balls, but Dickie died at first. A fly from Hellyer was missed by Merriman, but Mollison put Chalfant out at third. Then McChesney being caught in the right field by Gonzales, Hellyer lost his run.

Y. C. and A. C.	0
K. C. C.	7

Mollison's hit failed to secure him the base; Gonzales was struck out, and Correa never got halfway to first.

Barto made a safe hit and reached his bag; Watrous also got to first, and Stephens followed suit. All bases were now filled. Nock fanned out, and then Kuhn having the base presented him by pitcher Barto walked home.

A bad throw by pitcher to catcher enabled Watrous to reach the home plate, and Dickie brought home Stephens, but Chalfant was forced off second. Hellyer was held by Merriman and the side retired with three more to their credit.

Y. C. and A. C. 0
K. C. C. 10

Thorn got down to first, and Atkinson took him to second, while he stole third. Then Blake sending a fly to the centre field was put out, but Thorn watching the fielding of the ball got home—the first run. Another was soon made. Weed reached first safely while an overthrow and a bad throw in by pitcher enabled Atkinson to get home. Jenks fanned out! and Merriman died at first.

McChesney was smartly put out at first by Merriman, but the stop was costly to the fielder, who dislocated the little finger of his right hand. He had to retire and C. N. Thompson was called in to fill the vacancy. He went to right field, Atkinson to second and Jenks to short stop. Barto bunting to third was put out by smart play by Mollison and Blake, but Watrous made first. Then Stephens with a fly to the centre field, which was missed, brought in Watrous and reached third himself. Nock with his usual luck had the base presented, and Kuhn had a similar gift from the pitcher. A hit by Chalfant to the right field brought in Stephens. Nock and Kuhn but Dickie being put out at first Chalfant lost his run.

Y. C. and A. C. 2
K. C. C. 14

Mollison reached first, Gonzales took him to second and Correa to third; and bases were filled. Then Thorn expired at first. Mollison was forced off at the home plate, while Atkinson failed to reach first, and the side retired without scoring.

Hellyer got down to first and McChesney took him to second on safe hits. Barto brought Hellyer home with a hot one to the left field. After this Mollison put McChesney out at third, while Watrous was forced off at second.

Y. C. and A. C. 2
K. C. C. 15

Atkinson's fly to the right garden was accepted by Nock, Blake was held by McChesney in the left field, and Weed was caught by Kuhn in the centre.

Nock with a fly to the centre reached first, while a bunt by Kuhn secured him his bag. Chalfant brought home Nock with a liner which slid past three fielders in succession. Dickie took the base on balls. Then Hellyer brought in Kuhn and Chalfant, but McChesney succumbed at first. Barto took the base on balls, but Watrous was put out at first and the side stood down.

Y. C. and A. C. 2
K. C. C. 20

Jenks began the ninth inning with a base on balls. Thompson went out and Jenks got down to second; then Thompson went out at first and Jenks moved round to third; after which Mollison brought him home with a three-base hit. Gonzales fanned out, while Correa dying at first the game concluded just as the clocks were striking twelve, noon.

The teams sat down to lunch under the presidency of Mr. D. H. Blake, Mr. W. L. Merriman being in the vice-chair. There was no speech-making, the oratorical fountains being kept sealed till evening. The menu cards bore these mottoes:—"A fool and his diamond are soon parted"; "Aim at a base and you may put out a star"; "There's many a slip twixt the bat and the base"; "He who runs may read—and write for the papers."

"WISCONSIN" V. WASEDA.

In the afternoon the ground was thronged by a deeply interested crowd, who gathered to see a match between the crack team from the U.S.S. Wisconsin and the Waseda University. Unfortunately Waseda was not able to put its proper team into the field and had to play three lads from the Yokohama Commercial School. As a consequence the sailors had it all their own way until the fifth innings, after which careful pitching and smarter in-field play kept them down. The score reads:—

THE BASEBALL DINNER.

The baseball dinner was given at the Yokohama United Club on Saturday evening, some 46 foreigners gathered under the presidency of Mr. D. H. Blake. The Vice-chairs were filled by Mr. L. S. Hudson and Mr. Chandler Gibbens. This dinner must be written down as one of the happiest functions of the week. From the very beginning matters went along with a hearty swing. The usual toasts were proposed and responded to, all the speeches being distinguished for brevity and most of them illuminated with good stories. In the course of the evening the Chairman presented to Mr. W. L. Merriman the handsome silver cup presented by Mr. de Cuers de Cogolin to the best batter in the Yokohama team—a most popular win. Songs were contributed during the evening by Mr. G. G. Brady, Mr. A. E. Cooper, and Mr. L. S. Hudson.

ANNUAL MISSION MEETING.

The West Japan Presbyterian Mission convened for its twenty first annual meeting at Arima, Thursday, October 5th, and was in session five days. Rev. D. A. Murray, D.D., of Osaka, the retiring moderator, preached a very practical opening sermon from the text, "Ye know not what ye ask," Matt. 20:22. Rev. A. V. Bryan, of Matsuyama, was elected moderator for the ensuing year. The station and personal reports indicated a prosperous state of the work, although the number of baptisms, due undoubtedly to war conditions, was less than for a year or two past. Many members of the Mission reported very interesting work in the hospitals and for the soldiers passing to and fro. Perhaps the most interesting work in this line was that of Rev. J. G. Dunlop, of Fukui, who spent some months in Manchuria as a Y. M. C. A. secretary.

The action of the Council of Cooperating Missions in regard to the scope and method of cooperation, although it provoked some discussion, chiefly in regard to the wording, was finally almost unanimously approved without change of any kind. On Sabbath afternoon, a meeting of prayer for the Synod of the Nihon Kirisuto Kyokwai, which was soon to convene, was led by Rev. Dr. Langsdorf, of Hiroshima. The great burden of prayer was for harmony and unity, so that nothing might stand in the way of the advancement of the church and the spread of the gospel. In connection with the Council, it should be noted that Mrs. R. P. Gorbold, of Kyoto, was elected sub-editor of the Council News to take the place of Miss Bigelow, who had resigned.

As usual, the location committee had the most serious time, but finally their report was adopted, which located Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Ayres temporarily at Kyoto, Rev. and Mrs. R. P. Gorbold permanently in the same station to ultimately take up a new work among students, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. Y. Jones at Shimonoseki, Miss M. B. M. Cooper temporarily at Kyoto, Miss Janet

M. Johnstone, our new missionary, at Kanazawa, and Miss Lucy I. Mayo at Yamaguchi.

The interesting announcement was made that money had been secured for chapels at Kure and Matsuyama. The first was the gift of the First Church of Williamsport, Pa. The second was the gift of Rev. Dr. Atterbury, of New York City. A promoting committee was appointed to take steps for the celebration of our twenty-fifth anniversary as a separate mission. This celebration is to occur in 1909. Our Mission historian, Rev. G. W. Fulton, of Kanazawa, is preparing a history of the Mission, which will probably be ready in time for the celebration. One item, which will be of interest to some, is the amendment of the rules giving the ladies henceforth full voting powers. Two conference papers, one on "Normal Methods Applied to Teachers' meetings," presented by Miss L. R. Luther, of Kanazawa, and a second on "How to Promote Bible Study among Japanese Christians," by Rev. G. W. Fulton, were very interesting and helpful. The Sabbath sermon, by Rev. R. P. Gorbold, on "The Love of God," John 3:16, was a fresh presentation of that theme.

The wedding of Miss A. L. Foster and Rev. Dr. D. A. Murray, at Kyoto, which immediately followed the annual meeting, was attended by all the members of the Mission present at Arima.

The Mission is to try a new experiment next year by convening Dec. 30th, and thus try to save the fine Fall days for the direct work of evangelization.

YACHTING.

Six yachts started in the race for the 39 Raters and Cruising Class at 1.45 p.m. on Saturday. The wind was very light, from S. E., and before the leading yacht had got half way round the course, the wind failed almost entirely, and did not come up again until after 5 o'clock. Mary, Maid Marion, Nina and Asagao completed the course, but the last named was not officially timed, as she was a long way behind her handicap.

	Finish.	Handicap.	Corrected.
Mary	5.43.30	Scratch	5.43.30
Maid Marion	5.52.40	20 mins	5.32.40

Nina	6.11.30	35 mins	5.36.30
Surprise	Gave up
Asagao	After 6.35, not timed

The 21 Raters all gave up without getting round the Mandarin Bluff—Tachibana course. None of the "Lark" Class started.

TRAINING NOTES.

As the Autumn Meeting of the N. R. C. will be held next month a few notes on the training of the horses may be of interest to some of our readers.

Of the older horses, Hitachi is again in training and shows no sign of the lameness which prevented her competing in the spring. Last Saturday afternoon she was in good form and covered a mile in one minute fifty-five seconds. Kachidoki appears to be well and sound as usual, but is not yet having fast work. May-mie is being hustled along in a manner which must surprise her and covered a mile in 1.56 last Saturday afternoon. Capricieuse is looking in poor condition, but she can go fast for a short distance. Violet has not been on the course lately and doubtless continues to be difficult to train. Olgon gallops strong and fast and may prove a surprise at the meeting. Suma is in excellent condition and is having a quieter training than usual, not being galloped every morning in all weathers. Daylight seems to go well, but is on the fine side.

Of the Spring Griffins seven have put in an appearance again, but three of these stand out ahead of their class—Flash appears to be a little tender on a fore leg, which must be a source of anxiety to her trainer, but the mare travels at a great pace when extended. Hyacinth, renamed Patricia, is a beautiful mare, but requires careful training as she is small in the barrel and therefore cannot afford to lose flesh without the risk of becoming stale.

Dekimas is still anxious to rush round the course, but by skilful riding is compelled to go at a moderate pace and is therefore in splendid condition.

The New Subscription Australian mares, as your readers have been previously informed, are a disappointing lot. A racehorse should be sound in wind and limb, but this batch contains several that make considerable noise when put into a canter and some of the others will certainly not face the starter with any hope of being placed by the judge. Lola is considered by the early morning critics to be the best of the lot, Star and Yahagi travel fast; Dekimasho looks as if she can gallop, but up to the present is not being subjected to the punishing work considered by some trainers so good for griffins. With the exception of Akatsuki and Bess the remainder will have to improve considerably before being worth buying in the Lotteries.

Of the Old China Ponies May-King shows great improvement, but he is an old pony and may not recover his early form. Wakashima will have to improve if he is to beat Coot, who appears to thrive on hard work. C. O. D. is in nice condition and appears to be a handful for his rider. Mark, after a summer at Dzushi, is having a careful preparation on the roads. May-out goes in a promising manner, Bamboo is apparently off colour, last Saturday he did not beat Petit Canard over the three-quarter mile, perhaps his rider did not try. The Miller looks well and is going strong. Gulyasch, it is rumoured, is seriously ill, this is very unfortunate for his owner; the pony looked like a good purchase.

The New China Griffins gave general satisfaction on arrival, but now, all the ponies having been galloped, it is apparent that some will not be of much use for racing and three or four are several pounds ahead of the others. Perhaps at the moment Voltigeur is the best over a mile and Finasseur over five-eighths. Haruna should be a good pony over a short distance. Daijobu might prove to be good: he is credited with being fast. A very good pony is Æolus and perhaps Toyo may have one or two in his stable which he will produce later on.

Of the three lately Imported China Ponies The Spirit is promising but intermediate and the ones belonging to Captain Leader are not so good.

TREATY OF PEACE BETWEEN JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan on the one part, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias on the other part, animated by the desire to restore the blessings of peace to Their countries and peoples, have resolved to conclude a Treaty of Peace, and have, for this purpose, named Their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say;

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan: His Excellency Baron Komura Jutarō, Jusammī, Grand Cordon of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun, His Minister for Foreign Affairs, and His Excellency M. Takahira Kogorō, Jusammī, Grand Cordon of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, His Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America; and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias

His Excellency M. Serge Witte, His Secretary of State and President of the Committee of Ministers of the Empire of Russia, and

His Excellency Baron Roman Rosen, Master of the Imperial Court of Russia and His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers which were found to be in good and due form, have concluded the following Articles:

Art. I.—There shall henceforth be peace and amity between Their Majesties the Emperor of Japan and the Emperor of all the Russias and between Their respective States and subjects.

Art. II.—The Imperial Russian Government, acknowledging that Japan possesses in Corea paramount political, military and economical interests, engage neither to obstruct nor interfere with the measures of guidance, protection and control which the Imperial Government of Japan may find it necessary to take in Corea.

It is understood that Russian subjects in Corea shall be treated exactly in the same manner as the subjects or citizens of other foreign Powers, that is to say, they shall be placed on the same footing as the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.

It is also agreed that, in order to avoid all cause of misunderstanding, the two High Contracting Parties will abstain, on the Russo-Corean frontier, from taking any military measure which may menace the security of Russian or Corean territory.

Art. III.—Japan and Russia mutually engage:

1. To evacuate completely and simultaneously Manchuria except the territory affected by the lease of the Liao-tung Peninsula, in conformity with the provisions of additional Article I annexed to this Treaty; and

2. To restore entirely and completely to the exclusive administration of China all portions of Manchuria now in the occupation or under the control of the Japanese or Russian troops, with the exception of the territory above mentioned.

The Imperial Government of Russia declare that they have not in Manchuria any territorial advantages or preferential or exclusive concessions in impairment of Chinese sovereignty or inconsistent with the principle of equal opportunity.

Art. IV.—Japan and Russia reciprocally engage not to obstruct any general measures common to all countries, which China may take for the development of the commerce and industry of Manchuria.

Art. V.—The Imperial Russian Government transfer and assign to the Imperial Government of Japan, with the consent of the Government of China, the lease of Port Arthur, Talien and adjacent territory and territorial waters and all rights, privileges and concessions connected with or forming part of such lease and they also transfer and assign to the Imperial Government of Japan all public works and properties in the territory affected by the above mentioned lease.

The two High Contracting Parties mutually engage to obtain the consent of the Chinese Government mentioned in the foregoing stipulation.

The Imperial Government of Japan on their part undertake that the proprietary rights of Russian subjects in the territory above referred to shall be perfectly respected.

Art. VI.—The Imperial Russian Government engage to transfer and assign to the Imperial Government of Japan, without compensation and with the consent of the Chinese Government, the railway between Chang-chun (Kuan-cheng-si) and Port Arthur and all its branches, together with all rights, privileges and properties appertaining thereto in that region, as well as coal mines in the said region belonging to or worked for the benefit of the railway.

The two High Contracting Parties mutually engage to obtain the consent of the Government of China mentioned in the foregoing stipulation.

Art. VII.—Japan and Russia engage to exploit their respective railways in Manchuria exclusively for commercial and industrial purposes and in no wise for strategic purposes.

It is understood that that restriction does not apply to the railway in the territory affected by the lease of the Liao-tung Peninsula.

Art. VIII.—The Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia, with a view to promote and facilitate intercourse and traffic, will, as soon as possible, conclude a separate convention for the regulation of their connecting railway service in Manchuria.

Art. IX.—The Imperial Russian Government cede to the Imperial Government of Japan in perpetuity and full sovereignty, the southern portion of the Island of Saghalien and all islands adjacent thereto, and all public works and properties thereon. The fiftieth degree of north latitude is adopted as the northern boundary of the ceded territory. The exact alignment of such territory shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of additional Article II. annexed to this Treaty.

Japan and Russia mutually agree not to construct in their respective possessions on the Island of Saghalien or the adjacent islands, any fortifications or other similar military works. They also respectively engage not to take any military measures which may impede the free navigation of the Straits of La Perouse and Tartary.

Art. X.—It is reserved to the Russian subjects inhabitants of the territory ceded to Japan, to sell their real property and retire to their country; but, if they prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they will be maintained and protected in the full exercise of their industries and rights of property, on condition of submitting to Japanese laws and jurisdiction. Japan shall have full liberty to withdraw the right of residence in, or to deport from, such territory, any inhabitants who labour under political or administrative disability. She engages, however, that the proprietary rights of such inhabitants shall be fully respected.

Art. XI.—Russia engages to arrange with Japan for granting to Japanese subjects rights of fishery along the coasts of the Russian possessions in the Japan, Okhotsk and Behring Seas.

It is agreed that the foregoing engagement shall not affect rights already belonging to Russian or foreign subjects in those regions.

Art. XII.—The Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Japan and Russia having been annulled by the war, the Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia engage to adopt as the basis of their commercial relations, pending the conclusion of a new treaty of commerce and navigation on the basis of the Treaty which was in force previous to the present war, the system of reciprocal treatment on the footing of the most favoured nation, in which are included import and export duties, customs formalities, transit and tonnage dues, and the admission and treatment of the agents, subjects and vessels of one country in the territories of the other.

Art. XIII.—As soon as possible after the present Treaty comes into force, all prisoners of war shall be reciprocally restored. The Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia shall each appoint a special Commissioner to take charge of prisoners. All prisoners in the hands of one Government shall be delivered to and received by the Commissioner of the other Government or by his duly authorized representative, in such convenient numbers and at such convenient ports of the delivering State as such delivering State shall notify in advance to the Commissioner of the receiving State.

The Governments of Japan and Russia shall present to each other, as soon as possible after the delivery of prisoners has been completed, a statement of the direct expenditures respectively incurred by them for the care and maintenance of prisoners from date of capture or surrender up to the time of death or delivery. Russia engages to repay to Japan, as soon as possible after the exchange of the statements as above provided, the difference between the actual amount so expended by Japan and the actual amount similarly disbursed by Russia.

Art. XIV.—The present Treaty shall be ratified by Their Majesties the Emperor of Japan and the Emperor of all the Russias. Such ratification shall, with as little delay as possible and in any case not later than fifty days from the date of the signature of the Treaty, be announced to the Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia respectively through the French Minister in Tokyo and the Ambassador of the United States in Saint-Petersburg and from the date of the later of such announcements this Treaty shall in all its parts come into full force.

The formal exchange of the ratifications shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

Art. XV.—The present Treaty shall be signed in duplicate in both the English and French languages. The texts are in absolute conformity, but in case of discrepancy in interpretation, the French text shall prevail.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed and affixed their seals to the present Treaty of Peace.

In conformity with the provisions of Articles III and IX of the Treaty of Peace between Japan and Russia of this date, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have concluded the following additional Article:

I. to Article III.—The Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia mutually engage to commence the withdrawal of their military forces from the territory of Manchuria simultaneously and immediately after the Treaty of Peace comes into operation, and within a period of eighteen months from that date, the Armies of the two countries shall be completely withdrawn from Manchuria except from the leased territory of the Liao-tung Peninsula.

The forces of the two countries occupying the front positions shall be first withdrawn,

The High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the right to maintain guards to protect their respective railway lines in Manchuria. The number of such guards shall not exceed fifteen per kilometre and within that maximum number, the Commanders of the Japanese and Russian Armies shall, by common accord, fix the number of such guards to be employed, as small as possible having in view the actual requirements.

The Commanders of the Japanese and Russian forces in Manchuria shall agree upon the details of the evacuation in conformity with the above principles, and shall take by common accord the measures necessary to carry out the evacuation as soon as possible and in any case not later than the period of eighteen months.

II. to Art. IX.—As soon as possible after the present Treaty comes into force, a Commission of Delimitation, composed of an equal number of members to be appointed respectively by the two High Contracting Parties, shall on the spot, mark in a permanent manner the exact boundary between the Japanese and Russian possessions on the Island of Saghalien. The Commission shall be bound, so far as topographical considerations permit, to follow the fiftieth parallel of north latitude as the boundary line, and in case any deflections from that line at any points are found to be necessary, compensation will be made by correlative deflections at other points. It shall also be the duty of the said Commission to prepare a list and description of the adjacent islands included in the cession and finally the Commission shall prepare and sign maps showing the boundaries of the ceded territory. The work of the Commission shall be subject to the approval of the High Contracting Parties.

The foregoing additional Articles are to be considered as ratified with the ratification of the Treaty of Peace to which they are annexed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the Japan Weekly Mail of Aug. 10th, on page 201, is given the text of the legal decision in the case of Jean Lemarchal vs. Ryu-jo-Ken, with the reasons therefor. When I read it, it struck me as a particularly interesting and important case, and I fully expected that it would attract a great deal of public notice. As nothing has appeared in regard to it since that time, I begin to think I must have misunderstood the matter. If I may, I will briefly state my queries and if it is not asking too much I should be glad to have you point out in what respects I am wrong.

The details that appear in the article are scanty, but they seem to show that a lot of ground at 185 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, was held under right of perpetual lease by the Catholic Mission, not directly, but in the name of Jean N. Guerin. Previous to Aug. 2nd, 1899, (shortly after the new treaties went into effect) the Mission seems to have held it directly. Technically this land was sold by the Catholic Mission to Jean N. Guerin on Aug. 2, 1899, although in reality all parties conceded that it remained mission property. But a bona fide transfer seems to be that of Oct. 6, 1904, to Jean Lemarchal.

In the meantime, by some process not explained, a Chinese, Ryu-jo-ken, obtained occupancy of the land, and erected on it buildings of considerable value. For the sake of disposing this intruder suit was brought by the registered owners of the lease, but the suit was dismissed, on the ground that the Catholic Mission was not a juridical person under Japanese law, and could not perform the legal act of transferring property rights.

The points where I am unable to follow the reasoning of the court, probably through lack of experience in such matters, are as follows:—

(1) The court seems to concede to the Catholic Mission the right to hold the perpetual lease, but denies its competence to transfer the same. The words of the court are as follows:—"It is quite proper to recognize that during 1903 the person entitled to the right of perpetual lease in question was La Mission Catholique de Japon. The said mission cannot be admitted as having a personality under the Japanese law. This being so, it of course could not have transferred the right held by it."

This seems very puzzling. How can a body legally competent to hold a property right be incompetent to transfer it?

(2) The court declares that there are no special provisions in the Franco-Japanese treaty which recognize the Mission as a juridical person. I have not examined the treaty in question, but the manifest intention of every one of the treaties which went into effect in 1899 is to guarantee to all the property holders an undisturbed continuance of their rights. As it is unquestionable that previous to 1899 they enjoyed the right to transfer the perpetual leases, does not this imply their right to do so subsequently, and to be recognized as a juridical person to whatever extent may be necessary? If there are no laws to give effect to this guarantee, does not an obligation rest upon the Japanese Government to provide such laws?

There is considerable property held by foreign missionary bodies under the perpetual lease arrangement. If this decision correctly represents the law this property is all in danger. To be sure, so long as the mission holds, and occupies it, no question is likely to arise, but often it is desirable to let such land or buildings. In such a case a defaulting tenant could not only not be sued, but could not even be evicted. He would become de facto owner by the simple process of refusing to pay rent and refusing to get out.

This danger applies equally to such leases as are held openly in the name of a mission and to such as are held in the names of individuals, so long as it is admitted that they hold it in trust.

It may be said that the remedy is simple. Let the missions organize under Japanese law and have the property transferred to such new juridical person. But although this can be done by surrendering the lease and making a new registration, it seems in the first place unfair to force the owners of such leases to this course, when their rights were understood to be fully safe-guarded by treaty. Besides this, it is extremely expensive. I had recently occasion to inquire what would be the cost of transferring a piece of property of 3,500 tsubo, and was informed by the court that the fee would be six thousand yen!

If I have misunderstood the bearing of this decision, I shall be glad to be set right. If I interpret it correctly, I wish to call the attention of all mission property holders to the serious nature of the situation thus created.

Very sincerely yours,

ALBERTUS PIETERS.

STUDYING THE CHINESE CHARACTERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—There have lately appeared in the columns of the Mail, two letters on the subject of "Studying the Chinese Characters." In the first letter "A Missionary" has very generously explained for the benefit of fellow students the excellent method which he has followed in his study of the Japanese script. I would like to take this opportunity of expressing my hearty thanks to "A Missionary" for his valuable suggestions.

With regard to the second letter signed "Henry Scott Jefferys" I must confess to being considerably at a loss. He says first of all that "the study of the Chinese characters is almost if not quite as useless as card-playing or chess." "For after all" he continues "what is the market price for such knowledge?" "We must compete with Orientals, etc." He then goes on to advocate some method of acquiring a knowledge of Chinese characters, incidentally as it were by studying or using the "gospels" in English and Japanese. He also states that he was able to spell his way through much of a classical Chinese new testament, by which one would infer either that he had himself previously studied the Chinese characters, or else that by reading the gospels he acquired his knowledge in some occult or "Pentecostal" manner.

To put it in another way, one might as well say to a Japanese that it is no use to take the trouble to learn the alphabet in English. It would be much better to take a copy of the New Testament and start to read it for the benefit of all and sundry, without bothering about the A. B. C. "For after all he would have to compete with" Occidentals "who have inherited abilities for untold generations, and who have daily and hourly practical use with eye and hand for what they know."

"What is the market price for such knowledge?" And what—one may also ask—is the market price for gospel knowledge?

As to whether or not it is worth while for missionaries or other foreigners in Japan to attempt to master the Japanese script (which the early Jesuit missionaries stated—and which later students have perhaps also felt inclined to believe—was unquestionably an invention of the devil)—that is another question altogether.

If it is not worth while, then neither the "card method" nor the "gospel method" is worth considering. If it is worth while, then there can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who has tried both, that the method followed by "A Missionary" is the best if not the only effective one. Of course, and by all means, while studying the characters it is well to read as much as one can find time in. If one can kill two birds with the same stone and teach and learn at the same time, so much the better.

In conclusion I would say that as a student of Japanese who has tried many ways, I would advise beginners to follow the method so clearly explained by "A Missionary" with one exception that it would be better for them also to learn to write. And while learning the characters in this systematic manner to also read whatever they can—Gospels, newspapers, street signs, "extras," advertisements, articles of clothing, cotton handkerchiefs, door-plates, bottles, pill-boxes,—everything!

Yours respectfully,

A MAN IN THE STREET.

THE PEACE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The following enthusiastic message from my brother is, I think, interesting as showing the sentiments aroused in the mind of a Londoner on hearing of the terms of Peace:

"Sincere congratulations to your noble country. Japan, though non-Christian, has afforded the most wonderful exposition of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount that the world has known. She has been great in her victories, greater in her forbearing peace."

BRITISH SAILORS AT KOBE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The British sailor is proverbially a thirsty being, and the naval authorities find it necessary to take strict measures to restrain his propensities. He is allowed to take no liquor with him on board ship, and sailors returning from shore leave are searched by marines lest they should smuggle in some liquor; but these same marines are on shore often the worst offenders. In Kobe it was said, "the men in red coats were the worst." When beer and sake flow like water, as they did in Kobe when the sailors were entertained by the city, it is no wonder that it was estimated that half of the men were in a state of intoxication. One intoxicated man yelling, "Banzai! Banzai!" or "I want a place to slope," naturally attracts more attention than half a dozen sober ones walking or riding with their student guides; but, allowing for all exaggeration, there were a great many men who were more or less intoxicated. Moreover, it is said that the conduct of those who were served with champagne, and entertained by geisha, was not above reproach.

No city in England would provide free liquor for seamen of any country, and no city there would provide students to act as guides for foreign sailors as the city of Kobe did, and as Yokohama and Tokyo doubtless did. The students and the sober sailors in Kobe derived pleasure and profit from one another; but many students were, like the sober sailors, disgusted with the ways of the intoxicated men, and were crying out against the mistaken kindness of the city authorities. If the people of Tokyo want to bring punishment on the policemen, and to add to the demoralization of the students, they can best do so by providing a practically unlimited amount of liquor for their sailor guests. For the sake of the students and the young people, and for the sake of the true pleasure of the guests, one who is interested in students would plead that only such refreshments be given as will harm no one, and of which all the guests can partake alike. To limit the amount of liquor is possible only by putting the limit at zero; and, though to do so may be a departure from an old custom that has already lived too long, it is to be hoped that the change will be justified by the peculiar relation which our students have to the guests; not to speak of other equally good reasons. From sober men the students will learn much of value; and if all the men were sober, this pleasant intercourse would do much to cement the alliance we are celebrating.

I am, Sir, Yours faithfully,

A TEACHER OF JAPANESE STUDENTS.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON IN TOKYO.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The recent visit of the officers and men of the British Squadron in Tokyo was a significant event in many respects, especially because it emphasized the new Anglo-Japanese Alliance and expressed in sociability and sentiment what the treaty put down in formal black and white. But the visit was marred by events which made the cheeks of many blush for the good name of Great Britain and of Anglo-Saxons. It is most unfortunate that so many beer-halls had such prominent and alluring booths; that dancing-girls were added to the ordinary attractions of such places; and that courtesans were allowed publicly to promenade with British officers and sailors. It is a sad commentary on the reputation of the visitors that such accompaniments were deemed necessary by the Japanese for the entertainment of their guests. It would not have been strange if such things had been privately sought out by those whose tastes lie in these directions; but it was shameful to have such things publicly and officially provided. It was sadly ludicrous that a hospital tent with its corps of nurses was utilized for the care of intoxicated men; and that the coolies and nurses had to be often despatched to the beer halls with litters to carry off the dead drunk men. It was a disgrace to Japan to offer such means of entertainment; but to indulge in such drunkenness and debauchery was a greater disgrace to Great Britain's Christian civilization.

Those who have the moral interests of Great Britain, Japan and the United States at heart deeply regret that an important historical event like that should have been marred by such disgraceful scenes.

Respectfully yours,

ERNEST W. CLEMENT.

TOKYO'S WELCOME.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It has been pathetic during the last few days to see the way in which the humblest Japanese house has tried to join in the welcome to the British sailors, but the Tokyo Municipality disgraced itself when it showed such want of resources as to have to call in geisha. The name of Japan is too much connected with geisha already; surely it was unnecessary to parade geisha in the Hibiya Park.

The Japanese mean well but it has been but a poor token of friendship for the British Navy to call in geisha to make the bluejackets play the fool.

If any further festivities are contemplated I would suggest that sailors always enjoy the company of children. If the Hibiya Park was filled with gaily dressed Japanese children accompanied by their mothers, and the sailors invited to amuse them, I feel sure both children and sailors could amuse themselves without the help of the geisha of the Municipality. The English residents might also be invited to help to make the thing go.

JAPAN'S ATTITUDE IN KOREA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Many foreigners writing and speaking of Japan's position in Korea have proceeded on the assumption that Japan is striving to absorb the peninsula, or to goad the natives into retaliating, so that they may have an excuse for sending an army here and so seize the country outright. May there not, however, be another theory at least just as probable, one which suits the facts much better, and one more in accord with the record Japan has made for herself since she threw off her old aloofness and entered the comity of the nations? The theory is that Japan does not wish to seize or absorb Korea, that she is not striving to take away her independence, but only wishes to make sure that no other Power obtains a stronger foothold than herself in this country, and also aims at reforming the administration, not by upsetting and displacing the native government, but through that government, and so by degrees to build up a firm and stable rule in Korea which will bring to her in time the same measure of the benefits of Western civilization which Japan is conscious of enjoying herself. This is the theory; let us consider the circumstances of the country and especially of the doings of the Japanese in relation to it.

Everyone knows the paramount importance which Japan attaches to the maintenance of Korea as an independent buffer State, or, if she cannot stand upright by herself, ruling with vigour and sincerity in internal unity, and resisting the intrusion and aggression of other nations for possible belligerent purposes then Japan feels, as she has always felt, that she must hold the first place in Korea, and that to do so is absolutely necessary for the continuance of her own national existence. The Korean Government is very corrupt; among the epithets used to express the degree the most common is "the Augean Stables." No other is strong enough, perhaps, and none can deny that as matters are at present the Koreans are powerless, to prevent in any way foreign intrusion and aggression, so Japan means to be first. Granted that, however, what is to be her attitude towards this country? The Koreans themselves only long to be left alone; they are quite content with things as they are, and have always been, so that to purge the country of its corruption, where it permeates the whole mass of the nation through and through, to change this whole tendency without destroying the present government, is very difficult, for it is always more easy to pull down a house when its foundations are rotten, than to leave the house intact and yet repair it thoroughly. It would be easy for Japan to take Korea altogether, to sweep away the local government, and to rule herself, more especially now that she has driven Russia back, and England has given her a free hand, and promised support, so that no other Power is likely to interfere, but we do not believe that Japan does want Korea as a dependency to herself, she only intends that Korea remains quite independent of any other country.

Now let us consider the charges brought against the Japanese Government in particular cases, and first the taking over of tracts of land for military purposes. It will be remembered that in February, 1904, just after the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war, when, though Japan had won a preliminary success there was no special reason why Korea should allow herself to make an agreement against her will, and unfavourable to her own interests, she made a treaty with Japan, according to Article 3 of which she agreed to give to Japan certain lands for military purposes, such, that is, as Japan should afterwards require for quartering troops, on which to build barracks, store houses, etc., and for drill. In June, 1904, the land which would probably be wanted was decided on, and the people living there were warned not to buy or sell any of the houses or other property as the land would probably be required by the Japanese, and in June 1905, three tracts were definitely agreed on, one outside the South Gate of Seoul, one at Pyongyang, and the third at Wiju. Doubts have publicly been cast on Japan's sincerity in this matter, it being questioned whether these places are for military needs at all; and it is contended that the amount of land is too great (three miles square), but it must be remembered that the number of troops in each depot will be large, and also that if all this land is not required the surplus will be returned, and the present holders not be caused to move at all. Japan wisely, it seems, named an amount which would be ample for her needs and if less is afterwards required no harm is done, but if little had been taken at first and more found necessary later much loss would be caused, for the price of the land would at once rise as soon as it became known that a large body of troops was to be stationed there. It is also asked why the particular tract outside the South Gate was chosen, but anyone looking at the situation should be able to answer that question, for one cannot help being struck by its suitability as a military base. It fronts on the river, up which small boats can come from Chemulpo, it touches the railway, and it lies well outside the city. On the other hand that particular tract is the market garden for Seoul, which makes the inconvenience of having it taken very great, and it is a pity that those who live there should have to seek dwellings elsewhere; but when does any nation allow the convenience of individuals, even its own citizens, to stand in the way of any public improvement or necessity, especially where military matters are concerned. The Japanese authorities have tried to cause the people as little trouble as possible under the circumstances, for in June when the lands were taken the Japanese gave the Korean Government yen 200,000 to be used as compensation and as it was feared that the native officials might detain some of it in passing, the money was deposited in a bank at interest, to be paid out by the Japanese directly to the people to be compensated, and the Government department concerned was asked to inform its nationals that the land was now required, and that they would have to move gradually as need arose, and that compensation would be paid. Through some mistake the people were informed that they must all move at once, and that the money would be paid afterwards, but the householders, distrusting the Government from past experience, fearing that the amount of compensation would be too small (as indeed it seems to be), and feeling that if they moved before the money was paid the hope of receiving any at all would be very remote, asked for the settlement of their claims first. When told that the amount could only be adjudged gradually and the claims paid one at a time, a mob went to the Home Office to protest, and when the people assumed a threatening attitude the officials were frightened (the Minister had already made himself scarce) and called in the Japanese gendarmes, who dispersed the crowd. Afterwards it was explained that it was not necessary for all to move together (a thing which should have been done at the beginning) but only those who lived on the line of a roadway, which has to be constructed first, and the others would only have to move by degrees as the land was needed for the buildings, and some might not be turned off at all—it depended on the military outlook in the future and the number of troops which Japan deems it necessary to station in Korea. In regard to the amount of compensation, it was the first intention to pay a certain sum to each property-holder but on second consideration such an arbitrary and secret method of settling the matter off hand appeared unwise so a commission of Japanese and Korean officials (three Japanese and two Koreans we understand) has been appointed to consider each case and the amount of compensation to be paid, and the adjudgment and payment of claims is now proceeding regularly. It might, however, have been wise, and made for the removal of much ill-feeling had Japan invited an unbiased foreign member, English or American, to sit on the commission, and also it may not be out of place here to mention the British plan which is followed in India in the case of all forced sales, viz:—the amount of compensation is decided by the commission, to this to per cent., in added, and the whole sum paid to the property holder. In Korea's case the same system might be adopted without prejudice to Japan and with greater justice to those who are deprived of their homes, for however fair the commission may be in estimating the actual value of houses, land, standing crops and graves (all of which have to be taken into account) still there must be a certain loss and great inconvenience in having to move and find a new dwelling place elsewhere, and the 10 per cent., extra might reasonably be allowed to cover that. The houses in the part concerned are all similar in construction, and the amount allowed for them is yen 17.00 a kang (8 feet square) for tiled, and yen 10.00 a kang for thatched houses (fields, crops, and graves have to be considered separately, of course) and the owners are permitted to remove or sell the materials of which the houses are made (which do not depreciate with use as is the case in foreign or Japanese buildings), so though the inconvenience of moving is great, and the loss from having to seek a new holding elsewhere is considerable, still the amount paid seems to be just about the actual value. But it must also be borne in mind that the stationing of a large body of troops in any district will at once benefit the people living in the neighbourhood by giving work, and becoming a market for farm produce of all kinds, just as the settlement of foreigners at such places as Chemulpo has become a material benefit to the natives,—indeed it is often the sole reason of the existing native town, and China and Japan supply instances of the same thing. Of course one can hardly expect the Koreans to realize this economic point yet; they are apt to be like the people of some places in Japan, and even in England, perhaps also the older districts of America, who opposed the introduction of the railway, did not want it to pass through their town, and so came near to ruining themselves by causing the line to be laid at a distance.

Another matter which has caused ill-feeling, criticism, and distrust is the local currency. In old days the coinage was in the hands of the Home Office, and the officials thought they could make great gains by issuing, ad lib. 5 sen nickel coins at 1 sen each, and so flooded the country with a currency far beyond its needs (and this process was, of course, nobly assisted by counterfeiters, many of them Japanese). As these nickels were a standard coin and not merely subsidiary they depreciated badly, so the Japanese, knowing that a stable monetary system is a prime necessity in any country, resolved to call in the old nickels, and to replace them with a new nickel, silver, and paper currency which is to be subsidiary, and have a proper gold reserve behind it. Accordingly in June notice was given that the old nickels were to be replaced and would be exchanged on a fixed date in August at 2 to 1. Many merchants seeing a capital opportunity of making money bought up the old nickels at less than 2 to 1, and stored them away. Then when the date for uttering the new coinage arrived it was found that it was not ready, so notice had to be given that only a limited amount could be exchanged at a time, and consequently as so much of the old coinage was shut up and the new not at once available, the money market was very tight for some time, and the distress caused considerable trouble. One may, possibly, criticize the financial adviser for an error in judgement which an official should not make, but that is all. Japan will, we may be sure, do her best to prevent the counterfeiting of Korean money, but a certain amount is sure to go on as is the case in all countries.

Another trouble which caused a little difficulty was the salaries of native teachers. Hitherto these officials of the Department of Education have been receiving 30 Korean dollars a month, which is equal to yen 15.90, the same sum as the officials of the other departments, and lately in pursuance of a regular policy, the officials in the various departments have had their salaries doubled, i.e., they now receive yen 30 a month instead of yen 15 as heretofore. The teachers, however, have only been advanced to yen 20, a substantial increase of 25 per cent., but not being so much as the increases in the other departments, the teachers feel aggrieved, and instead of complaining that the increase does not satisfy them, they proclaim openly that their pay has been actually reduced, and the students and common people, not knowing anything about the real facts, put it all down to another case of Japanese oppression. The reason for this difference in increase is not made public, but school-teaching is not considered such a responsible office as other government employment in most countries, and teachers consequently receive lower salaries as a rule, and it is probably this fact which supplies the explanation of the difference in increase in the present case.

Foreigners in Japan and Korea, hearing the tales current concerning Japanese wrongdoing in the peninsula, often explain the matter by saying that the majority of Japanese here are drawn from the lowest classes or are mere adventurers who never had a settled occupation at home and have come to Korea to live by unlawful acts of intimidation and so on, and before coming here the writer, who has lived some years in Japan, fully expected to find lawlessness as rampant as it was in California and Australia during the great gold rushes, or something of that kind. On arrival, accordingly, one was rather surprised to find the same politeness and courtesy which one who can speak the language will usually meet with in Japan, and one could not help being struck by the manifest desire of the Japanese officials and merchants, to help Korea, and this not in interviews of inquiry but altogether in friendly chats. Also after hearing everyone talking of the Korean dislike of, and contempt for, the Japanese, one could hardly help wondering at the friendly relations which do exist between the two peoples when brought into connection with one another. No one denies the many cases of bullying, brutality, and brigandage which are being continually perpetrated, least of all the Japanese officials themselves who deplore the fact very much and wish to stop it, but at present what can they do? Let the immigration of Japanese be restricted so as to exclude all undesirable characters, some people suggest. And as a matter of fact that has been done, and is done, men not being allowed to sail from Moji for Korea unless they have a certain sum of money with them, and many have been turned back, so that some Japanese newspapers have complained of the apparent injustice. A man may have a fair amount of money in his possession and yet he is coming to take up a good position and say turn out a scallawag afterwards, so that remedy is not fully efficacious to do away with the trouble. A second proposal is to forbid the Japanese to travel or live in the interior, but that they be restricted to the treaty ports, but as all other foreigners enjoy the right of free travel and residence in Korea of which they avail themselves, how can one expect Japan to forbid her own people to enjoy the same privileges as the people of other countries only because a certain number of them abuse those privileges, a fault which other peoples do at times also. Beside this a very large number of coolies had to be brought from Japan for railway construction and other works, and many of these were rough, lawless men, as is the case the world over. A manifest need is the establishment of law courts throughout the country where a Korean complainant can obtain an immediate hearing, without the loss of time involved in going the long distance to present his case before the consular court in the nearest treaty port, a thing which is usually impossible. The Japanese are now engaged in forming such courts, a thing which has hitherto been delayed partly by the war and partly also by the obstruction of the native government, which complained that such courts would be an undue interference with Korea's autonomy. Still another objection of a somewhat similar kind is that there are too few Japanese police to look after the Japanese, but in every country it is impossible to prevent all breaches of the law, and if a man intends to commit a crime, or to ill-treat anyone he is very careful to do it when no policeman is about. If foreigners who see or hear of injustice or crime being done by Japanese against Koreans will only represent the facts to the Japanese authorities the latter, we are sure, will be very grateful, and will punish the offenders as they deserve. It is needless to add that it is necessary to make very sure of the facts in any complaint, for a Korean's story can seldom be trusted, and in Korean courts the witnesses even are often (if not usually) beaten as a preliminary to examination so as to insure their telling the truth, and the tales which missionaries and other old residents recount of the stories which two Koreans will tell of the same event, or which one man will tell to two different persons, show how utterly impossible it is for a foreigner to learn the truth of a matter from what he may be told by Koreans. Many complaints are made by the natives that the Japanese seize their houses and lands by force and turn the rightful owner out. Ordinarily land is very cheap here, and any foreigner can buy it readily enough in all parts of the country, so knowing by experience the effect of a railway or other public work on the price of land in the vicinity, the Japanese buy up ground about the stations, in open ports, about proposed barracks, etc., at a very low rate and when the price rises rapidly the original owner feels aggrieved and thinks he has been improperly done out of his inheritance. Or a man is hard up, a continual thing in all eastern countries; he borrows money on a mortgage from a Japanese, and when it is foreclosed he is surprised and shocked at such an unheard-of thing. There are also cases in which the Japanese force the Koreans to borrow money or to sell houses and land against their will which can only be prevented by some backbone on their part and a complaint to the Japanese police. The badness of the native law is also responsible for much of the trouble, for registration of land is not required by law, the only thing needful is to hold the title deeds. This state of affairs is probably due to the habitual squeezing on the part of officials — that men when buying or selling land took to simply exchanging the deeds for the cash and saving the squeeze. Now a bad Korean in need of money will forge a deed with seals attached and take it to a Japanese and sell it to him. It seems all right and the price asked is paid over, then the new owner goes to take possession and finds some one else in the house. Now comes in the further wrong, for the Japanese unwilling to lose his money asks to be shown the true deeds, the real owner brings them out and the Japanese grabs them and then his title becomes beyond dispute for there is no registration office to which the dispute can be referred. The only satisfactory means of altering this state of affairs is to have properly constituted registry offices where all land and buildings must be entered, and no title be right unless on file there. Where a mortgage has been given or money actually passed it is very difficult to prove intimidation, for a man might sell, or mortgage freely, and yet swear afterwards that he had been forced to do so. Generally speaking these troubles are probably due to the introduction of new business methods and to inexperience in the use of the products of western civilization, as against a lack of both, causes which have wrought sorrow and stirred up strife all over the world, rather than a question of Japanese vs. Korean, or of armed robbery against an inoffensive people. One cannot help deploring the fact that such things happen, and denouncing them when they do occur, but it is not right or just to condemn the Japanese in toto because such things are so common in a country whose whole system is a direct incentive to such acts.

As a rule the Japanese in Korea are merchants, artisans, and coolies, and their settlements are largely self-centred, and self-supporting, trading chiefly among themselves, and buying such things as rice, vegetables, etc., from the natives. If one examines the business done by the merchants of different countries, French, German, English, American, Chinese, and Japanese, it will be noticed that all do the bulk of their trade with the natives of the country in which they live, that is their only object is being there, but the Japanese trade is confined almost exclusively to their own people, and they are very unsuccessful in selling to others. This is probably due to difficulty of adaptation in Japanese character, the same charge which is often brought against the English, and they do not produce for the market but rather make things for themselves, and if others care to buy they can, and if not so much the worse for them. A Japanese generally makes a poor salesman. He is apt to show no desire to sell, no alacrity to exhibit what he has in stock, and towards those who cannot speak his language his manner is unintentionally rude and brusque, in this presenting a great contrast to the ordinary Chinese who is always polite and obliging, accommodating himself readily to the foreign customer. Another difficulty is that they only carry Japanese-made goods, cheap but shoddy, and often unsuited to the needs of foreigners. It is, of course, right and necessary to carry Japanese wares and to bring them before the notice of intending purchasers, but at the same time if the Japanese want trade they must handle foreign goods in addition to their own, as the Chinese do so successfully.

All this has no exclusive bearing on the question of the Japanese in Korea, but there are two cases in point here which illustrate that unadaptability, and while matters of little or no importance in themselves, yet give more offence to others than things of far more real import. The first difficulty is that of the standard of time. As Korea lies to the west of Japan there is a difference between Tokyo and Seoul time of 30 minutes and the Japanese in this country keep Tokyo time instead of conforming to the correct hour. On the railways, and in all offices, Tokyo time is the standard, and the difference causes great inconvenience. Japan says, and we believe her, that she does not intend nor wish to annex Korea, but this question of time is calculated to cast suspicion on her good intentions, "for if," say the discontented, "she is not going to seize the country, why do the Japanese act as if the land were already theirs by bringing in a foreign standard of time?" "Give and take" is the rule in all successful intercourse so let Japan give up this point which is of absolutely no importance to her and only gives needless offence to natives and foreigners. In America as one travels east or west the time is altered at certain places, the standard is not fixed for the whole country, and there is a total difference of about 4 hours as between New York and Frisco, yet it causes no special inconvenience, even though all one country, whereas Japan and Korea are two. The second point is the naming of the railway stations, which are now only written in the Chinese character, with the Japanese pronunciation in kana underneath, just as in Japan itself, while the Korean reading is posted on a very small tablet in a place where it can scarcely be seen. Even in Japan, however, the names of all stations are written in Roman letters below the Japanese, and surely it is only right to inscribe the native reading of the Chinese character in a place as conspicuous as the Japanese reading, and to fail to do so is a seeming, yet needless, insult to the Korean people. The Japanese wonder why their good intentions are suspected, and it is largely on account of just such petty acts as these which continually arouse ill-feeling in the minds of all, and which a little consideration and sympathy for others would easily do away with. Japan is on top in Korea but let her not make the fact too evident by such things as these.

The ill-will which the Koreans have always entertained towards Japan makes the position of the latter in the peninsula much more difficult than it might otherwise be, though in any case it would be hard enough. Korea only longs to be left alone, like all backward nations, but the western peoples come for trade and mining concessions, or for more warlike purposes, and as Japan has always regarded Korea's independence of other countries, or failing that her own paramount influence, as of the first importance to her national life, poor Korea cannot be granted her wish to continue in the old paths; she must wake, or be awakened, and that is a painful process. No new birth of any kind is easy and pleasant, whether physical, moral, or spiritual, in an individual or a nation, and when the subject resists the rousing influence the trouble becomes acute. This is one great trouble in Korea, where Western merchants come and say, "Wake up, buy our goods; they will be a great help and comfort to you," and missionaries even are apt to do this too. Japan also cries, "Wake up, come, follow our example," and unhappy Korea groans and answers, "Leave me alone; I don't want your up-to-date things. I am quite content without railways, I have no use for rifles, and modern warfare, nor do I desire new business methods; if a letter takes a fortnight to reach its destination what does it matter," and so on. It is an old story and a sad one.

Another frequent criticism, different from the former, is that Japan has not done any reforming yet, that she has been at work in the peninsula for years, always saying that she is trying to improve things and nothing results. If Japan is sincere why does she not do away with the present corrupt government and set up a new Korean rule which would be pure, instead of dallying with the corrupt time-servers which she now uses? The premiss at the beginning of this letter that Japan is trying to effect reform through the native administration, while leaving it intact so far as possible, explains this apparent inconsistency, but there is another reason also which may explain it further. The upper classes hate the Japanese, and will not have anything to do with them; largely because they think that the Japanese look down on them, so they withdraw themselves from all intercourse with the islanders, and how are the latter to know whom to trust, and who is likely to help? They can only use what material comes to hand and do their best with that, gradually proving it and sorting out the bad. This attitude of superiority which the Koreans resent is often a mere mannerism and not intentional, but even if it were, have the Japanese no reason to be proud? Let the Koreans win for themselves a name for something good, good work, honesty, and sincerity, and then they can claim the fellowship of the nations, and equal treatment from others. It is said too that even if a strong official arose in Korea and worked for reform, the Japanese would not give him a free hand. That is true. Korea has had her chance and failed; the time has passed, as it always does, and now a man must prove himself under the Japanese, and this will be done by humbly accepting the inevitable and working well. The Koreans will bow to the course of events, but unless they work as well Korea can only become more and more a subject race. All reforms are slow, even in Japan's case. Though she seemed to burst upon the world with a sudden bound from feudalism and seclusion into the full flow of modern life, still the forces of reform had been working unseen and unsuspected for a hundred years or so, and it was the advent of Perry's fleet from America at the psychological moment that decided the course that the new life should take. In Korea to-day there seems to be no symptom of any new life and if the Japanese will not allow a native reformer a free hand such a course is at least no worse than the old way of doing, when a man who seemed likely to give trouble to the powers that be was decapitated. Japan won't do that anyway.

As was said above, the Japanese have no gift of conciliation; the officials are very careless of the feelings of their own people. Foreigners, however, receive more consideration and politeness at the hands of officialdom than an ordinary Japanese, as anyone will realize who will take the trouble to go to a government office and watch. The Japanese are conscious of this lack of tact, and really desire to be on good terms with foreigners, and if the latter hold aloof from Japan, look askance at all her actions, distrust all her efforts towards better things, or worse still, impute false motives, criticizing her in every way, the only effect will be to cause Japan to stop trying to obtain our trust and friendship. Confidence begets confidence, the sense of responsibility rouses ability to bear that responsibility, and foreigners in Japan, still more those in Korea, can do very much to help both nations to understand each other. But a more important duty for us is to key Japan up to do her utmost increasingly to aid Korea. England has held out the right hand of fellowship, and her trust will not be thrown away, we are sure. Japan's expressed aim in Korea is to purify the government (with a selfish object if you will, i.e. to protect herself), to have officials appointed to office without bribery, and to pay them a decent salary so that a man may live on his salary without squeezing, but in a country where poor relatives, retainers, etc., without limit have to be supported, the question as to what constitutes a fair salary admits of endless disputes. The Japanese have laid themselves open to criticism by paying their officials in Korea high salaries out of all proportion to what the man would receive in the same position in Japan, though, of course, as the cost of living is greater for a Japanese here than in his own country he is entitled to a sufficient increase to cover the extra cost, but not any more. If the salaries were paid out of the Japanese exchequer there would be no cause for complaint on this point, but as officials in the employ of their own government, who presumably lose nothing in advancement by coming here they should get no higher pay than they would in Japan, save that to defray the somewhat increased cost of living.

The Korean system of appointment to office is to make it a matter of trade, and as men buy their billets they feel they must reimburse themselves by squeezing, so a commission has to be paid on all sorts of transactions, parties to a lawsuit are played off against each other, and so on. The native official class, finding themselves cut off from this unlawful source of income, resent it and not being able to understand why anyone should come to Korea to try help her, they think that every one, especially the Japanese, are here only to make what they can out of the country. Among the Japanese officials, doubtless, there are men who receive bribes, and do other malpractices, but Japan's policy in Korea is that outlined above. She has made many blunders, perhaps, for which she may be justly blamed, but we are sure she is trying to do her best, and foreigners can help both countries by kindness, by trying to understand and explain to the Koreans the sincerity of Japan's motives (however much they may deplore the poorness of some of the implements used), and also by honest criticism in a friendly spirit where it is really deserved. On the other hand, as Japan has the whip hand to inflame Korean discontent and opposition Japan can only make matters worse. As, however, the lawlessness and corruption among the Japanese is admittedly very great, often incited by Koreans who use the Japanese to obtain private ends against their fellows, the authorities should make it their business to investigate complaints and to punish the offenders severely. The difficulty of obtaining evidence is tremendous, but until some examples have been made the evils will continue, and Japan should use these acts as a means of shewing that she really intends to put down lawlessness and corruption in Korea. The Japanese advisers should also be instructed to treat the native officials with politeness, consideration, and deference on all occasions, and to try to fall in with Korean notions of etiquette. It is wonderful how much a little politeness avails in any intercourse between a foreigner and a Japanese. We hope the Japanese will think of this when dealing with Koreans and strive in all matters to observe in its fullness the rule of Confucius, "do not do to others what you would not have them do to you" ("Onore no hossezaru tokoro wo tani hodokosu nakari") if they do not try to observe the higher precept "Do to others what you would have them do to you." The Japanese dislike to be treated impolitely, let them not treat others impolitely, or better still, be polite. Yours, etc.,

Seoul, Korea.

OBSERVER.

MR. CLEMENT AND THE ENGLISH SAILORS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As an Englishman I cannot allow the letter of the Rev. E. W. Clement to go unanswered. All Britishers are profoundly grateful to the Japanese for the reception accorded to Admiral Noel's fleet and it is much to be regretted that such bigoted utterances as Mr. Clement's should pass as representing the general opinion. The amusements provided for the sailors in Yokohama and Tokyo were naturally supposed to be typical of the country, and the fun put up by the geisha and wrestlers was certainly more welcome to them than any entertainment Mr. Clement would have allowed them. At all large open air meetings now-a-days an ambulance tent is considered necessary, and it is most ungenerous of him to suggest that this was provided for drunken sailors. I would suggest to him that the carriage of the British sailors has been throughout this visit and always is more gentlemanly and far less ostentatious than that of their American cousins. A trip round the fleet on Sunday while morning service was being held on all the ships would have convinced him that the British Government provide all the necessary spiritual education, and that the only thing left for him to do was to see that his own house was properly swept and garnished.

Thanking you for inserting this, I am, yours obediently,

L. WILSON.

CHINESE CHARACTERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In response to the cordial communication of your correspondent "The Man in the Street," I beg leave to state through the columns of your journal that we are in substantial agreement with the "Missionary" that the game of Chinese Characters is quite as amusing as chess. I shall be pleased to play with either of them either game any Monday after office hours. The object of my former note is clearly stated in the concluding paragraph. Thanking you for all favours in the three states of existence, I am as ever, Your servant,

HENRY SCOTT JEFFERYS.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

ANGLO-RUSSIAN RELATIONS.

London, October 11.

The Times correspondent in Paris says he has reason to believe that an Anglo-Russian rapprochement is being strongly advocated by France and is being favourably considered by Russia. Further, he says there is no likelihood of a Russo-German alliance, which is strenuously opposed in Russia.

INSURANCE REVELATIONS.

In the course of the insurance investigation in New York, the President of the New York Mutual stated that his salary was £30,000 sterling. He gave explanations showing that large sums were drawn from the company by a member of his family who had business connections with it.

Mr. Olyphant, Chairman of the Expenditure Committee of the Mutual, stated that the company maintained a confidential fund for legal expenses, of which the total amounts were known only to the trustees.

Mr. Gillette, Vice-President, testified that the solicitor for the company could get £5,000 whenever he pleased without disclosing the destination of the money. He recited various amounts that the company had contributed to the Republican campaign funds. It subscribed £8,000 in 1904.

THE "MATIN'S" DISCLOSURES.

London, October 13.

M. Delcasse, in an interview accorded a representative of the Echo de Paris, disclaimed the Matin's revelations. Asked if the revelations were imaginary he smiled and begged the interviewer not to ask him any more questions.

THE "MATIN'S" DISCLOSURES.

London, October 13.

The French Socialist, M. Jaures, in an article contributed to l'Humanité, declares it was known immediately after the Kaiser's visit to Tangier, that M. Delcasse informed the French Cabinet that Great Britain had offered assistance to France in the event of a conflict with Germany, and that Great Britain was prepared, even by a written treaty, to engage in assisting France by mobilizing her fleet and landing one hundred thousand men in Germany. The only detail whereof M. Jaures is ignorant is whether or not Schleswig-Holstein was Great Britain's objective.

The inspired German Press treats the Matin's revelations most seriously and displays great irritation at the hostile disposition imputed to Great Britain by the Matin.

It is reported that the matter has formed the subject of informal diplomatic discussion between Britain and Germany.

Later.

It is understood at Berlin that Great Britain has informally assured Germany of the baselessness of the Matin's disclosures. But the tone of the German semi-official Press indicates that Germany is not satisfied with this assurance and wishes for an official repudiation. French and English opinion, however, generally regards this request as unreasonable.

London, October 14.

The British Government does not intend to make any statement regarding the Matin's revelations, but Reuter's Agency is enabled to state authoritatively that the Government has informed Germany that France never asked and Great Britain never offered assistance. The question never arose.

JAPAN AND CANADA.

Earl Grey, the Governor-General of Canada, speaking at Winnipeg, counselled closer trade relations between Japan and Canada.

DEATH OF SIR HENRY IRVING.

London, October 15.

Sir Henry Irving, the distinguished English actor, died suddenly of syncope at Bradford, after performing at the theatre there. He was 67 years of age.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON IN JAPAN.

The Daily Telegraph in an article says:—We are happy to think that the visit of the British Squadron to Japan is helping the Japanese to forget their disappointment over the peace treaty. The Anglo-Japanese alliance is an alliance of the two peoples as well as an alliance of the two governments.

THE TREATY OF PEACE RATIFIED.

The ratifications of the Russo-Japanese treaty were exchanged in Washington today and the news was announced in New York.

London, October 15.

News has been received from Washington that the Tsar and the Mikado yesterday signed duplicate copies of the peace treaty.

THE PHILIPPINES.

The Hon. Luke E. Wright, Governor-General of the Philippines, retires from the Philippine Government on the 1st of December. It is understood that he is dissatisfied with the conditions prevailing there.

A BIG LIBERAL VICTORY.

Andrews, Liberal, has been elected for the Barkston Ash division of Yorkshire by a vote of 4,376, defeating Lane-Fox, the Conservative, who received 4,141. The vacancy was caused by the death of Col. Sir Robert Gunter, Conservative, who was returned unopposed at the last election.

NORWAY.

Norway will proceed shortly to the election of a King. Prince Charles of Denmark is still spoken of as a likely candidate.

THE "MATIN'S" MISCHIEF-MAKING.

London, October 16.

The Norddeutsche Zeitung, confirming Reuter's announcement of the 14th October, says that Great Britain's communication was spontaneous and confidential and it was received in Germany in the same loyal spirit wherein it was made. The Matin's assertions never occasioned any Anglo-German diplomatic incident.

The foregoing statement is semi-official and is regarded in Berlin as closing the matter.

THE ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE.

London, October 17.

The correspondent of the Echo de Paris in Berlin learns from a semi-official source that Lord Lansdowne told Germany in June that though no Anglo-French alliance had been concluded or promised, England would take France's side if war broke out through Germany's fault.

THE LATE SIR HENRY IRVING.

Sir Henry Irving's death has evoked innumerable tributes, including messages from King Edward and President Roosevelt. There is a strong movement in favour of burying the distinguished actor in Westminster Abbey.

THE PEACE TREATY.

Later.

Reuter publishes the text of the treaty of peace between Japan and Russia and confirms the statements published in the English newspapers on the 6th September.

ANGLO-GERMAN RELATIONS.

The Times, summing up the situation, says that it does not pretend to know how France came to understand, as with good reasons she did understand, that in the event of an unprovoked attack arising out of the Anglo-French agreement, we should support her. It goes on to say, what grounds has Germany, who disowns all dreams of aggression against anybody, to complain thereof, inasmuch as our support would only have been given in case of unprovoked aggression.

DISGRACE OF GRAND DUKE CYRIL.

Grand Duke Cyril of Russia has been dismissed from the Army and deprived of all honours and excluded from Russia for marrying the divorced Grand Duchess of Hesse.

CAPTAIN ASAOKA FETED.

London, October 17.

Captain Asaoka, I.J.N., chief-constructor of the battleships Kashima and Katori, which are on the point of completion, was entertained yesterday at a farewell dinner, whereat he was presented with a silver loving cup mounted on an oak stand made from the timbers of Nelson's old flagship Victory. Sir Phillip Watts, Sir Albert Burston, Sir William White, and the chiefs of the great ship-building yards were present.

THE DEARTH OF CAVALRY OFFICERS.

Owing to vacancies among the officers of the British cavalry, the Army Council are prepared to receive temporarily applications for commissions on probation from gentlemen without preliminary training at the military college.

IRVING AND THE ABBEY.

The Dean of Westminster has consented to the interment of the late Sir Henry Irving within the Abbey. It is expected that the funeral, which will take place on Friday, will be a great public ceremony.

FRANCE AND VENEZUELA.

London, October 18.

A French squadron has left Cherbourg for Venezuelan waters.

MOROCCO BANDITS CAPTURE BRITISH OFFICERS.

Capt. Crowther and Lieut. Hatton, of the Royal Marines, have been captured by Anghera bandits between Tetuan and Tangier, when returning from a stranded repair ship for assistance.

(NOTE.—Capt. Crowther was attached as Intelligence officer to H. M. S. Cormorant at Gibraltar, and Lieut. Hatton was attached to H. M. S. Victorious, when the last Navy List was issued.)

HUNGARY.

Baron Fejervary has been reappointed Hungarian Premier, which implies a renewal of the acute conflict between the Crown and the parliamentary majority.

PARISIAN COUNCILLORS IN LONDON.

King Edward has received the Paris Municipal Commissioners at Buckingham Palace.

CAPTURED BRITISH OFFICERS.

London, October 19.

The Daily Mail's Madrid correspondent says that the Moors, fearing an attack by a British torpedo-boat destroyer, released Captain Crowther and Lieutenant Hatton, who have arrived at Ceuta.

The Moors fired on H.M.S. Cherwell, near Ceuta, bullets piercing her funnel.

SIR HENRY IRVING.

The remains of the late Sir Henry Irving are to be cremated.

OPENING OF KINGSWAY AND ALDWYCH.

Their Majesties King Edward and Queen Alexandra have opened the Kingsway and Aldwych, London. The weather was beautiful.

The Paris Municipal Councillors occupied front seats at the ceremony and their Majesties shook hands with their President.

Three addresses were presented, including one from the Poplar unemployed, but no deputation was received by the King from the unemployed.

THE RED EARL.

Earl Spencer, who has been seriously ill, is now out of danger.

(Received by the Naval Department 13th inst. a.m. from the officer commanding the Kataoka Northern Squadron.)

SEIZURE OF ANOTHER STEAMER.

The American steamer Centennial (3,075 tons) was seized by a Japanese war-ship in Soya Strait on the 12th instant when en route for Vladivostok.

(Received at the Naval Department; 17th inst. p.m.)

THE "POBIEA" RAISED.

Admiral Shibayama, commanding at Port Arthur, reports that at 4 a.m. on the 17th the operation of pumping out the battle-ship Pobieda (12,674 tons) commenced, and the ship was floated at 9.30 p.m. without accident.

[Admiral Togo's report dated the 18th of last December, said that the Pobieda was at a point 220 metres North East $\frac{1}{4}$ East of Tiger's Tail Promontory, her head pointing N. E. $\frac{1}{2}$ N., with a list of 20° to starboard. At high water the stern deck on the starboard side was under water and the ship seemed to be resting on the bottom. No other of the sunken ships had such a list so that the floating of the Pobieda must have been the most difficult work of all. The four battle-ships have now been floated in the following order:—

Peresviet 29th June, 1905.
Albion 2 July, 1905.
Rekhan 22nd Sept., 1905.
Pobieda 17th Oct., 1905.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.) KOREAN PORTS OPENED.

On the 12th instant the free passage of natives and foreigners between Genzan and Sanjin was permitted.

BRITISH FEELING.

The news of the welcome given in Tokyo to the officers and men of the British squadron caused much satisfaction in London. All the newspapers express sentiments of profound satisfaction.

ENGLISH LIBERALS AND THE ALLIANCE.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking at the Liberal Federation which was opened at Manchester on the 13th instant, said:—"I believe that the Liberal Party as a body approve alike the provisions and the spirit of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and the Anglo-French entente. The foreign policy of the Liberals will be carried out in accordance with the spirit of these two conventions."

ENGLAND, FRANCE AND GERMANY.

The Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung says:—"We place entire confidence in the news conveyed by Reuter's telegram that England has informed Germany that she made no offer of assistance to France, or that France sought assistance, or that England tendered it. The British Government of its own motion communicated the above to Germany, and Germany, on her side, received the communication in the same spirit of confidence. Of course the communication being regarded as private, its publication is not possible, but we venture to assert positively that it is an error to allege that the German Government sought explanations from England and France on this subject. The event will not have the slightest influence on the relations of Germany, England and France."

PEST.

Chefoo, October 17.

Pest having broken out at Yingkow the Taotai of Chefoo announced on the 16th instant that medical inspection would be carried out in the case of all ships which had entered the former port.

(From the Japanese Consul at Yingkow, 16th inst.)

Pest broke out at this place on the 12th instant. Two Japanese subjects and one Chinaman have died of the disease. There are now no cases.

STRENGTH OF TIMBER.

Experts have written on Japanese woods, but we do not recollect that any one has dealt with them from the point of view which informs the article that we reproduce below. One point that impresses itself on the amateur is the variation in the rings which all woods display. Could one only know the year in which a tree is cut it should be possible to trace back the seasons through its rings. Thus,—so it appears to the amateur—a lean season would be indicated by a thin space between rings and a full season by thick spaces. Yet again the full growths might have been caused by thinning out of neighbouring trees, which had previously hampered healthy maturity by blocking out sun and air. The subject is quite interesting, and we reprint the Engineer's comments, though they do not seem to go far enough:—

An interesting discussion of a report on "Wooden Bridges and Trestles" has been published in the July bulletin of the American Railway Engineering and Maintenance-of-Way Association, on some tests recently made in order to ascertain what effect closeness of grain has on the strength of timber; or, in other words, how far the strength is influenced by the number of annular rings per inch in the cross-section of the tree. The subject is an important one, inasmuch as, if one tree has twice the number of these rings per inch that another tree of the same kind has, the former will take twice as long as the latter to grow to an equal size. Now if the quicker-grown timber is deficient in strength as compared with the slower grown, the use of the stronger timber is often necessary in spite of its additional cost. If, however, the strengths of the slow and the quick-growing woods are not very different, the former and cheaper may with advantage be employed. There being little reliable information on the subject, the tests we have referred to were made. The timber selected was of American growth, and of the kind generally used for bridgefloor stringers and for similar purposes. This fact makes the tests not quite so valuable to English engineers as they would be, had the timber commonly employed in this country been tested. For all that, the results are interesting; and it is to be hoped that other experimenters may be induced to carry out further investigations in the same direction, with other kinds of timber. The woods used in the present case were the long-leaved pine, the Douglas fir, and the Loblolly pine. The number of rings per inch in the first two woods, measured radially from the centre, one ring representing the light spring growth and the heavy summer growth of the year, varies considerably. In longleaved pine of merchantable quality it was found that the number of rings might vary from 10 to 30 per inch, and in the Douglas fir from 4 to 30 per inch; while in the quick-growing Loblolly pine any number of rings, from 2½ to 15 per inch, were found. It appears that the best conditions of strength lay somewhere between the rapid and the very slow growth; and, in the case of the Douglas fir, the maximum strength was at a growth corresponding to about 21 rings per inch, as determined on small sticks of about 8 in. by 6 in. section. This strength belonged to wood cut from the region of the cross-section of a large tree, about two-thirds of the distance between the heart and the circumference. In the case of large sticks, however, of say, 16 in. by 8 in. cross-section, it was not so easy to isolate the factor of rapidity of growth, because the latter condition usually involves the presence of knots which render the stick deficient in strength. In small pieces carefully selected, the maximum strength in cross-bending and in compression parallel to the fibre was found to correspond to a rate of growth represented by 21 rings per inch. In growths faster than this, the strength decreased much more rapidly from the maximum than it did in sticks of slower growth. The results seem to show that, for the smaller sizes of timber used in framed structures, close-grained timber should be specified, and ten rings or more per inch should be required. With 16 in. by 8 in. timber, the tests so far made show that there is very little increase in strength in the close-grained timber over that with wider rings; which would indicate that, in large timbers, free from loose knots and other defects, slow growth does not increase the efficiency to a marked degree, whereas it greatly increases the cost of the timber.

RAW SILK.

Prices are again lower, and during the week some purchases have been made as the market declined. Whether we are yet at the bottom it is hard to tell. Stock is heavy and sellers will probably have to give way still further. Reports from consuming markets are not of the best and future prospects seem very uncertain.

Buying in general on the basis of quotations, and this market looks to be in a very much more healthy condition than the Raw Silk market. Stocks in this branch are also ample, but apparently more saleable than those in the sister market.

WILD WITH ECZEMA

And Other Itching, Burning, Scaly Eruptions with Loss of Hair.

Speedy Cure Treatment.

Bathe the affected parts with Hot Water and Cuticura Soap, to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply Cuticura Ointment freely, to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take Cuticura Resolvent Pills, to cool and cleanse the blood. A single set is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, scaly, pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and chafings, with loss of hair, when all else fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of the scalp, as in scalded head; the facial disfigurement, as in pimples and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants and the anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk crust, tetter, and salt rheum, — all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. Such are the CUTICURA remedies, the purest, sweetest, most speedy and economical curatives for the skin, scalp, and blood ever compounded. Mothers are their warmest friends.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations of women, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many, sensitive, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odorless, economical substitute for the coldest, bruted liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: S. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 2-28, Chancery Lane, London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. Foreign Agents Everywhere.

It is said that the ship arrived at Yokohama on Oct. 13th and landed there seven thousand bags of Tonkin rice and that three thousand bags were removed to the rice warehouse at Fukagawa, Tokyo, belonging to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha. Consequently, the Fukagawa police segregated the godown and are carrying out the usual disinfecting measures, thinking that the origin of the contagion in Kobe might be traced to this cargo.

ADMIRAL TOGO'S REPORT.

Admiral Togo's report to the Emperor when he was received in audience on the 22nd instant, was as follows:—

Since in February of last year the United Squadrons, in obedience to the Imperial commands, went out to battle, a year and a half has passed, and in the combats on sea and on shore the Imperial forces never once failed to win victory. Peace has now been restored, and we, Your Majesty's subjects, having concluded our service, have the honour of returning in triumph under the Imperial Flag. We are always profoundly sensible that these results are due to Your Majesty's virtues.

When first the Combined Fleet opened the combat, the plan of procedure, as directed by Your Majesty with due regard to the condition of the Army and the Navy and to the objects of the war, was to shut the enemy into the Port Arthur region and deprive him of any opportunity to proceed to the fortress of Vladivostock. Therefore attacking him forthwith at Port Arthur and Chemulpo and engaging thereafter in several offensive actions, we gradually broke his strength, and by repeated endeavours to blockade him in port as well as by the use of floating mines, we sought to circumscribe his sphere of action. A squadron was also kept constantly in the Korean Straits to obstruct their passage, and while watching the enemy in Vladivostock, to form at the same time the second line of Port Arthur's investment. During the first period of the war the enemy, taking advantage of the natural situation, steadily adopted a policy of defence, and in repeated assaults our forces were unable to assure full success. But in the middle of August his fleet emerged from Port Arthur and attempted to escape to Vladivostock, the result being a battle in the Yellow Sea and off Ulsan. Thus, without prevision on our part his strategy was broken and the purpose of our plan was in the main achieved. Thereafter the fight on land progressed, and the untiring attacks of the Army against the rear of the fortress concerting with the blockade in front, resulted in the annihilation of the main part of the enemy's fleet at the foot of the stronghold. Up to this time the operations had been necessarily of a gradual nature, achieving consecutively small results, and thus the attacks had extended over nearly ten months. That was the period involving the heaviest casualties among loyal officers and men who had devoted heart and hand to the work, and had toiled with all their ability and all their courage, and involving also no small loss of ships. But the issue of the fight was now for the first time made clear, and an earnest was given of the victory subsequently won in the Sea of Japan.

The opening of the new year saw the combat enter its second phase. Our Squadrons prepared themselves to meet the enemy's second fleet, and at the same time undertook the blockade of the Russian Maritime Province, thus cutting off his source of military supplies. A squadron was also despatched to the South Seas to threaten his line of communications. There resulted the capture of over thirty steamers in the straits of Tsushima, Tsugaru, Soya and Kunajiri. In early summer, namely the month of May, the enemy's second fleet made its appearance in our neighbouring seas, and we adopted a waiting policy, assembling our ships in the Korean Straits and holding ourselves ready to strike. Thereafter by the help of Heaven the valiant efforts of our officers and men achieved success, and a battle in the Sea of Japan swept the enemy's shadow off the sea, bringing that stage of the war to an end.

Thus in name and in reality the command of the Sea of Japan fell to Japan. The war entered its third phase and our duties became much lighter. Cooperating with the army in the attack on Saghalien, we performed our share of the duty, losing scarcely a man. We also made armed descents upon the enemy's northern shores, and continued the effective blockade of his ports until the end of the war.

Thus it may be said in sum that during the first period of the war the United Fleet determined the situation; during the second period it achieved victory, and during the third period it gathered the results. There were degrees of urgency and of difficulty, but on the whole the war proceeded in regular sequence of offensive movements, until the issue to-day witnessed was achieved. The ships have now assembled in Tokyo Bay to celebrate the triumph. They number over 170. Some vessels were lost, but considering the additions made to our Navy in the form of captures from the enemy, our force to-day is not inferior to what it was on the eve of the war, which fact Your Majesty's servants regard as a great honour. I rejoice exceedingly that in consequence of the fine results achieved by the Army and the no small assistance we derived from its strength; in consequence of the excellent arrangements of the various naval offices, their activity and the aid rendered by all Government departments, the sea fight proceeded satisfactorily.

With the utmost reverence I present this account of the course of the war and have the honour to report the outcome of the responsibilities imposed on me by the Imperial command, (Dated) 22nd October, 1905.

(Signed) TOGO HEIHACHIRO."

After listening to this report His Majesty addressed the following words to Admiral Togo:—

"It is universally recognised at home and abroad that the United Fleet of which you have been in chief command, well overcame all difficulties and performed unprecedented deeds.

Hearing from you the direct recital of the course of the war, Our admiration for the valour and energy of Our officers and seamen is deepened.

Be careful of your well-being."

The Emperor on this occasion wore a naval uniform for the first time.

With reference to Admiral Togo's statement that the United Fleet emerged from the combat with undiminished strength, the facts are that the war-ships which took part in the fighting numbered 76, with a total tonnage of 274,184 tons, in addition to which there were 14 auxiliary cruisers, 85 torpedo-craft, and 21 auxiliary gun-boats. Out of this total 12 vessels, representing 46,025 tons, were lost, and 14 representing 114,653 tons were captured, so that the Navy's gain in point of displacement was 68,628 tons.

The Emperor's words to Admiral Togo are certainly remarkable for brevity. From an Occidental point of view they almost err in that respect. But His Majesty had already paid full tribute to the great achievements of his brave fleet, and it is not the Imperial custom to be lavish of language. Possibly the concluding sentence of the message may sound strange in foreign ears. It is not what a European Sovereign would say under such circumstances. The meaning such a behest conveys to Japanese ears is that the Mikado declares his own solicitude for the health and strength of the officers and sea-men of his Navy, since their splendid deeds have shown them to be of such value to their country. There is a measure of gracious familiarity in the expression, and it thus gains special importance for Japanese ears.

Admiral Togo's report is marked by all the modesty habitual to him. He offers a most unequivocal tribute to the Army and acknowledges, in effect, that the successes achieved by the troops on shore contributed materially to the result on sea. He also speaks with just admiration of the admirable work of the various administrative offices which, by their foresight, energy and skill in organization did much to secure victory. On the whole the report is worthy of the gallant and self-effacing hero.

THE CROWDS AND THE TRAFFIC.

Partial figures are published indicating the immensity of the concourse of people who went out to see the Naval Review. Thus it is mentioned that at Shimbashi station the number of tickets sold between 4.30 p.m. on the 22nd and noon on the 23rd was 125,000. We can well imagine that such was the case, but without being actual eye-witnesses we could not have imagined the thoroughness of the dislocation that overtook the railway traffic. The Japanese have proved by their exploits in the war that they are highly endowed with organizing capacity, but most assuredly the traffic management on the State Railways has never suggested any such endowment. The Naval Review, it is true, was an altogether exceptional occasion; an occasion not occurring twice in the life-time of a generation. To take it as a normal test would be unfair. But the railway authorities must have known perfectly well that it would be an exceptional occasion, and they did know, for they announced beforehand that throughout the whole of the 23rd trains would be despatched from Yokohama and Tokyo respectively at intervals of 20 minutes. So defective, however, were the arrangements for carrying out that programme that when the afternoon arrived passengers found themselves compelled to wait for more than the ordinary interval of an hour, and as for the accommodation, it was quite ludicrously inadequate. At Kawasaki, for example, a densely packed crowd stood all along the platform for hour after hour vainly expecting the arrival of a train to carry them away, and it is a fact that some of them had to remain in this expectant attitude from noon until 7 p.m. Of course the rush and crush to enter a train when one arrived were something terrible. A fatal result is recorded in one case, a student of the Waseda University having been thrown down between the platform and the carriages at Tsurumi and cut to pieces by the wheels. The Railway Authorities have been under the sword of the severest public censure for the past twenty years, but they have not yet risen to the level of their responsibilities. They probably made a great struggle on the 23rd to serve the public satisfactorily, yet anything more defective than the result is scarcely imaginable.

How many hundreds of thousands viewed the spectacle from the shore, it is impossible to estimate. There seemed to be an immeasurable crowd. Every available space along the sea-coast was utilized for setting up platforms in the rough and ready way of Japan, and every one of these was packed with eager observers. So far as the necessarily limited range of one pair of eyes could carry, there was not the smallest evidence of disorder. Even at the crowded railway stations and in tramcars which appeared to be filled to three or four times the normal limits of their carrying capacity, good humour and mutual helpfulness were the universal rule. One could not but reflect what rudenesses would have been perpetrated and how heavily the atmosphere would have been loaded with anathemas under similar circumstances in Europe or America. As the Naval Authorities had predicted, the best view of the spectacle was obtainable from the vicinity of Tsurumi. At 9 p.m. nothing could exceed the brilliancy of the spectacle presented by the illuminated war-ships as seen from that region.

ADMIRAL TOGO AND ADMIRAL NOEL.

Japanese newspapers give amusing accounts of the meeting of Admiral Togo and Vice-Admiral Noel at Governor Sufu's dinner party on the 20th. The Japanese Admiral was engaged in conversation with Mr. and Mrs. George Barclay when Sir Gerard Noel arrived, and the two men at once advanced to meet each other. But Togo did full justice to his reputation for shyness and silence. The only sentence of English he appears to have perpetrated was, "I will see you again to-morrow," and the reporters say that his mien was as that of a sensitive child which suddenly finds itself in the society of grown-ups. The illusion became even more marked when Admiral Togo had to conduct Lady MacDonald to the dining room, for he appeared quite a pigmy by her side, and so far from leading her seemed to be led by her. Throughout the banquet the Admiral maintained his mood of extreme reserve, even Mrs. Barclay's brilliant conversational powers failing to strike a responsive spark. In fact his great achievements do not appear to have elated him in the smallest degree. He remains the same "Togo the silent" as ever, his mien in society not differing one whit from his mien on the quarter-deck of his flag-ship. The Niroku Shimpō, speaking of these things, recalls the saying of Confucius:—Kinsli wa seiloku arite yobo gu naru ga gotoshi (The great man possesses capacity but has the face of a fool), and recall also the fact that Saigo Takamori, whom Togo served in the latter's very early days, used to introduce him with the phrase Kore wa Togo Heihachiro to mosu baka-mono de gozari-masu (This is the foolish Togo Heihachiro). The same qualities of reticence and gaucherie in society were shown by Saigo himself, and the Niroku says that these words of Saigo's show that he instinctively recognised a brother-genius in Togo. Men of this type maintain in the presence of the greatest peril the same imperturbable mind and demeanour that mark their daily intercourse. The Niroku also relates that when, on the eve of the battle in the Sea of Japan, the Minister of the State for the Navy conveyed to Togo an earnest message from the Throne urging the importance of the occasion and the necessity for a supreme effort, Togo's answer was, Yoroshiku go anshin arasraruyo ni ose agerare yo. Tatakai wa tada kisen ni sōrō. Heihachiro kanarazu kisen wo seishite goran ni ire mosu beshi (Pray ask His Majesty to rest assured. Battle is merely a matter of opportunity. You shall see that Heihachiro will not forfeit the occasion).

The ball given in Yokohama on Friday evening (Oct. 20) in honour of Admiral and Lady Noel by H. E. Governor Sufu was a very brilliant affair. The spacious salon of the Oriental Palace Hotel was tastefully decorated, the inter-crossed flags of Great Britain and Japan forming a principal feature in the colour scheme. The Governor's party, which arrived about half past nine, included H. E. Governor Sufu, Madame Sufu, Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, Lady Noel, Miss Noel, Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Minister, and Lady MacDonald, Mr. and Mrs. G. Barclay, Mr. J. Carey Hall, H. B. M.'s Consul-General, and Mrs. Hall, Mayor Ichihara and Mrs. Ichihara, the staff officers of the respective Admirals and others. Hardly had they entered the building when cheering from the Bund told of the approach of Admiral Togo. The hero of Tsushima, attired in the plainest of uniforms, had a hearty reception from the assembled guests, and despite his efforts to efface himself as much as possible was the centre of observation until he managed to effect an escape soon after supper. The foreign commercial communities of Tokyo and Yokohama were well represented among the guests, while all the Consular corps were present. Many of the British officers wore the decorations which have been bestowed upon them by the Emperor of Japan, and naturally all the British, American and Japanese naval men were in uniform.

At supper Governor Sufu rose and said that the entertainment given that evening in honour of Admiral Noel and Lady Noel fell on the eve of the centenary of the battle of Trafalgar and he took advantage of the occasion to ask his guests to rise and drink to the memory of Nelson. The toast was received with great cheering and when it had subsided, cheers were raised for Admiral Togo. Needless to say these were given right heartily. About half past eleven Admiral Togo left the scene, and he was followed by Admiral Noel and his party. Both these gallant seamen were cheered on their departure. Dancing meanwhile was resumed and continued till a late hour.

A NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENT.

A correspondent of the Petit Parisien, by name Gaston Richard, recently sent to that journal an account of an alleged interview with President Roosevelt. He wrote over the signature "Legadère," and he attributed to the President statements about the war and about the peace conference which it would certainly have been most unwise for Mr. Roosevelt to make. Naturally this interesting interview was telegraphed to American newspapers, and the result was that the President's private secretary immediately addressed the following to Mr. Gaston Richard:—

Gaston Richard, Hotel Lafayette, New York, N. Y.:

The President directs me to say to you that the alleged interview with him published in this morning's papers is not only an absolute fabrication, wholly without basis of truth, but that your conduct in obtaining permission to see him under false pretenses is thoroughly dishonorable.

When you came to see the President you informed him that you were the grandson of Marshal Augereau; that you had been at the Battle of Mukden with the Russian army and with the Japanese army afterward; that you understood thoroughly that you could have no interview of any kind, and that you simply wished to pay respects to him. Under these circumstances the President received you and listened to your account of your experiences with the Japanese and Russians, and spoke to you also of the deeds of Marshal Augereau and of Napoleon's other generals.

The President had no conversation with you about the terms of peace, and your account of your alleged interview with him is a fabrication from beginning to end, without any foundation in fact, and both your untruthfulness and your obtaining permission to see him under false pretenses the President considers highly dishonorable.

WILLIAM LOEB, Jr., Secretary.

The Outlook, commenting on the above, observes that a liar is no less a liar because he prints his lie in a newspaper; on the contrary, he is probably the worst of liars since he lies for hire. "He ought to be dubbed a liar and excluded from the society of all honourable men, and a journal which wittingly and habitually lies ought to be excluded from all honourable homes." On the other hand, this habit of lying has become so habitual among journalists—vide the recent case where the Tokyo correspondent of an English journal sent home an account of the Battle of the Sea of Japan as witnessed by a bogus "correspondent with the Fleet"—this habit of lying has become so habitual that people are apt to count the press as universally tarred with the brush of falsehood, thus indirectly impugning the good faith of men like Sir Donald McKenzie Wallace, Dr. Morrison and Mr. George Kennan. Unquestionably the remedy is to be found in some exercise of discrimination on the part of the public, and this brings us direct to the action of the Japanese in their treatment of newspaper correspondents. They did not manage that part of the war well, and where they erred, we venture to think, was in hesitating to discriminate. They have always hesitated to discriminate where foreigners are concerned. Probably the explanation is that early experience taught them the danger of discrimination: what they did for one, that they were immediately required to do for others, and generally their right of free selection could not be exercised in the face of diplomatic pressure. One might reasonably suppose, however, that they would have acquired by this time an effective sense of their own privileges and power, but certainly their practice during the war did not suggest that they had acquired such a sense. All the newspaper men were treated exactly alike, the ragtag and bobtail being placed on the same level with the recognised elite of the profession. It was the least troublesome method, but assuredly not the best.

BRITISH SMARINNESS.

In view of the impetus that will be given to trade in Japan now that peace has been restored, it may be well to correct the frequent and groundless accusation often made against the English manufacturer that he cannot compete with his American rival in the way of rapid delivery of machinery, this inability being ascribed to the British works not being up-to-date. A notable instance of what the British manufacturer can do occurred recently, when a large number of centrifugal pumps were required by the authorities, and the nature of the case demanded the quickest possible delivery. The pumps consisted of two 27" centrifugal salvage pumps, each driven by a 300 horse-power engine, and capable of together delivering 6,500 tons of water per hour; and four smaller sets capable collectively of delivering about 2,000 tons per hour. In addition, the authorities also ordered at the same time four 27" dock pumps, capable of delivering collectively 14,000 tons of water per hour, each pump being driven by a separate 350 horse-power electric motor, together with the necessary electrically-driven auxiliary pumps for use in connection with the same. The whole of these pumps were constructed, erected, tested, and taken to pieces, packed and placed on board the steamer in 2½ months from the date of receipt of the order. All these plants were not delivered at the same time, and one of the large salvage pumps and two dock pumps were actually shipped from England in seven weeks from the date of their being ordered. The whole of this order was executed by Messrs. W. A. Allen, Son & Co., Ltd., of Bedford, England, who are to be congratulated on being able to uphold the reputation of the British manufacturer where quick delivery is concerned. In the various other branches of engineering there are many manufacturers in England who are not behind them in this respect.

THE BUSINESS MEN'S ENTERTAINMENT.

On Saturday evening the leading Business Men of Tokyo, to the number of thirty-two, organized an entertainment at the Kabukiza Theatre in Tokyo in honour of Admiral Noel and the officers of the British Squadron. All the leading British residents of Tokyo and Yokohama were invited, as were many prominent Japanese naval and military officers. The whole of the theatre was decorated with great taste. Over the stage the word "welcome" stood out in large letters embroidered with chrysanthemums in a framing of greenery, and the ceiling and walls glowed with electric lights set in flowers and foliage. At half past 8 o'clock Sir Gerard Noel was conducted to the stage by Mr. Sonoda, who read the following address in English:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—In the name of the Business Men of Tokyo we desire to express our high appreciation of the honour conferred on us by your presence here this evening.

Admiral Sir Gerard Noel and Officers of His Britannic Majesty's Navy.—You come to us representatives of the might of the world's greatest Empire, and we bid you hearty welcome, not alone for the sake of the friendship and esteem our country has always entertained towards yours, not alone for the sake of the models that England has provided for our national progress, but also because, in the union now happily effected between the two peoples, we recognize a powerful guarantee of the peace which is so dear to us. If the renewal of our intercourse with foreign nations involved us in some difficult complications and even plunged us into wars which we would fain have avoided, it has also brought us many blessings, not least among which we count the cementing of an alliance that joins your illustrious country with ours in closest amity, and establishes the two empires at guardians of the highest principles of international justice and as pillars of East-Asiatic peace. That this alliance may long continue and that its pacific purpose may be fully achieved, is our earnest prayer; and however poor and unattractive the welcome our small resources enable us to give you this evening we trust that you will not measure our sentiment by its visible expression, but that you will credit us with a full sense of the obligation we men of peaceful avocation owe to you, the completeness of whose preparations for war is the best means of averting it.

Admiral Noel and Officers we wish you personally long careers of honour and usefulness, and we repeat our hope that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance may endure until its purposes of equity and non-aggression become guiding principles of every nation's creed.

This address was received with loud applause from the audience, who, although they numbered some six hundred persons, found ample space in the large building. Sir Gerard Noel replied in a speech marked by brevity and grace. He found it unconventional, he said, to exchange his accustomed duties as Admiral for those of an orator, but happily no eloquence was needed to declare, on behalf of his officers and himself, their profound sense of the exceedingly cordial and friendly welcome given to them by the Japanese nation. From His Majesty the Emperor down to the child in the street there had been one universal and unequivocally kindly greeting, such as made it quite certain that the heart of the nation was in the alliance which this brilliant entertainment was intended to celebrate. If that alliance gratified the Japanese, he could assure them that it gratified his countrymen also, for Englishmen felt that to whatever extent Japan benefited by the alliance, Great Britain could benefit not less. It was an alliance which aimed essentially at preserving the peace of East Asia, and he sincerely trusted that it would fully achieve that great end. Again thanking his hosts for their hearty hospitality, he assured them that his officers and he would carry away a delightful recollection of this country so graceful in the arts of peace and so valiant and glorious in the field of war.

Amid loud applause which this speech evoked, Mr. Sonoda handed to the Admiral's Flag Lieutenant a box containing the Address engrossed on parchment. Thereafter the curtain fell, showing a design of the Union Jack and the Rising Sun cleverly combined, which was loudly cheered, and shortly afterwards the performance commenced. The following was the programme:

I. "RENJISHI"

This is a play representing an allegorical story of "Jakusho," a learned priest of ancient time, who went from Japan to China and finally succeeded in ascending the Holy Mountain, Tendaisan, where he saw an extraordinary vision, the "Lion Dance."

When the curtain is raised, two spirits of Butterflies come and play among flowers. On their retirement the spirits of the Red and White-headed Lions appear and perform a vigorous and lively dance.

II. "CHIYO-NO-CHIGIRI."

This dance has been specially arranged for the present occasion. The intention is to represent by music and dance the genuine sentiment of the nation in welcoming the officers and men of our ally's China Squadron. The piece suggests also happy expressions of mutual respect and goodwill on the part of the two peoples, who, having experienced the success of their first essay in friendship and alliance, now once more vow to renew these relations in perpetuity upon an even closer and more intimate basis.

III. "Dōjōji."

Kiyohime falls in love with a "Yamabushi" (wandering priest) who, wishing to get rid of her, betakes himself to the Dōjōji Temple and having the large bell brought from the tower, hides himself inside. The girl, following him, comes to a river and in the attempt to get across, becomes a serpent and coils round the bell which melts away killing the "Yamabushi" inside. Years later a new bell is made and a dedicatory service takes place. Females are forbidden to attend, but a dancing girl (the ghost of Kiyohime) comes, followed by another "shirabyoshi" who suspects the first of being an evil spirit. Not being permitted to approach the bell the two begin to perform a dance.

The curtain rises on the two shirabyoshi dancing and approaching the bell, when the genuine shirabyoshi departs and to raise the bell by force of prayer, but the attempt the ghost springs at the bell. She pulls it down and disappears inside and the priests attempt does not succeed. Ultimately a number of soldiers come and raise the bell. The ghost assumes the form of a serpent but is finally overcome by the warrior Takenuki Goro.

IV. "THE BATTLE OF YASHIMA."

The Act opens with fierce fighting on the coast of Yashima. Both sides retire. Yoshitsune chases the remnants of the Heike who are forced out to sea.

Moritsugu of the Heike approaches the shore in a boat and reviles Yoshitsune whose followers in turn rail at Moritsugu. In the meantime a brave leader, Noritsune, of the Heike, appears with a bow and arrow and aims at Yoshitsune, Tsuginobu springs forward to shield Yoshitsune and is shot. Here the stage revolves so as to present the continuation of the coast. Kikuo Maru, Noritsune's follower, lands from a boat in order to take Tsuginobu's head. Kamiji, the younger sister of Ise no Saburo of the Genji, meets him in single combat with a naginata. The stage revolves, still presenting the coast at sunset, and another fierce engagement takes place both sides finally retreating. The brave warrior Mionoya Kunitoshi of the Genji comes with a drawn sword followed by Akushichi-boyo Kagekiyo of the Heike with a big naginata who challenges Mionoya to return. They fight for some time without either getting any advantage, until finally they throw away their weapons and attack each other with naked hands, the end being that Kagekiyo gets the better of Kunitoshi.

Extraordinary care had been taken in preparing the accessories. The scenery and curtains were all specially provided for the occasion as were also the costumes of the dancing girls. Probably no more picturesque and beautiful dance has ever been witnessed in Japan than that standing second on the programme, Chiyo-no-chigiri (everlasting union). Thirty girls took part in the dance, and after they had moved down the hana-michi to the stage in two parties of 15 each, they suddenly underwent a metamorphosis and appeared in costumes bearing a design of the Japanese and British Flags. The spectacular effect of their graceful movements is indescribable, and its effect upon the audience was testified by such a burst of applause as a Japanese dance had never previously evoked from foreign on-lookers. It remains only to say that the supper was on a most sumptuous scale, and that from first to last not the slightest hitch was experienced. The Committee of Reception consisted of Baron Shibuwa, Mr. Kondo Rempei and Mr. Sonoda Kokichi. They and the host of aide-de-camps whom they must have employed deserve unmeasured praise for the excellence of the arrangements and the beauty of the whole conceptions.

SIR GERARD NOEL AND THE BRITISH OFFICERS.

On the 21st instant Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda Kokichi gave a garden party at their residence in Tokyo to Sir Gerard Noel and the officers of the British Squadron. The weather happily proved most propitious and the large assemblage of guests seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly. They included many distinguished Japanese officers of both services and civilians as well as virtually the whole of the British residents of Tokyo and several from Yokohama, from Sir Claude and Lady MacDonald downwards. An excellent band gave selections of music and at four o'clock refreshments were served in tastefully decorated marquees. Shortly after the arrival of the Admiral and the British Minister, they were invited to repair to a salon opening on the lawn, and there Mr. Sonoda read the following address:—

Sir Gerard and Lady Noel:—

My wife and I, while expressing our profound sense of the honour and pleasure you have conferred on us by accepting our invitation to-day, have to apologise sincerely for the very humble and unattractive character of the welcome we are able to offer you. We beg you to take the will for the deed, and we assure you that were our resources at all commensurate with our sentiments you would have indeed a royal reception.

During many years of residence in England we learned to know and to love your countrymen. The memory of that happy time and of the kind hospitality we received, makes it doubly gratifying to welcome you as our guests in turn, especially since we see in you the representatives of an Alliance which our country can not too highly value. It had long been our fervent hope that Japan might some day be the England of the East, though we could not reasonably look to see such a hope fulfilled during our life-time. It has now been fulfilled, however, for by this Alliance the two countries are converted into one and we Japanese have acquired the proud privilege of regarding England as our second home.

We beg you to do us the grace of accepting this little specimen of Japanese art. It is of very trifling value, but it may perhaps serve as a slight souvenir of a visit which we would fain have rendered more agreeable to you.

Mr. Sonoda then presented to the Admiral a magnificent lacquer box on a stand of the same beautiful material, and to the officers of the Fleet one copy each of the very attractive photographic album just issued, containing views of Fujiyama by Mr. Ponting. Sir Gerard Noel, replying, offered sincere thanks in the names of Lady Noel and himself for the graceful hospitality so warmly extended to him. He spoke of the enormous changes that had taken place in Japan since his first visit to the country, and said that he and his officers could never forget the genuinely kindly welcome they had received from all classes of the nation.

The party broke up at a little after 5 o'clock, three hearty cheers having been given for the universally popular host and hostess.

Admiral Viscount Ito and Viscountess Ito entertained Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, Original from Lady Noel and the officers of the British Squadron at dinner in the Mitsui Club on the 19th instant. After the toasts of the Emperor of Japan and the King of England had been duly honoured, Sir Claude MacDonald proposed the health of Her Majesty the Empress whose noble life, unflagging zeal on behalf of her country and wide benevolence had won the admiration and sympathy of the world. The toast was received with much enthusiasm.

Admiral Sir Gerard Noel has been decorated with the First Class of the Rising Sun, and the officers commanding ships of the Squadron as well as the Chief Engineers, seven in all, have received the Third Class of the same Order. Three other officers have been honoured with the Third Class of the Sacred Treasure, two with the Fourth Class of that order and one with the Fourth Class of the Rising Sun.

Admiral Noel's Squadron left Yokohama on the 25th and proceeded to Yokosuka where another fête awaits it. The details are published, but they are only a replica of the Tokyo doings on a smaller scale, including, of course, an inspection of the dockyards and work-shops.

The torpedo squadron in the meanwhile is receiving a hearty welcome at Kago-shima.

MILITARY TOPICS.

Some Tokyo papers allege that the tactical unit of the Japanese Army is to be changed hereafter from a Division to an Army Corps. Hitherto the Division has been regarded as an Army Corps, being organized and equipped so as to take the field independently. But hereafter two Divisions will form the unit; in other words the shidan system will be exchanged for the gun system. Further, the period of service with the colours will be changed from 3 years to 2. The Yorodzu Choho states that the Military Authorities contemplate a system which will enable them to put into the field a total force of 2 million men in time of war. But the Yorodzu Choho is an authority which requires confirmation.

The troops in north-eastern Korea began to withdraw from the field on the 20th instant and are to assemble at Gensan for embarkation on the 24th. As in the Manchurian armies, they commence their withdrawal on the 26th instant, and from the beginning of November they will begin to embark at Dalny.

It is reported that the Manchurian Guards will consist of the recently raised 14th and 16th Divisions, the former under Lieut.-General Tsuchiya and the latter under Lt.-General Yamanaka. Japan will follow Russia's lead in appointing a Viceroy of Kwantung, and General Oshima will receive the appointment.

In Korea the garrison will consist of the 13th and the 15th Divisions, under Lieut.-Generals Haraguchi and Okihara respectively, the commander-in-chief being General Hasegawa. This will release the forces now operating on the Tumen under Lt.-General Miyoshi.

To render the above arrangement clear it is necessary to observe that the Japanese Army prior to the war consisted of twelve Divisions, numbered from one to twelve, and the Guards. At a subsequent period—during the course of the present year, so far as we can judge—four new Divisions were organized, their numbers being from 13 to

16. These four new Divisions are to constitute the garrisons of Liaotung and Korea, so that the dimensions of the home army will remain unchanged.

One thing made plain by the above is that Japan intends to retain a considerable force in Korea, for the present at all events. She will not be again found as she was at the outbreak of the war with Russia, when it was a race whether the van of her forces carried over sea or the van of Mischenko's cavalry riding down from the Yalu would reach Pyong-yang first.

Another point to be noted is that this Kwantung force is independent of the railway guards contemplated by the Peace Treaty. The latter document can not impose any restrictions upon Japan as to the dimensions of her Liaotung garrison, and she has apparently determined that the garrison shall consist of two Divisions.

When we say that Japan follows Russia's lead in the matter of appointing a Viceroy the distinction must be made that General Oshima will be Viceroy merely of the Kwantung region whereas Admiral Alexieff was Viceroy of the Far East.

The Kokumin Shinbun says that the 14th and the 16th Divisions will be stationed in the first place within the region extending from Liaoyang to the north of Mukden. Thence these Divisions will be gradually withdrawn to the south of Pulan-tien, namely, into the Kwantung Peninsula. We presume that the withdrawal will take place pari passu with the Russian evacuation of northern Manchuria.

It appears that when the problem of withdrawing the troops came up for discussion in the conference chamber at Portsmouth, the Russian Plenipotentiaries were for dispensing with any time limit, and merely inserting a provision that withdrawal should be effected as quickly as possible. But that did not satisfy the Japanese. They argued that as Russia's failure to evacuate Manchuria had been one of the proximate causes of the war, any ambiguity about this point would be intolerable. They therefore proposed a period of ten months. The Russians, in reply, asked for two years. Their explanation was that whereas the troops had been sent to the field with the maximum expedition, which entailed no little hardship, no such haste would be possible when withdrawing them. Moreover, there are in Asia very few places along the line where large bodies of men can be accommodated, and it is consequently necessary to arrange that troop-trains shall pass right through to Europe. This involves much delay. In short, the conditions confronting Russia could not be mentioned in the same breath with the conditions confronting Japan. These considerations finally prevailed with the Japanese Plenipotentiaries to some extent, and they agreed that the term should be 18 months.

A large batch of returning Japanese soldiers are to reach Ujina on the 27th instant in six transports. They will be rapidly followed by others. Apparently the very first arrivals were the reliefs of the Ninth Division. They reached Ujina on the evening of the 25th. There will now be a busy time in bringing back the troops. Fortunately for Japan she can continue the operation of transport all through the winter. From the 28th instant we shall witness a busier scene on the various railways than anything observed during the course of the war, for the return of the troops will of course be a more rapid operation than their despatch to the front. The time-tables on the principal railways will necessarily undergo alterations.

It is expected that Marshal Oyama will not return until January. He is unwilling to leave the field until the bulk of the army has preceded him.

The question of the Changchun-Kirin railway is now clearly explained. It appears that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries originally demanded the cession of the whole line as far as Harbin, but the Russians strenuously objected, and after a vehement discussion M. Witte proposed to surrender the road as far north as Changchun, instead of limiting Japan's ownership to the section already in her occupation. To this the Japanese consented on condition that, by way of set-off for giving up their claim to the Changchun-Harbin section, they should receive the branch line from Changchun to Kirin. M. Witte replied that he was not fully posted about the Changchun-Kirin line. He would therefore consult St. Petersburg, and if it turned out that the line was already constructed he must decline to cede it, but if the concession alone was in Russia's possession there would be no objection to handing it over. Reference to St. Petersburg showed that the concession only was held, and that it had not yet been utilized, so the Japanese condition was accepted.

In this context the question about obtaining China's consent is also explained, though we can not see that much explanation was needed. China is nominally the Sovereign of Manchuria. No concessions granted by her to Russia in Manchuria may be transferred to a third State without the consent of the Peking Government. That consent is certainly a matter of form, but it is none the less essential in order to impart a strictly legal character to the transaction. In this instance Russia and Japan have mutually pledged themselves to seek China's acquiescence and they will approach her simultaneously. Apparently they have not done so yet, but an opportunity to take the step is expected to offer soon.

An explanation is published by the Jiji Shimpō, avowedly based on official statements, concerning the treaty stipulation about the free passage of Soya and Tartary Straits. It was the Russians, we read, that proposed to have unrestricted navigation of the Soya waters inserted among the conditions of the Treaty. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries did not object provided that a similar undertaking were given about the Tartary Strait, and to that M. Witte agreed. Subsequently the Russian adviser contended that in consideration of the width of Soya it must be freely navigable, without any explicit stipulation, under the provisions of international law, whereas such was not the case with regard to the Tartary Strait, and consequently Russia, did she agree to the proposed arrangement, would be surrendering an actual right for an imaginary privilege. M. Witte, however, said that as the agreement had been made it must stand. On the other hand this explanation alleges that either Power may erect fortifications on the shores of the Straits concerned, from which we assume that so long as such fortifications are not used to obstruct the passages in time of peace, the stipulations of the Treaty are held to be satisfied. And indeed that seems a rational inference, for fortifications do not interfere with the navigation of the sea they command unless they are employed for purposes of interference.

Major-General Daniloff with a staff of 30 members was expected to arrive at Moji from Nagasaki on the 25th instant. They had left Vladivostok on the 22nd, but it would seem that they were delayed en route for up to the evening of the 25th they had not reached Moji. These officers constitute the commission sent by Russia to take over the seventy-two thousand prisoners now in Japan. General Dessino is said to have been originally appointed for the duty, but he declined to serve.

The duty of transferring the northern part of Saghalien to Russia has been completed and the Japanese garrison was expected to reach Awomori on the 26th instant. After the withdrawal of the Japanese the district seems to have fallen into a state of extreme disorder, robberies, burglaries and even murders being common. The Russians have accordingly despatched a battalion of troops to garrison the place.

MR. W. J. BRYAN AND THE "SHOGI."

If Japanese newspapers were correctly informed Mr. W. J. Bryan, who by his eloquence and his personality created such a favourable impression in Tokyo, would have become the central figure in an affair calculated to effectually mar his fair fame. On the occasion of the Shinto ceremonial in Uyeno Park to celebrate the Empire's naval triumph, Admiral Togo occupied a war-stool (shogi) which had been used for a similar purpose centuries ago, and had been handed down as an heirloom in the Ogasawara family, that family alone being authorized to officiate at the ceremony. It is alleged that Mr. Bryan came up from Yokohama to attend the fete, and the idea occurred to him that it would be agreeable to sit in a chair of such good omen. No objection was raised to his doing so, though the act was not in the best taste. But—so the story runs—Mr. Bryan then signified his desire to carry away the shogi. To that the Japanese objected, as the stool had a certain sanctity in their eyes, and was moreover a valued heirloom of the Ogasawara family. Mr. Bryan then offered to pay any price demanded for the article, but that did not at all facilitate the transaction. The owners replied that the stool was not for sale in any case. Exactly what then happened the tale does not tell, but the reported sequel is that the Japanese handed over the stool to Mr. Bryan. This incident appears to have produced a very bad impression according to the newspapers reporting it, but we believe the whole story to be a fabrication with just the grain of truth which renders some rumours so pernicious. There was a chair in question, but it was not the Ogasawara stool, nor any stool having a sacrosanct character. It was simply a common chair, one of many ordinarily standing in the salon of the Seiyoken restaurant at Uyeno. Admiral Togo happened to occupy it during some stage of the celebration, and Mr. Bryan, attaching a value to the article for the sake of that incident in its history, desired to become its possessor. Possibly the restaurant folks who owned the chair were glad to give it gratis to the distinguished American, but however that may be, the offer of money under such circumstances loses all its offensive character and becomes a proper and comprehensible transaction. We should not allude to the matter at all had not experience taught us the danger of allowing such stories to remain uncontradicted even for a moment.

RUSSIAN VIEWS OF THE ALLIANCE.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, writing under date of Sept. 4th, sends the following interesting analysis of the journalistic opinions elicited by the news of the new Anglo-Japanese Alliance:—

There is no denying the fact that Russians of all classes feel disappointed—the Chauvinists because they discover that it spoils their hopes of war with England; the Moderate party because they would have liked to form such an alliance themselves. These two points of view are expressed to-day in the Novoe Vremya and the Russ respectively. The bureaucratic organ fulminates incoherent threats against England and France, who are both somehow responsible for Russia's troubles, and darkly hints at an alliance with Germany. The organ of the Liberals, which frequently expresses the opinions of high diplomatic quarters, takes an entirely different standpoint. In the course of an article which forms one of the most interesting contributions on Russia's foreign policy that have appeared for a long time, the Russ, after pointing out that the renewal of the treaty had an undoubted influence in bringing about peace, says that thus England was far more instrumental in that result than another Power whose boasts are unfounded.

The Russ then proceeds to discuss the various phases of the new treaty as they affect Anglo-Russian relations, and first of all demolishes the foolish talk of reprisals started by the Novoe Vremya, taken up by the Bourse-Gazette, and naturally espoused by the Anglophobe Moscow Gazette. In order to face the coalition of Great Britain and Japan, the Russ points out, Russia would have to build a navy which would require not ten, but many more years. The game is not worth the candle. "Putting the screw down upon India becomes an operation both costly and futile, and it will have to be abandoned. In fact, all Asiatic enterprises, all adventures of the Bezobrazoff kind, say in Mongolia, tricks like Prince Ukhtomsky's in Tibet, thus lose their attractiveness and become more risky."

But Russia will not be the loser thereby. On the contrary, instead of blundering ingloriously about the backstairs of Asia she will resume her rightful place in Europe. Only one Power will be displeased and that is the Power which has been conniving at Russia's effacement. Slavs, French, and Austrians will all be pleased if Russia willingly helps England to maintain the equilibrium of Central Europe.

"The fears of England being set at rest regarding the status quo in India she will soon realize that there is no conflicting interest between her and Russia. When once we stand facing towards Europe our position will be far from onerous or isolated. On the contrary, we shall become one of the decisive factors in Europe. It is a pity that we could not conclude an alliance with Japan, as it assures to England the undisturbed domination of Southern Asia. But, although our place has been taken, there is no reason to indulge in great regrets. The Anglo-Japanese alliance guarantees us for a long time from fantastic and ruinous Asiatic adventures, and directs us to assume our rightful place in Europe, and, since it does this, may prove for us the most useful political combination of latter times."

It remains to be said that the views expressed on the subject of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty and the relations between Russia and England are undoubtedly entertained by the best and most competent minds in the country. It would be useless to contend that there is no opposition. Anglophobia, like other dark influences, dies hard. Still it must be remembered that Russia is learning new lessons with astonishing rapidity, and the lesson taught by the Russ must sooner or later come home.

It is plain from this correspondence that public opinion in Russia is sharply divided as to the spirit informing the alliance, though both sides agree in regarding it as an effectual check to any renewal of Russian aggressive designs in East Asia or Central Asia. There is, however, one phase of the matter which deserves more attention than it seems to be receiving, namely, that Russian policy is largely swayed by the man at the front, and that the man at the front takes very little account of ultimate ways and means, his habit being to go where personal profit and kudos are to be found with scant regard for consequences. It can not be said, therefore, that the alliance constitutes an absolute guarantee against the recrudescence of trouble, especially should either of the allies relax its preparations for war.

THE TOKYO ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

Retribution has overtaken the Tokyo Electric Railways for their extremely shortsighted policy in fixing at the outset of their career a uniform fare of 3 sen. The unwisdom and injustice of such a course were frequently insisted on in these columns. It was unwise because a sufficient revenue could not possibly be derived from such a charge. There is a not wholly unnatural tendency among a certain class of Japanese to think that they can do better than any other nation has done on account of the advantage they enjoy in the matter of cheap labour. But although the labour bill forms a part of the running expenses of an electric railway, it is only a part. The wear and tear of plant, the generating of power and the original outlay on material—these are items of account which are not affected by the price of labour. Instead, then, of trying hopeless and extravagant experiments, the projectors of Japanese tram-lines would have been better advised had they taken the experience of foreign countries as guide. A three-farthing's uniform fare has not been thought of as feasible by any European or American Company, and after a full trial it has now proved impossible in Japan. The records of the companies show that with such a system investors in electric railways can not look for a return of more than 5 or 6 per cent., which is quite inadequate in the case of this kind of property. There is also the manifest injustice of the method. It imposes on passengers who ride short distances only the obligation of paying for those that ride long distances, and it gives to the latter an altogether unfair advantage. To plead convenience on behalf of it is very weak, for what people want is to get the value of their money not to be "conveniently" deprived of it. There are cities in Europe where folks can ride short distances in electric trams for the sum of half-a-penny (2 sen) but, at the same time, suffice of the charges on these lines run up as high as fourpence (16 sen). That is the rational and fair system. Mr. Amenomiya is responsible for the whole of this trouble. He dragged the three-sen fare into a discussion where its influence was purely emotional and he thus contrived to excite a public feeling which had no basis in business economy or sober reason. It is a just retribution that the company to which he belongs should now be conspicuously embarrassed, not alone owing to the operation of the three-sen system, but also because, according to rumour, the system was subsequently bolstered up by a false method of keeping accounts, working expenses being transferred to the column of construction outlays, and the company being thus enabled, for a time, to pay a dividend which its real earnings did not justify. The truth has now come out, and its immediate result has been a heavy fall in the market price of the company's shares. If, however, these disclosures lead, as seems probable, to a reconsideration of the whole system, and, as seems possible, to amalgamation of the three companies, a step which by cheapening the administration might justify a lowering of fares, permanent benefit may ultimately come out of temporary disadvantage. The Fiji Shimpo is devoting its editorial columns to articles dealing with the whole question. Mr. Amenomiya is exhibited in very unlovely colours but so far as we can see, he deserves it all.

The Askold and other Russian warships were to leave Shanghai on Oct. 26th for Vladivostok.

TOGO'S TRIUMPHAL ENTRY INTO TOKYO.

On the 24th instant at 10.40 a.m. the Admirals arrived at Shimbashi for their triumphal entry into Tokyo. Admiral Togo had remained in Tokyo from the afternoon of the 23rd after accompanying the Emperor thither on the conclusion of the Naval Review. He nevertheless proceeded to Shimbashi so as to head the procession. Twenty-three carriages had been provided by the Municipality, but they proved insufficient and many of the naval visitors had to ride in jirikisha. It need scarcely be said that the entire space within and without the station was packed closely with spectators and that the air rang with shouts of bansai as the distinguished officers made their appearance. Mr. Ozaki, the Mayor, rode in the leading carriage, and after him came the carriage containing Admiral Togo. It was prettily decked with flowers, and the other vehicles not having any such distinguishing mark, the commander-in-chief's identity could easily be distinguished by the crowd. After Admiral Togo's carriage came those of Vice-Admirals Kataoka, Kamimura, Dewa, Uryu and Misu. Passing under the triumphal arch erected opposite the station, the procession entered the main thoroughfare of the city and followed it thenceforth direct to Ueno Park. Everywhere the streets were beautifully decorated, and on either side great assemblages of citizens had massed themselves, so that the Admirals' carriages passed constantly between two dense walls of human beings. A most interesting feature was that nearly everywhere the front rank of the crowd consisted of school children marshalled in due formation and bearing miniature flags of the Rising Sun. An idea of the perfect order preserved by the crowd may be gathered from the fact that these little lads were able to keep their places from first to last. As the procession wended its slow way an unceasing thunder of cheers marked its progress, and this ovation culminated at the entrance to Ueno Park, where some sixty thousand sight-seers had assembled in the neighbourhood of a colossal triumphal arch. At a suitable place in the Park a large dais had been erected. Thither the Admirals were led by the Mayor, to Admiral Togo being assigned a position somewhat in advance of the other officers. Here an interesting religious ceremony was performed; returning of thanks to heaven for victory won by the country's arms. This ceremony had its origin in the far-off time of Minamoto no Yoshiie (Hachiman Taro), and the records show that it was performed in the cases of the great captains, Nobunaga, Hideyoshi and Iyeyasu. Like everything pertaining to Shinto it was essentially simple. The principal of the officiating priests was Ogasawara Kiyomichi, representative of a family which, from early Tokugawa days, has been uniformly entrusted with the discharge of these functions. Admiral Togo, having been seated on a war-stool (shogi), an heirloom of the Ogasawara Family, was approached by Mr. Ogasawara, and three assistants. Mr. Ogasawara carried a pure white tray on which were placed two wooden sake-bowls, a sake-cup, a pair of chopsticks, and small quantities of kachiguri (boiled chestnuts chosen because of the term kachi which signifies to "conquer") of uchiawabi (halibut, selected because of the prefix uchi, to "attack") and of kombu (edible sea-weed, a word having the significance of "rejoicing"). Three times the cup was filled and handed to Admiral Togo, and at each draught the great crowd shouted bansai. Thereafter the Mayor advancing addressed Admiral Togo in words evidently chosen from the ancient vocabulary of the Empire. He said:—

When our country engaged in a struggle with its neighbour, Heaven was with us and the heart of the nation was in the contest. Nevertheless the enemy having on his side the reputation of great achievements, being in possession of powerful strong-holds, and having a vast host to rely on, we could not but entertain disquietude. You, however, led the combat, seized the opportunity, overwhelmed his powerful ships, blockaded his leviathan war-vessels, drove him into a death-trap and, striking him there with lightning rapidity, broke his courage, impaired his spirit, dislocated his plans, decided the issue of the combat, inspired our nation with confidence and achieved its hope. The enemy, now recognising his mistake, changed his commanding officer for a man who inspired his following with new courage so that they fought stoutly. Hereupon you, quietly maturing your strategy, issued forth in face of the storm and the snow, and unerringly utilizing opportunities as they arose, by a combination of prudence, thoroughness and daring, finally destroyed the enemy's Far-Eastern Fleet and compelled him to rely on his land forces only. Thereupon, employing the whole of his national resources, he assembled every available ship and sent out a great fleet to an immense distance once more to engage you. But you, with undaunted courage and in spite of the weariness of a hundred fights, recognising as the world did that the fate of the Empire was at stake, formed your own estimate in the face of the enemy's bewildering movements and perplexing manoeuvres, and then rushing upon him with the force of a whale tearing its way through a herring net, struck at him in the morning, crushed him in the evening, overthrew the mountain, lowered the lofty peak, destroyed even the dust of his might, brought lustre on the country's flag, showed the power of its ships, restored profound peace of mind to the nation and spread its prestige throughout the whole world. Such have been your noble achievements, grand and unprecedented. You have shown yourself the Empire's great instrument; you have won splendid renown at home and abroad. We, observing, can not measure our gratitude. We welcome your triumphant return. We thank you for your untiring exertions. Our expressions of applause may be weak but our spirit of approval is strong. We pray you to appreciate our sentiment.

The National Anthem was then played, and Admiral Togo rising said:—

"I thank you for your earnest welcome. On behalf of the United Fleet I offer our expression of gratitude."

The Admirals then drove back through still cheering crowds to the Naval Club in Tsukiji, where a reception in their honour was given by the Minister of State for the Navy and Admiral Viscount Ito. All the great dignitaries of State attended, and the foreign community was represented by the Corps Diplomatique. Admirals Yamamoto, Ito and Togo welcomed the guests on their arrival and very soon the spacious enclosure was filled with a brilliant assemblage. At 4 o'clock refreshments were served in a large and beautifully decorated pavilion, where the guests, numbering over a thousand, found ample accommodation and a profusion of viands. The Minister of State for the Navy proposed the Emperor's health and called for three cheers which were given with the utmost vigour. Then Admiral Noel rose and proposed the health of Admiral Togo and the Japanese Navy. He said that all had admired the splendid achievements of the brave men to whom he was now addressing himself. The British Fleet regretted that it had been unable to gather such laurels and to garner such a unique experience in naval warfare, but they hoped that their turn might come in due course. He called for three cheers for Admiral Togo, his officers and the Japanese Navy. This time a thousand voices raised the familiar shout "hurrah." Admiral Togo replied with his accustomed brevity. He thanked Admiral Noel, and in turn called upon those present to drink the health of Sir Gerard and the British Fleet, which was done with all the honours. Finally Prince Tokugawa, President of the House of Peers, tendered the thanks and admiration of the Diet to Admiral Togo, his brother admirals, his officers and the men of the United Fleet. The party broke up shortly before 5 p.m. after a most enjoyable afternoon.

It is announced that the Emperor, for the first time in history, will invite all the officers of the Navy to luncheon in the Shiba Detached Palace on the 27th instant.

The Business Men of Tokyo are to give a congratulatory entertainment in the Hibiya Park to-day (26th).

On the 26th instant the Business Men of Tokyo organized a fete in celebration of the victorious naval war. They assembled in the space behind the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's offices to the number of several thousands, and at 12.30 a gun was fired by way of signal, whereupon the whole throng set out northward and passing through the Wadai-kura Gate, proceeded to the ground opposite the Palace Avenue and there sang the National Anthem. Subsequently they repaired to the Hibiya Park. At 3 o'clock another gun was fired to announce the opening of the ceremonial. It began with the singing of the National Anthem, and then ensued the reading of a congratulatory document, after which three cheers were given for the Emperor, three for the Navy and three for Admiral Togo. Music followed and the big assembly then partook of refreshments.

THE TSAR'S MANIFESTO.

The Tsar has shown that he can be great in misfortune. His manifesto in connexion with the publication of the peace treaty, says:—

"It has pleased Providence to inflict upon Our ancestral country a severe and painfully unfortunate blow in this terrible war wherein the illustrious army of Our Empire, obstinately confronting the forces of a valiant and powerful enemy, has given not a few examples of intrepidity. But the painful conflict is now over. Henceforth on the east of Our dominions We shall maintain and increasingly develop the path of neighbourly amity with Our friend the Empire of Japan. At this moment of announcing the restoration of tranquillity, We pray Providence to protect us in our efforts to conduct the great task of promoting the welfare of the State in co-operation with the people's delegates, and we do not doubt that Our subjects will petition heaven in the same sense."

This is at once simple and dignified. It acknowledges frankly that Russia has suffered a heavy blow, and it recognises the high qualities of the Japanese in war. Markedly is such language in contrast with the epithets applied to Japan in Russia at the commencement of the conflict.

Commenting on the above The Times expresses approval of the epithets applied to the Japanese army, and hopes that this ukase may be taken as evidence of the opening of a new era of peace.

The French press writes in a sympathetic and eulogistic strain of the Mikado's peace proclamation, and declares that Japan acted with conspicuous wisdom and humanity in coming to terms with Russia immediately after the conclusion of the extended alliance with England, while Russia, on her side, was well advised in making peace since she could do so without any material loss of prestige in Europe.

An armoured cruiser (13,500 tons), which is under construction at Kure Dockyard, will be launched about Dec. 23rd. The Hochi says that the Emperor will be present.

KOREA.

Friday, October 20.

Telegrams says that the Korean Cabinet have proposed to the Throne three "great reforms." The first is that the Court should be purged of the crowd of soothsayers, parasites and gutter politicians who have contributed so materially to the Empire's confusion. The second is that the Emperor's hours for attending to business should be from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. daily. And the third, that all officials should cut their hair short and wear foreign costume. These are called "great reforms," but we can not perceive that, with the exception of the first, they have any claim to such a title.

News has been received that the provincial rioters have been quelled. It looks as though the dimensions of the disturbance had been magnified by rumour.

A vague rumour is circulated that the strange despatch said to have been addressed to the British Representative in Seoul by the Korean Minister of Foreign Affairs was instigated by the Minister of a "certain Power," and that, at the same instance, the Koreans are raising a cry that the withdrawal of the Foreign Legations would be injurious to the Empire's interests. These things are being undertaken in the absence of Mr. Hayashi, who seems to be the cat in the eyes of the Korean mice.

The Yomiuri Shimbun has a strong article on the subject of Korea. Its argument is, in brief, that the Koreans having proved themselves unreasoning children, must be treated as children, and coerced where they can not be persuaded. If the failure made in the conference chamber at Portsmouth is to be followed by another failure in Korea, the ministry will stand arraigned on a heavy charge vis-à-vis the nation. That is the Yomiuri's view.

Saturday, October 21.

It is said to have been found out that the singularly emphatic despatches addressed by the Korean Foreign Minister to the Japanese and English Legations with regard to the Peace Treaties had not been previously submitted for the consideration and approval of the Cabinet. This omission led to a vehement discussion between the Premier and Mr. Pak, the Foreign Minister, but since the latter was in a position to show that he had been inspired by the Court, there is no probability of any disturbance of the Ministry. Altogether the impression suggested by correspondence and telegrams from Seoul is that the terms of the Treaty do not cause in Seoul as much opposition as was originally reported. Thoughtful Koreans appreciate that the situation has passed beyond redemption.

A draft of rules relating to the organization of the Ministry has been under consideration in Seoul for some time and is now said to be on the eve of being put into operation. The rules are called "private," and their provisions are not clearly stated, but rumour indicates that they aim at producing a fuller sense of responsibility and earnestness among Cabinet Ministers. Such ends are not generally achievable by means of rules.

The recently entertained intention of sending an Ambassador to Japan to carry Korea's congratulations on the restoration of peace is said to have been abandoned.

Vague news comes of the issue of an imperial rescript which indicates that the state of internal affairs has at length begun to suggest the necessity of drastic reforms. Cabinet offices are to be thrown open to men of ability without reference to family or position, and vigorous steps are to be taken to restore peace and good order in the interior.

Mr. McLeavy Brown's farewell entertainment to his friends took place on board the Kosai Maru—a steamer belonging to the Red Cross Society—on the 19th instant at Chemulpo. Some 300 persons are said to have been present and the veteran official received a great send-off.

Rumour says that the Korean Government, unable to rely on its own resources for preserving order after the withdrawal of the Japanese Army, has urged the advisability of despatching as quickly as possible the Japanese garrison which is to be stationed in the peninsula.

Sunday, October 22.

A sumptuary law is said to have been issued in Korea forbidding the use of white clothing, and enacting that the colours for costumes shall be blue, black, indigo, and purple. It will mean a very great deal to the Korean people to be denied the use of the well-known white costumes, and rumour says that such a reform has long been contemplated by the Seoul Government. But after all what a reform! That the Authorities of the little Empire should be busying themselves just now with questions of costume is characteristic.

There is a rumour that some of the foreign employees in Korean schools are giving up their places and starting for home, in order to conduct some crusade at the instance of the Korean Court.

An experimental planting of cotton has been made in Chihollado. Should the enterprise prove really successful its importance to Japan would be immense as she is now importing 60 million yen worth of cotton annually from gold countries.

Wednesday, October 25.

It is stated that Chhin Sang-heun entered Seoul on the 19th instant, and was examined by Mr. Maruyama, Adviser to the Korean Police, on the 22nd instant at the Home Department. The general belief was that Chhin had encouraged the recent insurgents but he seems to have made it quite clear that no such charge could justly be preferred against him. Not only does he deny all association with the rioters, but also he alleges that he refused to be their leader, and that he actually instructed the Government troops to adopt strong measures against them.

Mr. Li Kwi-on, formerly secretary of Legation in London, is reported to have received a sum of 5,000 yen from the Emperor, for the purpose of proceeding to England in the interests of Korean independence. It is a vague story.

In a recent issue we reproduced a report that the Government of Korea had forbidden the use of white and very light blue garments and had prescribed for daily wear, whether by officials or private persons, such colours as blue, black, indigo and purple. The Japanese Consul in Seoul, telegraphing under date of the 21st instant, says that he has made inquiries into this matter, since it greatly concerns the import of piece-goods from Japan. He finds that no such veto nor any such order has been issued. What has happened is that whereas the law had hitherto prescribed the use of white or light blue, the prescription has now been withdrawn and people are free to wear what they please. This liberty will doubtless result in a demand for colours hitherto eschewed, and the Consul warns the weavers of his country to adapt themselves to the new conditions.

Thursday, October 26.

The Korean Court seems to have been much perturbed by the arrival of the first batch of the new Japanese garrison. This step is regarded as a fatal menace to the independence of the Empire. Apparently the course now being taken by the Emperor is to despatch trusted men to foreign countries for the purpose of creating an agitation against Japan's procedure. The departure of some of these envoys is spoken of as imminent, but nothing is stated as to their method of working, whether through the columns of the press or by directly approaching official centres. The Korean monarch deserves some sympathy, as all men in difficulties deserve it, but of no sovereign could it ever have been said with greater truth that he has muddled away his kingdom. If even a moiety of the tales circulated during the past twenty-five years be credible, the Emperor of Korea is one of the most incompetent rulers that ever sat on a throne. The welfare of his subjects seems to have concerned him very little at any time, and his Court has been a seed-plot of superstitious observances and political intrigue. He may be visited occasionally by good impulses, but if so it has been his perpetual misfortune never to see them become effective.

It is stated that Mr. Hagiwara, who is Chargé d'Affaires in the absence of Mr. Hayashi, has had an important meeting with the Korean Cabinet, but accounts differ as to the subject of discussion.

TOKYO AS AN AMBASSADORIAL CITY.

Japanese newspapers state that Mr. Kuri-no is to be again sent as Japanese Representative to St. Petersburg and that he will carry the new Russo-Japanese commercial treaty which will now be concluded. They further allege that Baron Rosen will return to Tokyo as Russia's Representative. The Baron is now Ambassador in Washington and it would of course be a reduction of rank for him to come to a Legation in Tokyo, but an impression prevails that the Foreign Powers will soon replace their Tokyo Legations by Embassies, so that Baron Rosen would not have to wait long before recovering his rank.

Japanese newspapers repeat that it has been virtually decided to substitute embassies for the Japanese Legations in Europe and America. That will involve a similar change on the part of the Foreign States represented at the Court of the Mikado and it may mean the withdrawal of several of the present Foreign Ministers in favour of their seniors in the service. The British community will be unanimous in wishing that Sir Claude MacDonald may not be among those to go. He is universally popular in Japan and his qualities of geniality and tact render him a particularly suitable Representative at this time of friendship and alliance between this country and Great Britain. Indeed, considering the part Sir Claude took in bringing about the alliance, it would seem only a proper recognition of his services that he should be the first British Ambassador in Japan, and it further seems that the Japanese Government might well use its influence to secure that result.

The Yorodsu believes that Viscount Hayashi, Minister in London, will return to Tokyo at the beginning of December.

NAVAL ITEMS.

The Chuo Shimbun says that the organization of the Submarine Squadron has now been completed. Our contemporary says nothing as to the number of boats forming the Squadron, but their recently conducted trials are alleged to have been very satisfactory.

The two big first-class armoured cruisers now in course of construction at Kure have made great progress. It is expected that they will soon be named, and that their names will be the Ikoma and the Tsukuba.

The interned men-of-war were all released on the 20th instant. The Tsarevitch and the Oleg are to return to Europe and the remainder will proceed to Vladivostock. The Shanghai contingent will not be able to put to sea for a few days as they have to re-embark their armaments and parts of their machinery.

Vice-Admiral Arai invited a large party of foreigners and Japanese to visit the Varyag (now called the Soya) on the 22nd instant, the vessel having been so far repaired and restored to her original condition as to justify inspection. It is understood that she will proceed to Japan under her own steam on the 4th of November.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from Kure shows that if the Japanese could not have recourse to foreign dock yards during the war, they endeavoured to the utmost of their ability to atone for that deficiency by activity at home. Whether it is yet possible to construct battle-ships and armoured cruisers entirely in Japan, or whether much of the material has still to be obtained from abroad, need not be now discussed, for if there be still some lack of ability on the part of this empire's shipwrights, it will surely be remedied before long. The telegram referred to above says that two first-class cruisers, the Tsukuba and the Ikoma, have been for some time under construction at Kure, and that they will soon be ready to join the Navy. A battle-ship, the Aki, is about to be laid down there, and so is a second-class cruiser, the Ibuki. From the fact that these two last vessels have been named we should infer that they are already approaching completion, but the telegram describes them as to be laid down. At Yokosuka, again, the battle-ship Satsuma is under construction, as is a first-class armoured cruiser, the Kurama. From these statements it is evident, that the Naval Authorities have on their programme of increment 2 battle-ships and three armoured cruisers, to say nothing of second-class fighting material.

It is stated, apparently on good authority, that the Rossia and the Gromovoi, attended by several torpedo craft, will soon pay a visit of ceremony to Nagasaki. The exact purpose of the visit is not explained. It is spoken of as a mark of respect. At any rate, if the Russians come, it would be a good opportunity for the Japanese to demonstrate that the hatchet has been buried. It is now Japan's business, and we are sure it will be her pleasure, to cultivate friendly relations with her brave neighbour. No one can conscientiously say that the Russians were above reproach in their manner of conducting the war. On the contrary, in many instances they displayed most reprehensible indifference to the dictates of humanity and civilization, nor can it be denied that the fine conduct of the Japanese derived additional lustre by contrast. But all must agree that the Russians fought splendidly. Their generals may have been defective, their officers more or less incompetent, but the dogged courage shown by the rank and file in coming up to the fight again and again after crushing defeats, was a heroic spectacle. It is well to clasp hands of friendship with men who have shown themselves possessed of such grit.

There is some discussion as to the best means of paying a tribute to the blue-jackets of the victorious navy. Every one feels that they deserve as much notice and applause as the officers do, but how to entertain thirty thousand men is a problem difficult to solve. The most practical suggestion is to distribute money and leave the men to amuse themselves. It should not be difficult to raise a hundred thousand yen for such a purpose.

During 3 days commencing from to-day leave is to be given to one half of the sailors daily to go ashore, and it is believed that numbers of them will visit Yokohama and Tokyo. Hopes are expressed in official quarters that they will be well treated, and it is suggested that the railways and train companies should carry them free, while restaurants and beer-halls should be careful to charge small rates.

The five submarines which manœuvred in sight of the Emperor at the Naval Review were officered and manned by crews specially selected from those who had been concerned in the blocking operations and in the torpedo attacks at Port Arthur. Admiral Togo reported the fact to His Majesty.

It is expected that the Emperor will proceed to Kure to attend the launch of one of the two big cruisers now under construction there. The event will take place on the 23rd of December, and the second cruiser will take the water in March. These vessels have a displacement of 13,500 tons. The largest cruisers hitherto built in Japan were the Hashidate and the Akitsushima, which displace 4,277 tons.

The Fiji Shimpō has opened a subscription to obtain funds for entertaining the Japanese blue-jackets. Any amount from one yen upwards will be received. Several of the prominent business men of Tokyo, as Mr. Kondo Rempel and Baron Iwasaki, have signified their approval of the project. Baron Iwasaki, it is said, will contribute ten thousand yen. The Yokohama business-men are also interesting themselves. It is proposed that the money should be sent to Admiral Togo for distribution among the men, which would, in our opinion be a much better plan than to spend it upon entertainments. If any of our readers feel inclined to subscribe we shall be glad to forward the subscriptions, but perhaps the easiest plan is to send the money direct to the Fiji Shimpō.

Since the above was in type we learn that the Railway Bureau has decided to issue tickets at half fares to the sailors, and that Baron Iwasaki will entertain them in two batches at his Komagome Villa; the first batch on the 29th at 11 a.m., the second on the 30th instant or the 1st proximo.

THE PEACE COMMISSION AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

Letters now published from correspondents of Tokyo journals who repaired to Portsmouth at the time of the Peace Conference, indicate that whatever may have been Count Witte's record as a diplomatist, the palm indisputably belongs to him as a manipulator of newspapers. It appears that he regarded this part of his functions in a most serious light and devoted extraordinary attention to it. The correspondents say that whenever he was not in the conference chamber the newspaper reporters could always obtain access to him, and he succeeded at once in winning their hearts. Wherein the secret of his great success lay it is hard to discover. Whether he possessed some exceptional magnetism or whether his show of kindly and patient interest won the hearts of his interviewers, it is certain that he did win their hearts. At the outset nine out of every ten correspondents were Russophobe; at the conclusion, nine out of every ten were Russo-phil. A very different account is given of the achievements of the Japanese Envoys in this field. They appear to have adhered to the traditions that governed the attitude of the Military authorities towards the newspaper men in Tokyo and Manchuria. We should hesitate to say that they were wrong, but naturally procedure so different was followed by correspondingly different results. The Russians secured, the Japanese forfeited, whatever advantages the support of the press could furnish. There is a very difficult question involved. The abuses of journalism have very nearly become such as to outweigh its uses, and it must be admitted that if to be treated suavely and considerately constitutes a sufficient reason for performing a pirouette in face of a great problem of international politics, then to cultivate the goodwill of journalists by a show of consideration and suavity becomes a diplomatist's cardinal duty. But can such a proposition be admitted?

THE "ENCYCLOPEDIA" SLANDER.

We have received from the editor of the Japan Chronicle a marked copy of his journal, containing a proposal that the question of the slander uttered by him against the vendors of the Encyclopedia Britannica should be submitted to a court of arbitration. The article is noteworthy on account of the strangely perverted morality it displays. For the writer not only thinks it expedient to assign unworthy motives to those who censure his outrages, and not only allows himself to be betrayed by excitement into violating the rudimentary principles of journalistic etiquette, but also talks of being libelled when he is himself arraigned for an unpardonable libel.

Concerning the question of a court of arbitration the proposal is altogether extravagant. The editor of the Japan Chronicle, by methods universally reprobated, may endeavour to reduce this matter to a personal quarrel between himself and the editor of the Japan Mail; but he has to be reminded that he is on his own trial before the bar of public opinion for uttering serious slanders, and that from that tribunal there can be no appeal. It has been abundantly proved that he had no warrant for his unscrupulous assault on the reputation of honest men, and if he believes, as apparently he does, that any publicist undertaking to rebut such assaults must of necessity be inspired by personal motives, he merely proves how crooked is his own sense of right and wrong. We have demonstrated the baselessness of his charges against the vendors of the Encyclopedia, and we are not concerned to provide any anodyne for the suffering he has brought on himself by his own misdeeds.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

MR. W. J. BRYAN AT THE UNITED STATES LEGATION.

On the evening of the 20th instant His Excellency the United States Minister and Mrs. Griscom gave a banquet in honour of Mr. W. J. Bryan at the United States Legation in Tokyo. Covers were laid for thirty-two, and among the guests were Marquis Ito, Count Okuma, Mr. Chinda, Admiral Saito and other prominent Japanese. Mr. Griscom proposed the health of the guest of the evening in the following words:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—It seems to me that no better introduction could be found for a man than to say that over six million people were ready to vote for him, and over thirty million people wanted him to be President of the United States. If I racked my brains for years I could probably not do better than to turn on Mr. Bryan the very graceful analogy which he used to the students of Waseda University in his speech of yesterday. Mr. Bryan said that when you first view a distant range of mountains you can only distinguish clearly two or three very great and high peaks, and so it is that the people of foreign countries, viewing the United States, can distinguish among its public men but two or three great figures. As one who has lived for some years among foreign peoples, I am perhaps particularly able to judge and I can truthfully say that of those figures in our public life best known to foreigners, that of Mr. Bryan is one of the foremost and greatest.

I welcome Mr. Bryan to Japan for several reasons, but first let me say that I have long held that the diplomatic service should be non-partisan, and on this account I am always glad to welcome a Democrat. I am happy to be able to say that no matter who the American is who comes to Japan, whether he be a rich Democrat or a poor Republican, he receives the same treatment at my hands.

Now, there can be nothing better for our international relations than to have the most intelligent and thoughtful men in our communities travel abroad and it seems to me a splendid sign of the times that such a man as Mr. Bryan should find time in his busy life to travel abroad and study and serve other countries. It is an excellent sign for the future. If Mr. Bryan had any doubts in his mind before he left America as to how we were viewed by the Japanese people, all such doubts must have long since been set at rest. Our good relations with Japan were laid on a firm foundation fifty years ago by Perry and Townsend Harris, and Mr. Bryan will find that those relations are ever the same, established on a firm, pure, gold basis, and I think that even he will admit that it is a good standard to apply to international relations. It is my function to endeavor to the best of my ability to maintain the parity, and, as we all know, it is not always an easy matter to maintain a fixed parity. In this difficult task there could be no greater help than to have a man such as Mr. Bryan come to Japan and speak to all classes of the community, and to meet people of every walk in life. He can explain to them far better than I can what is American life and American thought, and I can assure him that for this assistance I am frankly grateful.

I need not tell you of what Mr. Bryan is in America. His position is too well known. He is a man who appears to be ready to raise his ideals as high as the human mind is capable of conceiving ideals, and as a consequence he has a hold on the great American people which in many respects is unique. He is a man of many capacities and now I am going to propose his health, and you are at liberty to drink to him in any quality which you may select. You may drink to him as a statesman; you may drink to him as the leader of a great political party; you may even drink to him as a good Democrat; but for my part I drink to Bryan the man; I drink to Bryan the scholar; and I drink to Bryan the earnest friend of the American people.

This speech was received with loud applause. Mr. Bryan's reply, repeatedly interrupted by laughter and cheers, was:—

MR. MINISTER, YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I have been admonished that I would be expected to say something in acknowledging this very generous toast but I hardly know what to say. I was a cautious man before I came to Japan, but I have learned here an additional caution. I bought the three Nikko monkeys, carved in wood, and I understand that they represent a very important philosophy; i.e., that the wise man sees nothing that he ought not to see; hears nothing that he ought not to hear; and says nothing that he ought not to say. I have not worried about the first two, for I have not expected to hear anything that I ought not to hear, or to see anything that I ought not to see, but I have kept my eye on the third monkey, and have tried to be circumspect in all my ways and cautious in all my utterances, but I cannot forbear to submit a word in reply to the very kind things which have been said.

I appreciate the opportunity that our Minister has given us to meet the distinguished people who are assembled around this board. I appreciate also the dignity and ability with which he represents my country. When I go abroad and meet Republicans in the Foreign Service I am satisfied that, whatever may be the character of the Republicans left at home, the good men have been sent abroad, and I feel like suggesting that when we have any more contests they make a fair exchange and send away the ones who have been left at home and bring back those who are away. As I meet these learned, courteous and kindly Republicans, and as I receive such hospitable treatment at their hands, I feel all the old animosity disappearing and I am now, to-night, much in the attitude of a young man, of whom I heard, who courted his girl for a year before he had the courage to propose to her. He finally summoned up sufficient courage to tell her that he loved her, and asked her to marry him. Being a very frank girl, she replied, "I have loved you, Jim, for many months and have only been waiting for you to tell me so that I could tell you." Of course, Jim was delighted—so delighted that he went to the door and, looking up at the stars, exclaimed, "Oh Lord, I haint got anything against anybody." I feel that way to-night, and this is not only true in a political sense, not only true of my feelings towards Republicans, but I think that as I come into contact with the people of other nations and races, I come to feel a closer attachment to them than I could have felt had I not met them. I am more and more impressed with the broadening influence of travelling. As we visit different countries we learn that people everywhere, no matter under what form of religion they worship, are much the same. We find that the things that we hold in common are more important and more numerous than the smaller things which separate us.

I consider it a great opportunity to meet the distinguished citizens of Japan. I would be confessing my own ignorance of the world's politics if I did not know by name and by history the illustrious men of this great Island, and to-night I have the pleasure of sitting at the board with two of the men of whom I have often heard. One, Marquis Ito, sits at my right. He will go down in history as the builder of a great Constitution; his fame will increase with the ages until he shall be known throughout the world as our own great Jefferson is known because of his connection with the Declaration of Independence.

I am glad also that there is in this gathering another man, Count Okuma, distinguished in politics and in education, and who yesterday so kindly entertained me in his home and gave me the opportunity of looking into the faces of the students assembled in the school of which he is the Patron Saint.

I am glad that at this board we have these two men, the Marquis and the Count, who represent so fully the aspirations and the breath of thought in this country. I speak of these men, not that I forget the other distinguished persons present, but because these two represent the parties of which they are the acknowledged leaders. I am one of those who believe that it is necessary that there shall be conflicting parties in every great and growing nation. Show me a nation where there is no conflict of thought, and I will show you a nation that has more of death than life. The moving waters are the pure waters; the stagnant waters soon become poisonous. It is a good sign to find men contending for the principle in which they believe, and it increases my confidence in a nation when I find men of spirit who think and have the courage to speak their thoughts.

We have found many things of interest in this country, but Mrs. Bryan and I have been especially interested in what they call Korean lions. I do not know whether the other Americans have been impressed by these, but we are firmly determined to take two Korean lions home with us if we can secure a pair and put them as a guard in front of our house. Now, the Korean lions are interesting for several reasons, and one of the most important reasons is that they represent the affirmative and the negative. I noticed to-day that one of them had his mouth open, as though he was saying yes, and the other had his mouth tightly closed, as if he had just said, no. Both the affirmative and the negative are necessary. You find everywhere the radical and the conservative. Both are essential in a progressive state. The conservative is necessary to keep the radical from going too far, and the radical is necessary to make the conservative go at all. One is as necessary to the welfare of the nation as the other. There must be a party in power and there must be a party out of power, although I think that, for convenience sake, they ought to change places occasionally. When a party goes into power it is apt to be more conservative than when out of power, and when a party goes out of power it is likely to be more radical than when in power. I might give a number of reasons for it. In the first place, responsibility tends to make a party more deliberate—it soberers. Then, too, a party that is defeated often learns from the victor how to win, and some times the successful party learns from the defeated one.

Time modifies parties and the Korean lions illustrate this also. They have come down from Babylonian times and each nation seems to have added something. So with both the conservative and the radical parties. These parties will change from time to time as they pass through various nations, and as they pass through various generations, for what is an affirmative party to-day may be a negative party of to-morrow. Having accomplished one reform it may hesitate to undertake another, and finally give way to a more courageous party.

A great American philosopher, Emerson, has said that the dreams of one generation become the accepted facts of the next. All the parties feel the influence of this contact with public opinion. I repeat that I am glad that I am permitted by the kindness of Minister Griscom to meet about this board the two leaders to whom I have referred. Each is a help to the other. Neither would be as strong without the other to stimulate him. We help each other in this way.

I have also learned to hold in high esteem His Majesty the Emperor, and I might give you two reasons for it. First, I have been drawn to him in the most tender way, by finding that when he selected a chrysanthemum to represent royalty he gave it sixteen petals, thus recognizing the familiar ratio of sixteen to one. Second, and most important, because he has had the wisdom to give to his people constitutional government and other blessings which in too many countries have been secured only by the employment of force.

I am glad that I have thus had an opportunity to meet and become acquainted with the people of this Island, and I appreciate most heartily the hospitality they have shown us. I am not vain enough to assume that it is in any large degree a personal tribute. I recognise and accept it rather as an indication of the general goodwill they entertain towards the country in which I am but an humble citizen. The sincerity of this expression of goodwill has impressed me. It has beamed forth from the eyes of students and been felt in the hand-clasp. I have beheld it everywhere, and I shall be glad to tell my people when I return home that the people of Japan reciprocate the friendly feeling that is entertained towards Japan by the people in our country. I am going to insist that more Americans come to Japan and I hope that more Japanese will visit our country. This exchange will teach us both to know each other better and I am satisfied that we will find, as we always find, that acquaintance removes to a large degree the differences between men and nations. I will promise those who hear me to-night that whenever there is a question between America and Japan I shall be a better friend of Japan's than I have been in the past, if that is possible, because I think I understand the country better than I ever could have understood it without meeting the people of Japan. I can be more proud of your history and share more fully in your anticipations of a still more glorious future.

Marquis Ito, being invited to speak, said briefly that did he possess such a knowledge of the English language as Mr. Bryan, he would get on his feet at once, but under the circumstances he begged to be excused. The party broke up at a late hour after a most delightful evening.

CHINA.

Chinese pirates are said to be very active in the waters adjacent to Chefoo, but the telegram (Asahi) relating to their doings speaks of an encounter between several junks and the cruiser Tsinghao during August, so that it is impossible to tell whether the whole thing may not be ancient history. The story told is that the cruiser, which had been sent from Taku to look after the pirates, was actually attacked by them and lost two men, her decks being literally swept by their rifle fire. They attempted to board her, in spite of her quick-firers, and were with difficulty beaten off.

A telegram from Moji says that, according to a statement made by an officer who has just returned from the front, the Russians are engaged breaking up portions of the Manchurian Railway between Sihwangniao-tsz and Kungchuling; that is to say, a section of the line running northward from Changtu to Changchun. It is difficult to credit such exceedingly bad faith. If, after having agreed by solemn treaty, to hand over this road to the Japanese, the Russians proceed to destroy it prior to the transfer, the injury they may succeed in inflicting on the line and the loss they may cause to the Japanese will be as nothing compared with the damage done to their own reputation. The story requires confirmation before credence can be attached to it.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun from Peking says that the Emperor has again been placed in confinement by the Empress Dowager. The story is that Her Majesty returned hastily from the Summer Garden on receipt of news of the bomb outrage, and summoning the Emperor to her presence, asked him peremptorily whether he had no knowledge of the origin of the outrage. The Emperor made no reply but seemed much confused. Then, at a signal from the Empress Dowager, a party of guards appeared and led the Emperor to a hall where he has been strictly confined ever since, no one having access to him, and his food being thrust in through the solitary window. The telegram adds that His Majesty occasionally raises shrieks like those of a lunatic, and that Viceroy Yuan, on hearing the news, was profoundly affected.

It is now denied that the Emperor of China has been placed in confinement. The German Minister had audience on the 25th, and found His Majesty in excellent health. Count Hijikata, who is now visiting Peking, is to have audience on the 30th. The story was incredible on the face of it, for unless the Emperor has suddenly undergone some almost miraculous metamorphosis he is an advocate of progress, and we can not imagine him to have been directly associated with an outrage which, if it had any political meaning at all, must be regarded as a conservative demonstration. There has also been talk in Peking of a plot to secure the nomination of an heir to the Throne, but this too is described now as a canard.

Shanghai telegraphs that the Russian Government has decided to leave three army corps in Manchuria and East Siberia and to send home six. The exact composition of the three that are to remain is given, and the six that will return are indicated as the 1st, 4th, 8th, 20th, 16th and 17th. The three corps which will be left are said to have a strength of 322,000 men and from 1,200 to 1,400 guns, with a due proportion of cavalry. If the six destined for home may be assumed to have anything like similar strength, then it would follow that Russia had about a million men in the field at the time of the signing of the peace treaty. But Shanghai's story can not be accepted implicitly either as to numbers or as to facts. One may consider ■ in the last degree improbable that Russia will attempt to violate the peace treaty by retaining any large force in northern Manchuria. She will have to await the advent of spring before removing the bulk of her present army, but doubtless it was precisely on account of climatic considerations that she stipulated for a period of 18 months within which to effect the removal.

A Chinese newspaper called the Yihwenpao learns that in response to the request of the Taqai, of Tientsin, H.E. Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai has sent instructions to the various officials under his jurisdiction in Chihli province to the effect that foreigners establishing hongts in non-treaty ports and cities are acting against treaty rights. The recipients of the Viceregal instructions are therefore ordered to see to it that such hongts are closed without unnecessary delay. Furthermore, that it has been observed that with the construction of railways in the interior a number of foreigners have of late been establishing hongts, etc., along certain portions of the routes of these railways, which must also be strictly looked into by the local authorities of the districts concerned. One month is given for the performance of this duty.

The Nanfangpao says that the Chinese Government has decided to abandon the idea of redeeming the Chinese Eastern Railway, as some foreign Powers show a tendency to intervene.

H.E. Wu Ting-fang has again memorialised the Throne on the matter of torture in judicial enquiries. The recent Imperial proclamation, he says, is not being obeyed, and he asked for another which was granted, as well as a request that certain officials be sent annually to Japan to study the judicial system there.

It is stated in mandarin circles that there is to be soon established a tenth Great Board at Peking, viz, the Haipu, or Board of Admiralty, which shall control the Peiyang, Nanyang and Kuangtung squadrons—the three grand divisions into which the future modernised Navy of China is to be divided. The order in seniority of the ten Boards will then probably be: (1), Foreign Affairs; (2), Commerce; (3), Public Safety; (4), Admiralty; (5), Civil Appointments; (6), Rites or Education; (7) War; (8) Revenue; (9) Punishments; (10) Works.

The new Commissioner to Tibet (Chang Ying-tang) has been instructed to maintain that Tibet is a subject territory and not merely a protectorate of China.

A telegram is said to have been dispatched to Japan recalling the Chinese students who have graduated in the police schools there for employment under the new Board of Constabulary.

A scheme has been submitted to the Chinese Government for the federation of the Mongolian States as a measure against foreign aggression, but no decision has yet been arrived at.

The temple of Longevity at Canton, which was recently seized by order of the Viceroy and confiscated, is now set up for sale. The proceeds will be applied to the funds for the maintenance of the educational Department of the Kwangtung Province.

Viceroy Shum requested Cheong Pat-Sez some time ago to establish water-works in Canton. Cheong has now replied that his hands are fully occupied, and that he is unable to undertake the work at present. Viceroy Shum thinks this a very important matter indeed, and that it is absolutely necessary to establish such works in Canton. He has carefully studied the matter and has come to the conclusion that a sum of 1,200,000 taels will be sufficient to carry the scheme through. He intends to obtain 300,000 taels from the Salt Comptroller, 260,000 taels from the I. M. C., and will call on the gentry to subscribe the balance.

THE "KINJO MARU" FUND.

The following is a translation of a letter from the Minister of State for War:—

TO THE EDITOR, "JAPAN MAIL"

SIR,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of a sum of 608.29 yen collected by your journal on account of the survivors of those that lost their lives at the time of the sinking of the steamer Kinjo Maru in the Suo Nada on the 22nd of August. I beg to express my profound appreciation of this contribution, and to assure you that care will be taken to make the sentiment of the donors known to the recipients.

(Signed) TERAUCHI SEIKI,
Minister of State for War.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The southern station of the Russians in Saghalien is to be Onoru, according to latest reports, and the Japanese northern station will be No. 2 Hamdasa. There has been some perplexity as to the exact locality of the 50th parallel of latitude with regard to these places, and in point of fact Hamdasa lies some 3 miles north of that line. Topographical convenience, however, indicates Hamdasa and Onoru as the best limits. Each Power will have a customs station at its respective limit. Our readers probably remember that Hamdasa (No. 2) was the point to which the Russians retired from Ruikoff and that they ultimately sent their parlementaires to Onoru and tendered their surrender to the pursuing Japanese. It is curious that this event, which may be called the closing episode of the fighting in Saghalien, should have taken place exactly where the boundaries of the two Powers are now to be fixed.

Negotiations as to the withdrawal of the Japanese from the northern half of Saghalien have been in progress, and the preliminaries were arranged a few days ago, Lieut.-Colonel Nakano acting as Japanese representative.

In addition to the sum already subscribed by the British Squadron for the sufferers by the Mikasa disaster, the officers and men of the Alacrity have contributed 104 yen.

It is stated that the Emperor has signified his intention of repairing to the Shrines at Ise to return thanks for the restoration of peace.

The Emperor received General Burnett and the military attachés of the various nationalities in audience on the 19th instant, and these officers had subsequently the honour of lunching with His Majesty.

The provision of the Law of Maritime Defense have been declared no longer operative in the various waters along the coasts of Japan.

Tokyo journals all published illustrations and articles referring to the centenary of Nelson's death on the 21st instant. The pictures are very familiar. We see again the celebrated painting of Nelson's fall on the deck of the Victory; we see the old ship herself in action and laid up as a memento, and we see the universally recognisable portrait of the great Admiral. In the now-curious-looking uniform of his time. Running through all the articles is the same idea, that before Nelson there was no Nelson and that since Nelson there has been only one Togo. Nelson is spoken of as the ancestor of the Japanese Navy, and it is naturally regarded as a most remarkable coincidence that the celebration of his centenary should fall on the very day preceding Togo's triumphal return to the Japanese capital. This synchronism adds greatly to the dramatic effect. Everything conspires to make Togo the hero of the war.

Mr. Bryan left Tokyo on the 23rd inst. He evidently produced a delightful impression on the Japanese. We hear nothing but warm appreciations of his personality, his eloquence and his evident sincerity as a reformer. He was kept very busy during his short residence in the Japanese capital, for every body of educationists or politicians and every intelligent person wanted to see him or to hear him. Probably he would have preferred a little leisure to look about him, but he can at all events congratulate himself on having seen more of the Japanese human being than any previous visitor ever succeeded in seeing in the same time, and more than the vast majority have seen during decades of residence.

A telegram to the Asahi Shinbun says that something very like a famine will result in the Tohoku districts owing to the comparative failure of the rice crop. The prefectures most affected are given thus in the order of their suffering:—Miyagi, Fukushima, Iwate, Awamori, Yamagata and Akita. In these six extensive regions the crop is described as almost an entire failure, and relief measures are already under consideration. But evidently this account can not be at all reconciled with the official estimate recently published. It will be well to await fuller information.

A telegram from Moji to the Asahi Shinbun says that Tajima Kichita and his three sons left Yingkow on the 13th instant in a small vessel called the Myojin Maru. In Kinchow Bay they came into contact with a floating mine, and their vessel was blown to pieces. One of the young men was killed instantaneously, but the other three occupants of the vessel were picked up by a Chinese junk and carried to Chefoo, where they were handed over to the Japanese Consul. They made the voyage thence to Japan in the Kuwata Maru, whose crew subscribed a sum of 70 yen for their assistance.

It is alleged that the directors of the Kansei Railway Company have arranged with Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company for a loan of 10 million yen at 4½ per cent. interest, the nett sum coming to the Company being 99 yen per bond, and the specie price of the yen being fixed at 2 shillings and a half-penny. The company contemplated raising a larger sum, but in deference to the fact that the London market is not altogether favourable at present, the ten-millions limit was adopted.

As an expression of the best American opinion we commend the following from the Outlook to the attention of the Jiji Shimpō, the Asahi Shinbun and the other malcontents:—

Comparing, then, the ultimatum of April with the treaty of August, it appears to us that all, and more than all, that Japan demanded she has obtained. She has proved herself as far-seeing in the council as in campaigning, and by her diplomacy has achieved results of which, happily, the blinding passions of the short-sighted mob cannot deprive her. The conditions which now exist secure her from aggression more effectually than she could have been secured by further victories over her enemy. By denying herself territorial ambitions and resolutely insisting on China's territorial integrity, she has laid the foundation for a lasting alliance with China, whose leader, in the new life on which that Empire is entering, Japan is destined to be. By not seeking to humiliate her enemy she has increased the esteem which her treatment of Russian prisoners had already won for her from Russian liberals, and so opened the way for the establishment of amicable relations which there is very good authority for thinking will result at an early date in a commercial treaty between the two empires. By the self-restraint of her statesmen she has enhanced the respect which the valor of her soldiers and sailors had won for her from European Powers; and she has secured a new treaty of alliance with Great Britain which is of infinitely greater value to her than any indemnity. With the British and Japanese fleets united on the sea, and with China organized as a military power under Japan's leadership upon the land—and this result will not be long delayed, though all Russian Oriental aspirations may not be relinquished, and why should they be?—Japan, China, and the world may rest assured that for at least the next quarter-century there will be no attempt to realize those aspirations by military aggression.

For these reasons The Outlook is not able to share the disappointment felt by some friends of Japan at the terms of the Russo-Japanese treaty. We believe that by her moderation Japan has achieved at Portsmouth and at Westminster—and the two treaties to be comprehended must be read together—a result as advantageous to herself and as beneficial to the cause of civilization as those that she has won by her valor on sea and land.

ADMIRAL TOGO AND THE BRITISH NAVY LEAGUE.

On Saturday afternoon—Trafalgar Day—a deputation from the local branch of the British Navy League waited upon Admiral Togo on board H.I.J.M.'s battleship Shikishima for the purpose of presenting the victor of Tsushima with an address. The deputation, which had been elected at the annual general meeting of the Yokohama branch of the British Navy League consisted of Mr. James Walter, Vice-President; Messrs. V. A. Caesar Hawkins, A. G. Morey Weale, C. K. M. Martin, F. S. James, Montague Beart, Capt. Rennie Tipple, and Mr. J. E. Beale, Hon. Sec. They proceeded in a launch kindly placed at their disposal by the harbour authorities, and were accompanied by Mr. Taniguchi, Private Secretary to H.E. Governor Suifu. The hatoba was left at 3.15 p.m. and the Shikishima was reached at 3.45 o'clock. After a short wait—the Admiral being busy at the moment—with a meeting of all the commanding officers of his fleet—the deputation were conducted to Admiral Togo's quarters and were introduced by Mr. Taniguchi, Admiral Togo was quite alone save for his flag-commander.

Mr. JAMES WALTER, as Vice-President, said—Your Excellency: Your graciousness in receiving this deputation of the Japan Branch of the British Navy League on this the centenary of our Trafalgar Day, will not only be warmly appreciated by members of this organization, but will strike a chord in the heart of every British subject throughout the world and will further cement our Alliance with your great country.

Mr. Walter then read the following Address:—

To
Admiral H. TOGO, Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial Japanese Combined Fleet.

SIR,—As Representatives of the Japan Branch of the British Navy League, we are honoured in having the privilege of bidding you welcome on your safe return to your Emperor and your home from the glorious naval victory which you, your brave officers, and men, have won in the Sea of Japan; a victory which has not been equalled since that of our gallant Admiral Lord Nelson at the battle of Trafalgar just one hundred years ago.

In the annals of naval warfare there is nothing to surpass the valour which has been shown by the personnel of His Imperial Japanese Majesty's Fleet under your command and the marvellous completeness of your victory. We are proud to know that Japan is the trusted Ally of Great Britain, and we look forward in the near future to a still closer bond of friendship.

Wishing you many years of happiness in which to enjoy your triumphs.

We are, Sir, Your obedient servants,

James Walter, Vice-President,
Rennie Tipple,
F. S. James,
Montague Beart,
V. A. Caesar Hawkins,
A. G. Morey Weale,
Marshall Martin,
Jas. Ellacott Beale, Hon. Sec.

The address, which had been engrossed on vellum by Miss Clara Schwabe, had a floral border—the work of a Tokyo artist—consisting of the rose, shamrock, thistle and chrysanthemum; while medallion portraits of Nelson and Togo surrounded by the English and Japanese flags, with the dates 1805-1905, and having above sketches of the Victory and Mikasa, adorned the head of the address; at the foot were Nelson's signal, "England expects that every man will do his duty;" and Togo's signal, "The destiny of our Empire depends upon this action. You are all expected to do your utmost." This last signal appeared both in English and Japanese, and it was noticed that when Admiral Togo received the address from Mr. Walter he narrowly scrutinized this piece of Japanese calligraphy. The address was enclosed in a massive silver box which bore upon the lid in enamel the white ensign of Great Britain and the Japanese naval flag; this casket again was enclosed in a plain white shinoki box and wrapped up in a reduced silk replica of the eight-rayed Japanese Admiral's flag.

Admiral Togo very briefly but very warmly thanked the deputation for the honour they had conferred upon him in presenting such an address. He was quite unworthy of such a gift, and he valued it very highly.

The Admiral spoke in Japanese and his remarks were interpreted by Mr. Taniguchi.

Mr. Walter then informed the Admiral that the following telegram had been despatched that day to the headquarters of the British Navy League in London:—

"Trafalgar Day,
Yokohama.

Admiral Togo graciously received deputation and address from British Navy League."

A similar message had also been dispatched through Reuter's agency, to which was added the statement that at the time the message was sent 40 men of war were in Yokohama harbour. By this means the people in England would know that day—Trafalgar Day—of Admiral Togo's kind reception of the address of the British Navy League.

Champagne was then served round, the Admiral's health was drunk, and the deputation withdrew.

We might add that the silver box was the work of Messrs. Arthur & Bond, and that replicas of the address can be obtained at the Foreign Chamber of Commerce, price 20 sen each, or six for one yen. The proceeds from the sale of the address will be devoted half to the funds of the Navy League, and half to the relief of naval sufferers by the late war.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS' ENTERTAINMENT.

The Yokohama Circle of the King's Daughters gave two very pleasant entertainments in the Public Hall on Saturday afternoon and evening respectively the programme being the same for both performances. The object of the entertainments was a most worthy one, namely to raise funds for the endowment of a bed in the Japanese Charity Hospital for Soldiers and Sailors, and although the charges for admission were on a very modest scale we should imagine a fair little sum was realised, as there was not a spare seat in the hall shortly after the curtain went up. Before this and during the interval many of the audience visited the side shows, which comprised a shooting gallery, which was in the charge of Mr. Doelitzsch, Mr. J. Abbey and Miss Wales; a "Museum of Wonders," of which the custodians were Messrs. R. Bowden and C. H. Thorn; Alliance Stall, presided over by Miss Bagnall, assisted by Miss Tripler; Candy Stall, Mrs. W. K. Wilson and Mrs. Strauss; and the Refreshment Department, which at intervals during afternoon and evening gave ample employment to a large staff of young ladies, comprising Misses V. Abbey, Howard, K. Hall, E. Hall, Manley, Mendelson, H. Moss, Miller, H. Miller, C. Merriman, Rogers, Lloyd Thomas and M. Thomas. Mrs. Manley, the Leader of the Circle, Mrs. Lowder, Vice-Leader, and Mrs. Irving Bell, Directress, were indefatigable in welcoming their guests and looking after the general arrangements, and are to be congratulated on the complete success of the entertainments. Among the performers it would be invidious to draw comparisons where all did their best, and encores were the order of the day and evening, but there can be little doubt that Mr. Everett's song and step dance and our local favourite, Mr. G. G. Brady's three side-splitting performances (for the audience insisted on a second encore) took the cake and elicited the greatest enthusiasm. After the programme, about 11 o'clock, dancing commenced in the small hall.

THE NATION AND TOGO.

THE Fiji Shimpō urges that the Diet should vote a grant of money to Admiral Togo for his services. As for the objection that this would be contrary to the spirit of the samurai who held money in contempt, our contemporary insists that such an idea is not entirely consistent with facts, for, in point of fact, it was customary in mediæval Japan for a victorious general to make presents of a quantity of gold to his most illustrious officers. As Englishmen we naturally endorse this proposal, and we may supplement the Fiji's historical argument by pointing out that the whole system of military rewards in old Japan was based on the custom of making pecuniary grants in recognition of signal service. These grants did not necessarily take the form of so many coins or so much gold dust. They were usually in the shape of landed estates, measured by their rice-producing capacity. An officer or official was granted an income of so many koku of rice, which, in the case of any large amount, meant that he became lord of the territory where the rice was grown, and, in the case of small quantities, signified that he was paid annually out of the official granaries. The system followed in England is exactly analogous. Grants of corn-yielding estates are not made, since the Crown has no such assets at its disposal, but grants of money are voted by Parliament, with the implied condition that they are intended to support the rank which, also, has been bestowed on their recipient in recognition of his merits. The bearer of a title of nobility is merely embarrassed by the distinction unless some means of supporting its dignity are forthcoming, and therefore practical England, when a man is made a Lord, takes care that he shall have resources to live as a Lord. The same principle was recognised in Japan in the early Meiji years. Thus when the EMPEROR bestowed a title of nobility, HIS MAJESTY usually accompanied it by a sum of money, which was treated as entailed property and specially designed to support the recipient's rank. We do not know whether HIS MAJESTY observed this rule in every instance, or whether its operation extended only to members of the old nobility, who, though belonging to the ranks of the kuge, were entirely without resources to figure in the world as Princes, Marquises or Counts. We do not know, too, whether the custom was operative in all instances or whether it has now fallen into abeyance. But it is at any rate evident that if Admiral Togo is to be raised to the peerage as a Viscount or a Count, he must have an income more or less commensurate with his rank, and the Diet should not hesitate to make a suitable appropriation. The Fiji Shimpō suggests a million of yen, basing that figure on the amount granted by Parliament to Lord ROBERTS. But England is not Japan. Togo would be extremely perplexed by the receipt of such a sum as a million yen. We imagine indeed that his mind will revolt against the idea of pecuniary reward in any shape or in any amount, but that is purely his own personal concern. The nation has to do its duty by him irrespective of his moral idiosyncracies.

ADVOCATES AND OPPONENTS OF THE ALLIANCE.

II.

IN a previous article we quoted at some length the arguments of Viscount TANI and Mr. FUKUMOTO SEI, who stand alone as opponents of the new Anglo-Japanese alliance. We now propose to quote some counterstatements. It should be understood, however, that no reference is here made to journalistic opinions. The newspapers, without any exception so far as we know, have approved the alliance in warm terms, and if they be regarded as representing public opinion, the latter must be considered unanimous. What we are dealing with in this article, however, are the views of distinguished individuals who have no journalistic organs. Of these the admitted spokesman is Mr. YANO FUMIO, formerly Japanese Representative in Peking. He writes in the Senji Gwaoh:—"The offensive and defensive alliance just concluded confers on Japan two great advantages. The first is that her navy in combination with that of England will have complete command of Far Eastern seas, so that Japan will be safe against aggression and her security will be as that of a rock. The second is that no third Power will be at all likely to stretch out a hand, and thus war will be effectually prevented. In return for these advantages Japan accepts a responsibility in the direction of India. As to the relative profit or loss accruing to Japan, I consider that there will be no loss. For nothing can compare in value with the absolute security that Japan acquires, above all when it is considered that this alliance, by averting serious complications, is more than likely to save us from any necessity of sending troops to India at all. Suppose for a moment that Russia were to attack India. Not only would she be there checked by Japan's armies, but also, from the direction of Vladivostock, Siberia would be invaded and she would thus have a foe on both sides. If we credit her with common sense, there are eight or nine chances in every ten that she will not be so foolish as to brave that danger. It behoves my countrymen to think carefully of the inestimable value attaching to the command of the sea in the Far East. Nothing can compare with it. The old alliance did not give us that command, and therefore we were obliged to spend large sums in equipping, entirely unaided, a great fleet of warships and steamers. If now, in the immediate sequel of our heavy outlays on account of the war, we had to find funds for further extensive preparations, our resources might not be equal to bearing the strain. It is thus most timely that this alliance should have been formed, since it assures us of tranquillity for a decade and enables us to foster our national strength. It is true of things in general that haste spells failure, deliberation success. Especially true is it of finance. To acquire a complete fleet within a short space of time would over-tax the national wealth, but if the effort be spread over a period of from 5 to 10 years, we should not feel it greatly. On the other hand, had we stood alone as we were, we might have been challenged at any moment, and it is in that possibility that the value of the alliance shows itself most conspicuously. An island empire like Japan must pay special attention to maritime defences and sea-power. Compared with the cost of making adequate naval preparations that of sending troops to India can not differ greatly. Naturally there must be some fixed ratio between the strength of the forces we may send to India and the strength of the fleet our ally may employ to defend our shores. That is a matter of mutual arrangement. From every point of view the alliance is vastly to our advantage."

It will be observed that Mr. YANO's article is not directly controversial. He makes no allusion to Viscount TANI's view. But these are directly combated in the pages of the Taiyo by Mr. TOYABE SHUNTEI. He writes thus:—"Viscount TANI, it is to be noted, has taken the lead in proclaiming his opposition to the extension of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. But instead of discussing the facts accurately he regards them through coloured spectacles and takes a subjective view of many points. Thus he holds that the action taken by Germany, Russia and France in compelling the rendition of Liaotung was because they detected evidences of an Anglo-Japanese entente: the three Powers, in short, were actuated by feelings of envy. This is the very converse of the truth. It was because of Russia's pressure in the Far East subsequently to the China-Japan war that England and this country joined hands. It may be that had not Russia planned aggressions in Eastern Asia, had she been really desirous of peace and had she recognized Japan's just rights, the Anglo-Japanese alliance would never have been made. These are facts familiar to all. (Here follows a historical resumé which we omit). They would be palpable to Viscount TANI but for his coloured spectacles. The Viscount's habitual conviction is that Europeans and Americans hate the Japanese. In extreme cases they conjure up a Yellow Peril; under ordinary circumstances they despise the Japanese as heretics and coloured men. Russia alone, having forty different races among her subjects, has very little of this dislike for aliens. That is Viscount TANI's idea. Yet among all Europeans it is the Russians who inveigh most loudly against the Yellow Peril. By means of this bogey they have persistently sought to alienate Occidental sympathy from Japan. The Russians above all others condemn the followers of alien creeds. Look at their terrible treatment of the Jews. On the contrary, England in her intercourse with us says nothing of alien creeds or alien races. She recognises Japan's true worth. She took the lead in making a treaty with us on lines of equality and she has actually allied herself with us. When Russia clamoured about the Yellow Peril, was it not England that declared the unsubstantial nature of such an argument? Russia fought with us because she despised us and would fain injure us. England allies herself with us because she respects us and desires to assist us. Then again Viscount TANI holds that Russia is Asiatic, England European, and from this premiss he argues that Russia attaches more importance to honour than to profit, whereas with mercantile England everything is a matter of accounts. Thus in disposition the Russians resemble the Japanese whereas the English are antipathetic, and from this Viscount TANI infers that the Russians, in spite of the issue of the war, will appreciate their own error, will sympathise with the valour shown by the Japanese and will finally direct their hostility against England, so that to extend the Anglo-Japanese alliance would be, in effect, to commit suicide in company with England. Viscount TANI has always been an opponent of war. His ideal is to have an army purely for purposes of national defence and to maintain the country's rights by means of diplomacy. He would preserve the state independent and unaided. But war can not be always avoided. If any country's independence be assailed the greatest enemy of war must admit the necessity of fighting. Such was the case in the war with Japan ten years ago and in the war with Russia to-day. Is it forgotten how, after the former war, Japan was put to shame by three countries in alliance? Why was it that on the present occasion no country ventured to stretch out an interfering hand? Simply because of our alliance with England. If then the alliance had been extended and had been from the first an offensive and defensive compact, would not war have been averted altogether? Japan must hereafter increase her fleet, but this new alliance saves her from having to perform the task hurriedly and enables her to undertake it at her leisure. The British fleet will secure our command of the sea. That is an immense advantage. In return for it we undertake to send troops to India if necessary. That is natural. Viscount TANI's theory is that Russia believing Japan to have gone to war at England's instigation, is angry with England and by operations in the direction of India will try to avenge the defeat she has suffered. So we too think. We are indeed convinced. But for that very reason it is a fair bargain that we should lend our troops to defend the Indian frontier if England lends her ships to maintain our command of the sea. It may thus be predicted that even though Russia forms such projects they will fail. Viscount TANI's ideas run contrary to the times. Unfortunately he brings excessive solicitude to his discussion of State affairs and lacks cool judgment. When he held the portfolio of Agriculture and Commerce in the Iro Cabinet, Marquis Iro sent him abroad to inspect foreign civilization. Yet, to every one's surprise, no sooner had he returned than he attacked the policy of adopting European models and created a commotion in the Ministry, his view being that such a policy would ruin the country. Then when the programme of armament's expansion was inaugurated after the war with China, he forthwith opposed it and declared that Japan would share Italy's financial fate. So too he takes a gloomy view of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. It is his habit to be pessimistic. After this war, he says the national debt will amount to two thousand millions of yen. The interest alone will be 100 millions. But the state's income is 320 millions, so that 220 millions only will remain after paying interest on the debt, and out of that remainder a large sum must be disbursed for the support of the families of those killed or maimed in the war. Then there are the post-bellum enterprises. What margin remains for making profitless and injurious alliance? That is TANI's view. It means that Japan is on the verge of ruin. Surely that is the acme of pessimism? The sum of the matter is that he may be very good as an individual for ringing the tocsin of alarm in a degenerate age, but he could never be a great statesman. He is simply a political critic not a practical man of the world."

MR. TOYABE'S essay is of considerable length. Only the essential parts of it are here translated. From the discussions of these four writers our readers will be able to gather a tolerably clear idea of what the opponents and the advocates of the alliance think. The former seem to be enormously in the minority. In fact it may well be doubted whether any Cabinet ever took a step so universally acclaimed as is the conclusion of this alliance in Japan.

SOME AMERICAN VIEWS ABOUT JAPAN.

MR. W. T. STEAD who is not in any sense a lover of Japan, so far as we can ascertain, and who, consequently, is a bitter opponent of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, has collected in the Review of Reviews several expressions of American opinion more or less in support of his own mood. He quotes from the Atlantic Monthly, from the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and from Scribner's Magazine. The first named periodical can not be called anti-Japanese, but its writings certainly suggest uneasy thoughts. Summing up the results of the war, it says that Russia must get out of Manchuria and stay out, and must abandon her dreams of empire upon the Pacific. "France must cast aside that secret scheme of hers—the scheme of acquiring the entire southern tier of Chinese provinces, by which she has hoped to rival Great Britain in her Indian empire. Germany will recognise the limit to any further extension of her colony at Kiaochow. And it is not beyond the bounds of belief that Hongkong, for years the greatest smuggling depot in the world, may eventually be given back to China, from whom it was wrested at the conclusion of the first Opium War." In short this writer makes the forecast that Occidental aggressions of every kind in the Far East must cease as a result of Japan's victories. It appears to be a just forecast, but that the tenure of Hongkong will be affected is not conceivable. The writer in the Atlantic Monthly cannot have seen Hongkong. Indeed we gather that his information is faulty in various respects, for he speaks of Wei-hai-wei having been "seized" by England when Russia took possession of Port Arthur, which is an essentially misleading description. But as to Hongkong the idea that England should surrender this Liverpool of the Far East, this magnificent settlement which stands as an imperishable monument of British enterprise, is extravagant. Hongkong, originally obtained under the humble title of a place to careen ships, is now an essential part of the British empire, and British ships will continue to be careened there as long as that Empire lasts.

Three writers contribute articles to the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. They are Major-General WILSON, Mr. J. H. HAMMOND and Admiral MELVILLE. The first-named writer is so wide of the mark as to allege that, according to his assured belief, Japan, before her first alliance with England, "sought a modus vivendi with Russia but failed; and even made proposals for a friendly alliance, but was rejected," whereupon she "turned towards Great Britain who received her with open arms." He then proceeds thus with reference to the alliance:—

This treaty was signed on January 30th, and became known to the world about March 1st following. That it broke the concert of the Powers cannot now be doubted. It changed the situation materially and made it certain that war would follow at no distant day. Indeed, it is generally believed by people who do not, in such great matters, yield to their sympathies, that but for this treaty Japan would not have begun war when she did. If this is so, it is evident that the blame, if any exists, must rest equally on Great Britain and Japan, and that in the end the consequences will probably be divided between them according to their vulnerability and the power of Russia.

This theory that the alliance was responsible for the war has been enunciated by other writers also, and is a favourite doctrine with certain journalists in the Far East. Who is in a position to assert with any confidence that Japan would have tamely endured Russian aggressions had she not been assured of having Great Britain to keep the lists? That is what it amounts to. The alliance, as originally drafted, did not promise to Japan any direct assistance whatever from Great Britain except in the event of a third Power's interference. Why then should it have encouraged her to go to war? Above all, why should it have encouraged Russia to pursue the arbitrary courses which precipitated war? That is where the logic of these theorists seems to break down. If the alliance had any obvious tendency to incite Japan, then surely it should have tended to deter Russia, unless we assume that the latter wished to fight with the former, a proposition which shifts virtually the whole responsibility to Russia's shoulders. Moreover there is involved in this theory the postulate that Japan forced things to a hostile issue, and most assuredly no honest critic can entertain such an idea. The world agrees that Japan spared no effort to avoid an appeal to the sword, and once that is admitted every shred of reason is stripped from the pretence that Japan's mood, or any of the factors which contributed to Japan's mood, caused the war.

In the same periodical Mr. HAMMOND discusses the commercial aspect of the problem, and concludes, not only that Japan will be a strong commercial competitor of the United States, but also that unless the Pacific slope policy of excluding the coloured races be modified, serious complications must ensue between Tokyo and St. Petersburg. He further thinks that Japan will form a powerful navy and commenting on that outlook he writes:—

Their naval preparedness will require that we also shall keep powerful squadrons on the Pacific. True, the completion of the Panama Canal will make our entire navy more mobile. Still, we are now vulnerable in the Pacific at Manila and Honolulu, and strong Pacific squadrons will be our policy of insurance as the outcome of the Japanese victories. And not only must we ourselves build fresh fleets, we must cultivate the closest relations possible with that other power which has also great Pacific possessions to protect—from Tasmania and Sydney to Puget Sound; from Singapore and Hongkong to Wei-hai-wei.

The war involves then that we, and Great Britain also, must maintain formidable naval forces, with strong Pacific bases, and that the most intimate relations must characterise the diplomacy of the two great English-speaking races.

The English admiral, Chichester, said at Manila to the admiral of another fleet, "Only Admiral Dewey knows what I should do in a certain contingency." That perhaps, without any formal alliance must be the unbroken relationship between the American and British admiralties.

Could any more conclusive answer be formulated to this suggestion than the fact that immediately after Mr. HAMMOND's article was penned, the extended Anglo-Japanese alliance was formed? That the policy of exclusion pursued by America will not, if persisted in, cause any complications with Japan, only a rash man could venture to allege, but the contingency of England and the United States combining against Japan sounds ludicrously chimerical at present.

Admiral MELVILLE, writing in Scribner's, shows much apprehension of the gradual growth of China to formidable military dimensions under Japan's instruction and incentive, and thinks that she may then enact and enforce against American citizens the same drastic exclusion laws that America operates against the Chinese. This is an outlook which derives its colour mainly from conjecture and does not lend itself to intelligent discussion. The Chinese have already evinced a disposition to pay America in her own coin, and the tendency may grow for aught we can see to the contrary. In fact, this problem undoubtedly constitutes the little cloud in the otherwise clear firmament of the United States' relations with the Far East. It is a cloud of America's own manufacture, and its spread, should it spread, can not be laid at the door of either Japan or China.

The last of the above group of writers is Mr. T. F. MILLARD, whose essay appears in Scribner's. We suspect him to be one of the disgruntled correspondents, for he speaks in a strain of undiluted prejudice. A large part of Japan's reputation is pronounced by him to be due to a carefully engineered newspaper boom. The eulogies heaped upon her and the fine characteristics ascribed to her are described as a "rubbish pile which must be cleared away before any intelligent grasp of the immediate issues of the Far-Eastern question may be had." He winds up with this declaration:—

The plain truth is the time is still far off when Japan can be dealt with except as an Oriental nation, and diplomatic intercourse or policy that does not keep this in view runs the risk of committing an error that may be very grave in its consequence.

Assuming that the epithet "Oriental" is applied mainly with reference to carelessness of truth, we should say that nothing more Oriental can be found in the Orient than Mr. MILLARD himself. Not that he willingly deceives his readers. That, perhaps, can not be laid to his charge. But certainly a man who, without any preliminary study, undertakes to vilipend a nation, is not honest and can not for a moment claim to be honest.

THE NAVAL REVIEW.

The great naval review to which all classes and nationalities in this country looked forward with such pleasurable anticipation, took place on Monday strictly according to programme and now the event has passed into history. In their very nature such proceedings forbid comprehensive description; for they extend over a scale of almost stupendous magnitude. The lines of warships are prolonged, as in this case, to a distance of some five miles and the oblong space in which they lie measures over two miles across. Add to these conditions the smoke, haze that even in the most favourable weather is produced by and hangs over such a large assemblage of steam vessels, and it will be seen that the spectator who witnesses such a pageant must view by far the greater part of it in very dim perspective. If he is privileged to be a guest of the authorities then he must obey their behests, and if the vessel to which he is assigned remains at anchor during the review, plainly his knowledge of what transpires must be comparatively restricted. At the last review, which was held at Kobe, the steamer upon which the Japanese and foreign press representatives were accommodated followed the Asama and her escorts so that those on board had an opportunity of realizing the stately grandeur of such a spectacle. No arrangement of that kind was in force on this occasion; and the members of the Japanese and foreign press, with the very large company of members of the two Houses of the Diet who crowded the decks of the Yawata Maru, saw only the entrance of the Asama and her attendant cruisers between the line of the British ships and that headed by the Shikishima, and their emergence an hour later between the next lines, those headed by the Maya and Chitose. Far more fortunate were the distinguished guests on the Manchu Maru (the same that took a large company of legislators and others to points near Port Arthur) who consisted of State officials and members of the Diet. Following closely in the wake of the Imperial flagship these privileged people were enabled to regale their eyes with a truly glorious scene.

The mists that had beclouded the early sunbeams were soon dispelled and when the majority of those proposing to participate in the review found themselves at the Pier there was good prospect of favourable weather. Already, by 6.30, the streets were filled with streams of sight-seers; along the Bluff northern road there was a fast thickening mass of Japanese bent on securing satisfactory positions on the high lands outside the residential section. Also flags and lanterns were being hung out and the whole city was assuming an air of unmistakable demonstration. There had been a wholesale closing of business establishments, both Japanese and foreign, and there were few premises that did not display bunting or lanterns.

On the Pier there was a scene of bustle. As the invited persons arrived they were met by naval officers and bluejackets who inspected their cards and assigned them to the various boats in which they were to be conveyed to their ship. It has to be placed to the credit of those charged with controlling and directing this large collection of guests that their arrangements proved eminently satisfactory. Even thus, however, it was long past the appointed time when a departure was made for the Tainan and Yawata Maru, and when the Manchu Maru and Toyohashi swung off from the Pier to take their settled stations. The Asama, meanwhile, lay at anchor just inside the harbour entrance awaiting the arrival of her Imperial Commander-in-Chief, and from all sides as it seemed to the observer steamers were converging upon the centre of interest. The warships, however, had already taken up their stations and all was well-ordered and silent in their lines. It was truly a magnificent spectacle that greeted the eyes of those in the ships situated ahead of the lines. According to the plan the various craft were disposed in a vast parallelogram, and in many lines, all lying about W. by S. and E. by N. These lay with the chief ships at the westward end of each line—or at any rate of the main lines—so that they exactly faced the harbour entrance at a distance of about 3000 yards, and thus the Imperial progress was to be made in nearly a direct line from the harbour. The most northerly line consisted of hospital ships and transports, the former (Kobe and Saikō) conspicuous by their white hulls and Red Cross funnels. How many vessels were moored in this outer line it would be impossible to say, for they stretched far away from the hospital ships in the direction of Haneda, and the farthest were mere specks on the smoky horizon. Inside this line lay the Nikko, Kasuga and Kumano Maru. Further in the southward, were moored the torpedo-boats and torpedo-boat destroyers in four beautifully correct lines, the most southerly group being headed by the gunboats Chokai, Maya, etc. Further south stretched the lines of larger ships, the Shikishima (Admiral Togo's flagship) heading one column, while the Chitose rode abreast of her and formed the western extremity of the other. Astern of the Chitose there were moored 19 cruisers and converted cruisers with, at the eastern end, the captured ships Anegawa Maru (formerly the Angara) and the Kanzaki Maru (formerly the Ekaterinaslav). The line at the head of which flew the flag of Admiral Togo consisted of the battleships, then the big cruisers, and the coast defence and other large vessels with, at the eastern end, the Mishima (Senjōrin), Okinoshima (Abraxin), Tango (Poltava), Sagami (Peresviet) and Iki (Nicolaï I) 19 ships in all. Thus, as will be seen, groups of captured ships were presented to his Majesty's inspection at the ends of the two lines furthest from the area of honour, that lying immediately contiguous to the flagship, in which the reviewing ship subsequently anchored. Beyond the main columns thus described lay the British ships, headed by the Diadem, and the British destroyers, and in the same line was moored the American battleship Wisconsin. Further towards the Yokohama shore were stationed a multitude of steamers and other craft bearing spectators, whose numbers even it would be rash to guess at, but conspicuous among sight-seeing ships was the big Princess Alice, which carried a large company of foreigners. Viewed from the high lands that fringe the bay these dispositions must in the clear weather have presented a scene of thrilling panoramic splendour; seen from an adjacent vessel they irresistibly inspired a sense of tremendous force and majesty. All the ships, of course, were fully dressed with bunting and the spectacle presented to favoured beholders on shore cannot have failed to arouse admiration.

His Imperial Majesty reached Yokohama at 9.20 and his arrival was signalized by the thunder of guns from the combined fleets; so also was his embarking on the Asama; and at length the latter got under way about twenty minutes past ten. As she came out of the harbour entrance, the Yayeyama, which had been anchored where the men-of-war usually lie, got under way and led the big cruiser round the lines, the Chihaya and Tatsuta following and the Manshu Maru steaming astern. They passed between the Diadem and Shikishima, up the long lines of warships, they turned at the other end where the captured vessels lay and when they emerged between the Maya and Chitose a full hour had elapsed. The Asama then anchored in a position due west of the Shikishima, and the other vessels that had accompanied her took up their allotted stations near her. Afterwards His Majesty received the leading officers of the fleet on board the Asama, and about a o'clock returned in that vessel to the harbour, landed, and after a short rest at the Customs Building drove to the station and left for Tokyo at 3.45. The Crown Prince, who had spent the day on the Shikishima, left for the capital by a later train.

When the commanding officers of the Fleet assembled on board the Asama, to which they were summoned by signal at the conclusion of the Emperor's inspection of the lines, His Majesty addressed them as follows:—

"We have inspected the triumphant Fleet and it has pleased Us much to find the vessels in good order and the spirit of the men high. I exhort you all by the exercise of even greater earnestness to elevate the prestige of the Imperial Navy."

Admiral Togo's reply was:—

"With thankfulness we have had the great honour of Your Majesty's presence at the Review of the victorious fleet, and we are profoundly impressed by Your Majesty's gracious message. We, Your Majesty's servants, will exercise ever increasing earnestness in accordance with the Imperial Commands."

The five submarines which were anchored opposite the Shikishima performed a number of evolutions in the presence of His Imperial Majesty. They moved about in the neighbourhood of the Asama, sometimes were submerged, and doubtless conveyed to the Emperor a sense of the importance of these craft. Their movements were watched with the keenest interest by all interested in this new branch of naval offence.

The fleet was illuminated in the evening, beginning at 6 p.m., and lasting till 11 p.m., but the effect was hardly as striking from the Bund as if the ships had been closer in. On the Bluff, however, the spectacle was very grand.

In Yokohama, there were many decorations, but perhaps the most effective—being on the Bund, and so widely visible—was that displayed at No. 7, (Mr. M. Beart's). This, a design in electric lamps of the British and Japanese flags, had admiring crowds in front all the evening. The C.P.R. offices displayed Togo's famous signal in coloured lights. Honcho-dori with its numerous banks was beautifully illuminated and so were Banten-dori and Motomachi.

THE EMPEROR'S PROGRESS.

The Emperor, attired in the plainest of Naval uniforms, arrived by the 9.20 a.m. train in company with Viscount Tanaka, Minister for the Imperial Household; Marquis Tokudaiji, Grand Chamberlain; Prince Iwakura, Secretary of the Board of Chamberlains; General Baron Okazawa, Chief Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor; Mr. Nagasaki, Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies; Rear-Admiral Inouye; Baron Yoneta; Dr. Oka; Mr. Niwa, Secretary of the Imperial Household; Viscount Hojo, Mr. Yoshida, Colonel Daijo, Viscount Hinonishi, Baron Sawa; and Colonel H. Saki and Captain J. Muto, of the Imperial Body Guards.

After a short stay at the hatoba His Majesty embarked on the yacht Hatsukaze and proceeded in her to the Asama.

When the Crown Prince and the Emperor arrived at the Yokohama railway station, Governor Sufu and the officials of Kanagawa and the leading merchants welcomed them. A naval band was also in attendance and played the national anthem. Two companies of bluejackets under command of Lieutenant Hirasawa composed the guard of honour at the station, while at the hatoba a company of bluejackets from Yokosuka were drawn up under command of Sub-Lieutenant Suzuki. Here another naval band was stationed, playing selections.

Prince Arisugawa and his son, and Prince Fushimi, the younger, were present on the Shikishima, coming to Yokohama the previous day.

Among the officers assembled at the hatoba were Lieut.-Colonel Okano, of the Imperial Headquarters; Lieut. Commander Takeuchi, of the Naval Staff Office; Pay-master-Colonel Utsunomiya, of the Army Department; Pay-master Oriso, of the converted cruiser Taichu Maru.

Admiral Togo landed at the hatoba at 8 a.m. and proceeded to the railway station in a carriage provided by the Kencho where he awaited the arrival of the Emperor and the Crown Prince.

The Emperor returned from the Asama at 2.30 p.m. landing at the English hatoba and left by the 3.45 p.m. train for Tokyo. Subsequently the Crown Prince landed at the same place and left by the 4.10 p.m. train.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

The Crown Prince arrived in Yokohama by the 8.53 a.m. train. He drove at once to the English hatoba and proceeded to the up-stair room of the Customs Luggage Examination Office on the pier. After a short rest he proceeded to the Shikishima.

The Crown Prince took part in the Review as a Naval captain and acted as a member of Admiral Togo's staff. It was observed that, at the time of returning to the ships from the railway station where Admiral Togo and a number of officers had assembled to receive the Emperor, His Imperial Highness refused to enter a carriage, though pressed by Admiral Togo to do so. He declared himself to be present merely as a Captain in the Navy who served under Admiral Togo's orders, and he persisted in his resolve to mount a jinrikisha after Admiral Togo had seated himself in a similar humble vehicle. On the occasion of the Emperor's return after the Review, the Prince still retained his character of Captain, and again rode in a jinrikisha. Of course this was not the first time that His Imperial Highness had ridden in a jinrikisha. He had often done so when making trips in the country. But it certainly was the first instance of anything of the kind at a grand State ceremonial.

FROM THE "PRINCESS ALICE."

Residents of Yokohama were indebted to the enterprise and public spirit of the local agents of the North German Lloyd for enabling many of them to obtain a close view of the greatest naval display that Japan has ever witnessed. Fortunately the fine European liner Princess Alice had arrived in port in time to enable the Company to open her to the community for a day's excursion to the scene of the review and as soon as official permission had been obtained notice was published by Messrs. Ahrens & Co. and tickets issued for the accommodation of 400 or more passengers, and such was the demand that many applications had to be refused.

All arrangements were admirably carried out. Four steam-launches, including the big Canadian Pacific tender, had been provided to carry the numerous passengers, amongst whom was a considerable sprinkling of ladies, from the French hatoba to the steamer, between 7 and 7.45 a.m., and at 8 o'clock punctually the Princess

Alice hove up her anchor and left her moorings to take up the position assigned to her, a couple of cables' length astern of H. B. M. cruiser Andromeda, next the flagship of the British squadron, H.M.S. Diadem, the first of the British line, outside the line of the Japanese battle-ships, and just beyond the British torpedo-boat destroyer squadron. From the three upper decks of the fine liner a capital view was obtained of the whole field, though, owing to the somewhat grey and over-clouded skies, the smaller vessels forming the most inshore line could not be distinctly defined. Before 9 a.m. the Princess Alice had taken up her position and her passengers spread themselves around the upper decks to view the lay of the vast concourse of war craft which stretched away to the east and south east of her position. Being at the angle of the field, the symmetry of the regular lines could not be seen to full advantage, but the length of the lines of British and American vessels and of the Japanese battleships could be definitely made out. After a wait of about half an hour, the first salute from all the saluting ships of the assembled fleet boomed forth and the whole field of operations was temporarily enshrouded in smoke. This cannonade announced the arrival of His Majesty the Emperor in Yokohama, and shortly after, the British despatch vessel Alacrity, which had been at her anchor within the Breakwater when the Princess left, came up and took up a position to the west of and in line with the Diadem. At about half past ten the armoured cruiser Asama, looking clean and trim as a new pin, though of course rather dull in her leaden war paint, with the Emperor on board, was seen approaching. She was preceded by the cruiser Yayeyama and immediately followed by the Chihaya, while the Manshu and Tatsuta brought up the rear. At a signal from the respective flagships all the crews were piped to quarters and lined the rails of each ship, and another imperial salute of 21 guns was fired, the Alacrity this time joining in. As the Asama entered the channel between the British and the Japanese battleship lines the crews of each vessel as she was passed gave three hearty cheers and banzai whilst the Band of the Princess Alice also played the Japanese anthem. So the Imperial naval cortege continued its course between the quadruple lines of battleships and cruisers and gradually disappeared from our view, until near noon, when the Asama took up a position in line with and on the left of the line of battleships. From 12 to 1 p.m. visits were paid by the respective Admirals and officers from the flagships Shikishima and Diadem, on board the Asama, while in the interim the excursionists on board the Princess Alice, who had by this time worked up a very healthy appetite, did ample justice to a most excellent tiffin, washed down by welcome draughts of capital beer—or any other liquor or wine desired. The capacious first saloon of the Princess was filled to overflowing from 1.30 to 1 o'clock by successive parties of lunchers who were not only well supplied with good things, but were also most excellently served by the well trained staff of stewards. The comfortable smoking room was also made good use of and proved a boon to many who got somewhat weary of the long wait until the Asama again got under way to return to Yokohama with His Majesty on board. After the Emperor had landed the Princess Alice again weighed anchor and steamed slowly along the line of British cruisers and the American battleship Winconsin, which was saluted with the inspiring strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" by our band, and beyond to the end of the line of Japanese battleships, passing in order the Azuma, Kasuga, Nishin, Iwakushima, Hashidate, Fuso, Chinyen, Minoshima, and the four converted Russian vessels, Okinoshima, Tango, Sagami,—which still showed the shot holes in her funnels—and the Iki. As we passed the crews could be seen at work fixing and testing the electric lights in lines and figures for the night illumination. Then, turning round, the Princess returned to port on the same line. Passing the Winconsin, the latter's band returned the Princess Alice's compliment by playing "Auld Lang Syne," and the Princess paid the British cruisers the high compliment of playing and repeating "God Save the King" as she passed each separate cruiser. Before 6 o'clock all the excursionists were once more landed on the English hatoba, after a most enjoyable outing, and a fair sight of the greatest pacific naval display which the Far East has yet afforded.

FROM THE BLUFF.

When all is said and done those fortunate folks who were able to witness the review from private gardens on the Bluff immediately facing the Bay had the best view of the proceedings. Here the complete panorama stretching from the hatoba, where the Emperor embarked, round to the headland of Juniten, and embracing in its arc the whole of the harbour and anchorage, was in full view. By nine o'clock the early morning mists had cleared away, and moderately good eyesight enabled one to pick up the U. S. S. Wisconsin at the end of the line of British ships, and the smaller craft among the Japanese flotilla, while to any one possessing a slight knowledge of ships it was possible to distinguish all the inshore vessels without recourse to glasses and binoculars. The writer, standing in the garden of No. 119-B. Bluff, had the pleasure of seeing the Emperor put off from the hatoba in his yacht and draw alongside the Asama. Immediately upon His Majesty reaching the big armoured cruiser all her flags were hauled down and then, a moment after, the Imperial standard was hoisted at the main-truck and the thunder of the guns announced that the review had begun. The passage of the Asama up and down the long lines of warships was followed with ease and so well steered was she, as well as the pilot ship and the three vessels which had the privilege of steaming behind her, that a perfect line was kept, each ship shutting out the other from the observer's line of vision. The imperial progress coming to an end, the Asama anchored and then the bay was dotted with the picket-boats conveying the commanders and high officers of the assembled fleet to the Emperor's flagship. It was a pretty sight and the most animated and interesting of the day's proceedings. The Bluff roads, needless to relate, were thronged from an early hour with thousands of would-be sightseers, and from every possible spot facing the sea the spectators gathered, not in tens, but in hundreds; but as is usual in Japan, the utmost decorum prevailed, only the most boyish spirits among them raising cries of bansai every now and again.

AT KANAGAWA AND ELSEWHERE.

Several hundred thousand persons, including members of the Red Cross Society, Kanagawa Branch, and a great number of ladies belonging to the Aikoku Fujin-kai, assembled at the heights overlooking Kanagawa in the early morning, but most people returned to Yokohama, the view being obstructed by a heavy fog. At Moto Benten hundreds of people put to sea in sampans and in accordance with the naval regulations they had to leave for their places at an unearthly hour. Many good people from the country districts, failing to obtain sleeping accommodation in the town, spent Sunday night roaming the streets, and so great was the demand for refreshments, liquid and solid, that the big restaurants in Isezakicho, Motomachi, etc., were absolutely cleaned bare before noon.

The following is a list of the Japanese warships which took part in the review:

THE FLEET V. Y.C. AND A.C.

This match, which had to be postponed last week owing to unfavourable weather, was played on Tuesday and proved a most interesting and closely contested game. They commenced shortly after 10 a.m., the home team going first to the wicket, with Dr. Emerson and Strome as their representatives. The pitch was rather dead and the scoring was slow at first, but later as Kilby, Smith, Dixon and Mollison got into the twenties and when the innings closed the side had put together a total of 135 runs. The visitors opened their innings with Lieut. Papage and Midshipman Combs, and the former played the finest innings of the whole game, and only at last fell by playing a ball from Emerson into Brady's hands after making 68 for his side. Engineer Lieut. De Paris was the only other heavy scorer for the Fleet, adding 38 to the score. At 20 minutes to five the last man went in and the score stood at 130, six only being wanted to win. The last player rose to the occasion and was loudly cheered as he made a fine cut to the boundary, while three or four singles soon followed and the game was secured. The margin was not large, however, as the last wicket fell for 140 runs. The scores were as follow:—

FATAL ACCIDENT IN THE CREEK.

A very sad accident happened in the Creek at Yokohama on Sunday, involving it is feared the loss of four lives. A launch belonging to the converted cruiser Kasuga Maru, with a crew of five men on board, ran into the Creek about 5 a.m. to replenish the water in the boiler. Unfortunately the water had been allowed to run down too low and when the cold fresh water was turned on from a water-boat the boiler exploded. Two of the sailors were killed outright, two others are reported missing, while the fifth man escaped slightly injured.

The last of the missing bodies was found in the Creek on Tuesday, thus bringing the tale of loss by Sunday's tragedy to four, as predicted at the time. The injured man is progressing.

COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE AT CHRIST CHURCH.

In the presence of a large assemblage a service commemorative of Nelson's victory at Trafalgar in 1805—of which the centenary has now occurred—and also signaling the peace which has just been proclaimed, took place in Christ Church, Yokohama, on Sunday. The Church, which was crowded, was decorated in a simple manner, the Union Jack and evergreens being prominent.

About a hundred men, bluejackets and marines and officers from the British Squadron attended, the whole, in the absence of Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, being commanded by Captain Savory, Flag Captain. The service was the usual morning prayer, special parts being introduced to mark the occasion. Hymns 166, 298, 165 and 379, were sung (the first-named, the Old Hundred, opening the service) as also Psalms 29 and 147, Mrs. Field playing the organ with great effect.

In the course of the sermon, Rev. W. P. G. Field said:—The object of their presence that morning was to consecrate before God those mingled feelings of satisfaction, relief, and joy which, he supposed, had been stirring in the hearts of every one there. One thing was certain that the rejoicing that had found outward expression in the festivities of the last ten days ought to find religious expression in some service of thanksgiving to Him Who is the real author and giver of all good things. As to the feelings that prompted such a thanksgiving: there was first a thrill of satisfaction and legitimate pride which must pass through the heart of every Englishman here when he realized that just one hundred years ago the previous day was fought that glorious battle which delivered their country from the overhanging menace of a threatened invasion, when the consummate genius of one of the very greatest military commanders in the annals of the world's history stood almost within sight of our shores ready to swoop down upon our island home so soon as that narrow strip of ocean, England's most ancient ally and protection, offered safe passage for his flotilla convoy. And if for a moment their joy in contemplating that victory should be clouded by the thought of what it cost, yet they must reflect that having passed through all the perils of his strenuous life the hero died at last in the hour of England's deliverance, leaving to his countrymen a name which will be a perpetual inspiration to deeds of lofty courage so long as England remains a nation. He welcomed the representatives of the British squadron also, for their presence demanded its share in the thanksgiving of the day. It might be asked, he said, why combine two such totally different subjects in one thanksgiving service as the Commemoration of Trafalgar and the conclusion of peace between two countries neither of which had anything to do with that great victory? It might be sufficient to answer that of course every nation of the earth had ample cause for thanksgiving when He who alone made wars to cease throughout the earth restored to the world at large the priceless blessing of peace. But apart from such generalisation had their American kinsmen no special cause for rejoicing, after they had for weeks been watching so anxiously for a result in accordance with the efforts of their illustrious President? And apart from the material interests secured by her ally surely Britain had cause for thanksgiving in her relief from the of general war, and for her being to-day united in bonds of friendship more close than for generations with her neighbour in Europe. They also rejoiced that with the conclusion of this war a new people entered into the comity of nations, on an equal footing with the highest, and they had cause for rejoicing in the conclusion of the second Anglo-Japanese Alliance. And now, he concluded, Japan has made good her title, and simultaneously we are united with her in a yet closer alliance. Hand in hand we face the future. For better, for worse, during the next ten years at least our destinies are in this quarter of the globe inextricably interwoven. Let us not forget, then, in our thanksgiving for the past to pray for the future also that God will bless this alliance to our mutual benefit. Let us pray above all that this agreement which will ostensibly take effect in case of war only, will prove itself to be the effectual guarantee of a lasting peace so that every nation affected thereby may be enabled to carry out its own pacific ideals and that all by the harmony of their united working may help to fulfil God's purpose for the world.

GARDEN PARTY TO ADMIRAL TOGO IN YOKOHAMA.

It was very unfortunate that the garden party given at the cricket ground by the Yokohama citizens on the afternoon of Oct. 25 in honour of Admiral Togo and his officers, was marred by rain. The morning opened with gloomy promises, but the rain held off until just before the festivities commenced. At 1 p.m. a naval band and two city bands began the proceedings by playing various selections and the usual day fire-works were discharged. Admiral Togo and the other commanders and officers arrived from Tokyo by the 1.09 p.m. train. Governor Sufu, Mayor Ichihara, Mr. K. Hashimoto, Director of the Yokohama Customs, Mr. Watanabe, President of the Yokohama District Court, and other officials of the local government offices, leading traders, etc., welcomed them at the platform. The Admiral drove slowly through Honcho-dori and Sakai-cho in a flower-bedecked carriage, similar to the one he used in Tokyo the day before. The streets were lined with crowds and never have we heard lustier bansai than those raised as Togo made his way through the dense masses of Yokohama citizens and school-children. Some two hundred Japanese naval officers landed between 1 and 1.30 p.m. at the English hatoba proceeded to the cricket ground. Representatives of various public bodies, including the Shohei-gikwai, the branch of the Ladies Patriotic Society, and the Red Cross Society welcomed the sailors with shouts of bansai. Admiral Togo and his commanders were conducted to the up-stair rooms of the pavilion of the cricket ground where they spent some minutes. The officers were led to a pavilion, which had been specially provided for the occasion, on the right of the elaborately decorated grounds, and here Mayor Ichihara read an address, in the following terms:—

The negotiations by which the Emperor tried to conclude the dispute were ruptured at a critical time and our combined squadron had to assume the offensive. At the outset of the war, we attacked the valiant enemy at Chemulpo and at Port Arthur causing him considerable loss at which he was greatly discouraged, and final victory was fostered by these engagements. Subsequently our great commander performed great feats at the blockade and kept the Russians cooped up in Port Arthur until it fell. Nevertheless, the Russians made a wonderful attempt to further attack Japan by organizing another fleet consisting of a more powerful force than the Japanese. It proceeded from the western hemisphere to the Far East in a most splendid manner under a highly respected commander. Meanwhile the eyes of the world were attracted to the new Russian naval force and anxiety was entertained as to the Japanese success. Admiral Togo and his staff, foreseeing the enemy's strategy, drew up a plan to welcome him. We at home quietly awaited the result. The enemy were certainly entrapped and annihilated in the Sea of Japan. The success achieved astonished all the world. This great victory made our country safe from invasion and dissipated all our fears. On the other hand, the squadrons rendered valuable assistance to the investing army under General Nogi, which caused the Russians in Port Arthur to surrender. Further the squadrons gave splendid help in the transportation of the Manchurian Armies. Their merits do not end with these achievements. The trade between Europe and America and Japan has been surely fostered. The citizens of Yokohama recollecting the great achievement of our squadrons can not find proper words to thank Admiral Togo and his distinguished officers and men. The Mayor added that he was representing the citizens who profoundly appreciated the merits of the fleet and wished to thank the great commander and his staff and welcome them in their triumph.

The Mayor further said that Yokohama citizens had intended to entertain all the bluejackets, but this intention was cancelled after receiving an intimation from the Chief of the Naval Staff. Therefore citizens decided to present thirty thousand towels to them instead.

At the conclusion of the address, the Mayor led off three bansai for the combined squadron and three for Admiral Togo.

Admiral Togo briefly replied. He said:—

I, Togo, representing the united squadron thank the citizens for the enthusiastic welcome given them this day. I also thank the citizens for their presents to my men.

Thereafter refreshments were served. Among those present were: Admiral Togo, Vice-Admirals Kataoka, Kamimura, Dewa, Uryu, and Mitsu, Rear-Admirals Togo, Yamada, Taketomi, Nakao, Kokura, Shimamura, Inouye and Kato, Surgeon-Admiral Yamamoto, Engineer-Admiral Yamaki, and their staff officers, together with some thousand other officers, including the Commanders and Vice-Commanders of the various ships, Admiral Viscount Ito, Chief of the Naval Staff Office; General Viscount Sakuma, Commander of the Tokyo Defence; General Baron Iseji, Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial Body Guards at home; Vice Admiral Ijima, Vice-Chief of the Naval Staff Office; Major-General Nagaoka, Vice-Chief of the Army Staff Office.

The Committee of Entertainment had provided several dances by geisha, acrobatic performances and No dances. Among the No dances were the Ninin-hakama, Bo-shibari, Utsuozaru roku-jiso, which are allegorical and satirical skits upon military morals in ancient times. Rain was coming down heavily by half past two and the proceedings naturally lost much of their savour. Admiral Togo and his staff left at 3.45 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the Admirals, their staff officers and others proceeded to the official residence of Governor Sufu. There they were entertained to dinner at 6.30 p.m., at which some leading foreign residents were also present.

After the dispersal of the garden party, a large lantern procession, consisting of about five thousand men under the leadership of Mr. Asada, ex-member of the Upper House, paraded the town. A little before 6 p.m., the President gave the following speech:—

We, Yokohama citizens, repeat our congratulations to the navy on its successes, which have saved our country. Now we organize a procession which is the final word of thanks to the navy.

Subsequently the procession started and proceeded through Nippon-odori. In front of the Kencho and the British and American Consulates, the crowd tendered hearty bansai, after which they advanced by the Bund to Motomachi and then passed along several other streets. During the evening many fire-works were discharged.

REOPENING OF VAN SCHAICK HALL.

Van Schaick Hall, which has been in the builders' hands all the summer, was formally reopened on Tuesday evening with a concert and variety entertainment, the proceeds of which are to be divided between the enlargement fund and the Men's Reading Room. Although a considerable amount of work has yet to be done, sufficient is finished to enable one to gather a good idea of the improvements. To begin with, the building has been extended to the roadway, with the result that the seating accommodation is nearly doubled; the old inconvenient side-staircase, with its twists and turns, has been done away with, while a spacious lobby replaces the cramped hallway of former years. Vehicles can now drive right up to the entrance and this allows their occupants to alight under shelter. Entering the wide double-doors one passes into the lobby, from which two flights of broad steps lead straight to a wide landing. Two shallow steps take one from the landing to the Hall itself. A third staircase, it might be mentioned, runs straight from behind the stage to the garden, thus affording an additional and easy exit in case of emergency. The stage, by-the-way, has been widened, while two cosy waiting rooms are arranged on either side, a great convenience to performers. At the back of the hall, the seats are now arranged in tiers, another improvement which will be appreciated at crowded meetings of the Literary Society, where the inconvenience of seating a large audience all on the same level has been seriously felt. Downstairs enlarged class-rooms take up much of the newly-provided space, but when the improvements are all finished it will be found that the convenience of the public in the way of cloak-rooms has not been neglected.

On Tuesday evening the Hall was well-filled. Mesdames McIvor and Skrimshire opened the proceedings with pianoforte duets, "Zigeunerleben" (Schumann), and Italienische Liebenoveste "Einzelstung" (Hofmann) which were warmly applauded. Dr. D. N. B. Emerson followed with "Time of the Roses," and in response to an encore sang "Molly Bawn," his fine voice demonstrating very satisfactorily the improved acoustic qualities of the Hall. A recitation by Miss Muriel Thomas, Southey's "The Well of St. Keyne," was given with a dramatic action that never overstepped the border of quiet restraint and was thereby doubly effective. Mr. E. Salinger's cello solo, "Kirchen Arie" (Stradella), was a fine piece of work and received hearty recognition. The pianoforte solo by Miss Blundell, "Le Sylphes" (Bergmann) won a well-deserved encore and after bowing her thanks the fair executant was induced to return to the platform and give Mendelssohn's well-known "Prelude," which proved a more finished performance than the opening piece. Miss Scherschewsky brought the first part to a close with two cleverly given recitations from the writings of James Whitcomb Riley—"The Preacher's Boy" and "Elizabeth Ann."

During the interval, the Rev. E. S. Booth, head of the Ferris Seminary, on whose compound the Van Schaick Hall stands, returned his thanks to the foreign community of Yokohama for the generous way in which it had responded to his appeal for funds to enable him to enlarge Van Schaick Hall. He had received yen 2,700 from the community for this object and he felt very grateful. Van Schaick Hall was built originally for use as an assembly room for the scholars of Ferris Seminary, and that would explain the reason for constructing it on its old lines. As the years went by and the public began to use it more and more, the inconveniences of exit became more and more apparent and formed the subject of much earnest thought and discussion. Eventually when the Board in America, though not able to comply with his request to enlarge the Hall, promised to put up the money for increasing the class-rooms, the Committee in charge were able to approach the public and ask them for funds to enable Van Schaick Hall to be improved. The result they saw in part that night. He hoped that Van Schaick Hall would long continue its career of usefulness and remain a centre for diffusing the best influences in the musical, literary and intellectual life of Yokohama.

The entertainment was brought to a close by a clever exhibition of conjuring by Professor Thornichi and his talented troupe, not the least mystifying of whose performances was the Indian basket trick—a clever allusion in all verity.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM FOR INSURANCE PREMIUM.

A case instituted by Mr. George R. Davis, President of the Manchester Assurance Co., Manchester, Great Britain, against Mr. H. C. Litchfield, administrator of the estate of the late Mr. N. P. Kingdon, of Messrs Kingdon, Schwabe & Co., claiming yen 17,026.35 and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from April 1st, 1903, till the execution of judgment, came up on October 20th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Yasuda.

Plaintiff was represented by Messrs. Akiyama and Ikeda, and defendant by Mr. Sawada.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co. acted as the Asiatic agents of the plaintiff firm before September, 1903, and sub-agencies were established in Calcutta, Nagasaki and Kobe. On Sept. 30th, 1902, the sub-agent of Calcutta left unpaid a balance of yen 9,108.77, out of what he had received as premiums for fire and marine insurance. He had not paid anything during the six months up to the end of March in the following year (1903) while still receiving premiums. Counsel added that the sub-agent must have paid all the premiums to the chief agents, Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe & Co., but that firm did not make any payment to the plaintiff. The Manchester Assurance Co. stopped their business in Japan in September, 1903. The balance of premiums which had been received from the Nagasaki sub-agents, the China and Japan Trading Co., and the Kobe sub-agents, Messrs. William Kerr & Co., and which the firms had transferred to Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe & Co., also remained unpaid, making the total now claimed. Mr. Kingdon died in Nov., 1903, and his estate is now under the administration of the defendant. The amount claimed should be paid by the defendant from the estate of the deceased.

The contention of Mr. Litchfield's Counsel was that the defendant was entrusted by the will of the late Mr. Kingdon to administer the latter's property. Mr. Kingdon was different from Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co.; though he was a partner of that firm. The insurance business was transacted by the firm but not by him as an individual. Even if the late gentleman was responsible for business carried on by his firm, Mr. Litchfield should not be sued by the plaintiff on the estate of the deceased. In accordance with Japanese law, the administrator was not obliged to defend such a case.

Plaintiff's Counsel further said that Mr. Schwabe, one of the partners of Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co., died a long time ago, and later the firm was dissolved. The business was continued by Mr. Kingdon alone though the firm name was kept as before. Therefore there was practically no difference between Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co., and the late Mr. Kingdon. Counsel added that the Japanese law had several provisions with regard to the duties of an administrator appointed to execute an estate. At this stage, Counsel produced evidence and asked the Court for leave to examine the representatives of Messrs. William Kerr and Co., of Kobe, and the China and Japan Trading Co., of Nagasaki, as witnesses, and to order Mr. Litchfield to produce the business books of the late Mr. Kingdon.

Decision was to be given afterward. The Court then rose.

CLAIM FOR PENSION.

Mr. Ryo Sakai has lodged a case in the Tokyo District Court against his elder brother, Viscount Sakai, the first son of the former feudal lord of Matsuyama, Ugo province, asking for a pension at the rate of sixty yen per month.

It is reported by Tokyo papers that the plaintiff a long time ago was disowned by his brother, the defendant, owing to his dissolute conduct.

The first hearing will take place on Oct. 25th.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGE.

A case instituted by Mr. F. Reiz against the Shimoda Construction Co. claiming yen 3,911 including yen 66 which plaintiff had paid to two painters—one yen 36 and the others, yen 30—on behalf of the defendants, came up again on Oct. 21st in the Tokyo District Court. On this occasion, the Court delivered judgment dismissing the claim of plaintiff with the exception of yen 66. The Court also ordered the plaintiff to bear the costs.

AN ARCHITECT'S CLAIM.

In the same Court, a case lodged by the Shimoda Construction Co. against Mr. F. Reiz claiming yen 1,645, was brought up on Oct. 21st when judgment was given. The Court ordered Mr. F. Reiz to pay the amount claimed and to bear the costs.

SAKAMOTO v. MENIL.

On Oct. 21st, in the Yokohama District Court, a case brought by Y. Sakamoto, a Tokyo merchant, against Mr. V. Menil claiming a thousand yen came up again before Judge Nakanishi.

Counsel asked the Court to postpone the hearing for further preparation of evidence. The Court adjourned till Oct. 25th.

NISHIKAWA v. WRIGHT.

A case lodged by K. Nishikawa, a jirikisha coolie, against Mr. W. N. Wright, No. 40, claiming 46.50, came up on October 24th in the Yokohama Local Court when several Japanese were examined as witnesses.

Kameya, a jirikisha coolie, deposed that Mr. Wright owned three dogs. One of them bit the plaintiff on May 19th while he was standing in front of Wright's Hotel. Previous to this accident some persons were bitten by plaintiff's dogs. The dogs were not always chained.

Another jirikisha man, Ishibashi, stated that one of two dogs belonging to the defendant bit the plaintiff in the middle of May inflicting three injuries in the waist. At the commencement of May, the witness himself was bitten by a dog belonging to the defendant. At that time, he was not injured but his kimono was damaged. Subsequently he complained to Mrs. Wright about the accident. She exclaimed bama!, an exclamation which the witness under the circumstances could not understand. The witness added that he never obtained a satisfactory reply from her.

Dr. Tomitsuka stated that he treated plaintiff for dog-bites, and gave a lengthy technical statement as to the nature of the injuries.

Tomatsu, a jirikisha coolie, said that he saw the assault. The affair took place on May 19th. Plaintiff had not attended to his work for some days.

At the request of Mr. Wright, a servant named Saito, and two jirikisha men were summoned as witnesses. Plaintiff's Counsel objected to Saito and he was not examined.

The two jirikisha men, Shibukawa and Aihara, acknowledged that the plaintiff had been bitten by a dog belonging to the defendant, but said he attended to his work as usual.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to re-examine Tomatsu. The Court decided to do so on November 2nd.

A SUB-SERGEANT SENTENCED.

K. Wada, a sub-sergeant belonging to the 12th Army Division was recently sentenced by Court-Martial to transportation for life. The charge is reported to be that he assaulted a surgeon on Sept. 25th after a slight dispute and injured him with a sword.

The withdrawal of the Army from north Korea commenced on Oct. 20th by the Sanuki Maru and three other transports at Wonsan. A passenger says that the weather in North Korea has become very cold, and that in the district of Sonchong snow fell.

FOOTBALL.

The football season was formally opened in Yokohama on Saturday by a match between a team from H.M.S. Diadem and an eleven of the V.C. and A.C. The fine weather induced many ladies to put in an appearance and the game was watched by a larger number of spectators than usual. The visitors put up a better game than the local players, Bell, the naval centre forward, particularly winning notice, and they came out the winners by 6 goals to 2. The Navy made three goals in the first half and three in the second, Yokohama making one in the first and the other in the second. With a little practice Yokohama should work up into a fairly good team, but their halves will have to put more dash into their play. Powys, the goal-keeper, is to be complemented, on his work: but for him the score against his side would have been considerably higher.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Early on the morning of Oct. 25th, an unoccupied goods train over-turned at Shinjuku station, Tokyo, and fell over a ten foot embankment. The locomotive and five cars were smashed. An assistant engineer and two fire-men in all escaped with slight injuries. The cause of the accident was the negligence of a pointsman.

A Chinese girl 13 years old was arrested on Oct. 19th, in a bazaar in Isezaki-cho, Yokohama, on a charge of having stolen a gold finger-ring. She is the daughter of a merchant, named Liang-Ja-foo, residing at No. 149, China town. It is said by the Isezaki-cho police that the girl had committed similar thefts in shops in Bentendori and other streets.

Mr. Hubert Vos has completed a portrait of the Empress Dowager, who, says a Tientsin paper, is represented at the age of about 40 sitting in a chair, surrounded by accessories of Chinese art in a grove of bamboos; the background shows an inland sea and mountains, very much reminding one of the scenery around Ningpo. Her Majesty has a commanding appearance, full of dignity and force. The artist has been commissioned to paint a second picture in which he will represent Her Majesty as she is to-day.

The contract for three patent shipways for the new dock which Messrs. Butterfield and Swire are building at Quarry Bay, Hongkong, has been placed with Messrs. S. and H. Morton and Co., Leih. One of these shipways is to be capable of taking up vessels 400 feet long by 40 feet beam and of 2,700 tons weight. The other two are for vessels 290 feet in length and 50 feet beam and weighing 2,000 tons. All are to be driven by electric power.

The Tientsin S.V.C. had some exciting moments during the night attack on the 16th inst.; one party of volunteers, says the local paper, imitated the heroes of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" by falling into a pond. Hurrying across broken ground, they came suddenly upon what appeared simply to be a patch of black earth. They went straight into it, and before they knew what had happened, found themselves waist deep in a horrid mixture of water and farm stuff, from which they had to extricate themselves as best they could. Others were hopelessly lost in the country; one member so seriously strained himself that he had to be taken home on a stretcher.

Professor R. K. Douglas has called attention to the fact that the Russians still retain the Imperial Library of Mukden, which was seized when that town was occupied by the soldiers of the Czar during the "Boxer" outbreak. It is characteristic of Russian methods, says the Globe, that whereas military forces of other nationalities were not permitted to retain loot, this library, of the utmost value and importance to the reigning dynasty in China, was practically stolen. It was only for lack of means of transport that it was not carried to St. Petersburg, and it is resting at Vladivostok. Surely now that peace has been concluded the Russians should be forced to disgorge their ill-gotten literary treasures.

POEMS.

TO A FAIRE LADY.

(WITH APOLOGIES TO "A BLOT IN THE SCUTCHEON.")

There's a maiden like a lily, who is fairer than the fairest,
And her gentle heart's the gentlest; yea, and her dear face the dearest,
And her eyes are blue and laughing, like the brooklet as it passes Joyous, neath the sun's caresses, through the long green meadow grasses;
And her hair is soft and silken, yellow, like a cornfield sleeping
In some golden haze of Autumn with the round moon slowly creeping
Up the skyline; while her voice is like the voice of hidden waters
Crooning, when the night is silent, dream-songs to the fairies' daughters;
And her ears are small and tinted, like the shells on Orient beaches
Kissed, at morning, by the sunrise, or like softly ripening peaches
On a south wall in a pleasure; and her arms are roundly moulden Chiselled with a master's cunning of some age far off and golden;
And her cheeks are smooth and dimpled, dimpled where some fairy finger
On her birth-day just one space too lovingly and long did linger.
And I love this maiden dearly, love her for her smiles and laughter, Love her best for something better, pray that neither now nor after Tears may wash away their sunshine, care bedim those eyes, or sorrow
Last beyond its need, but always gladness usher in the morrow.

SOLILOQUY OF A RUSSIAN ADMIRAL.

Togo or not Togo—that is the question
For if to go be not Togo, yet still
To stay may be Togo—so there's the rub.
Say, is it nobler in our hulls to take
The shells and mines of these unerring Japs,
And being rattled in the thick of fight
To add our own to help the work along,
Or show clean heels across the Chinese Sea,
To rest in peace secure, perchance to dream
Of trawlers that we think torpedo boats?
And yet to go may be Togo, alas!
His very name by losing is not lost.
His multifarious spirit walks abroad
O'er all the world-wide seas. And should we flee,
The undiscovered Togo, from whose trail
No mariner escapes, confuses the will
And makes us rather face the Japs we know
Than heedless fly to those we know not of.
'Tis thus these Japs make cowards of us all.
Could I once set a steady foot on land,
I'd hit the trail across Siberia's plain,
Where Togo's not allowed to go; and haste
To throw my sword before the mighty Czar
And hear with joy his word of punishment:
"Back to the uncles!"—be they not Japanese.

GARRET SMITH.

THE PEACE OF PORTSMOUTH.

Where on the shrines of old Japan
The shadows softly fall,
Where pious Russians kneel before
The icons on the wall,
Like incense rare upon the air
Ten million prayers arise,
To bless the land of liberty
And laud it to the skies.
The scourge of blood and flame has passed,
The storm of war is done;
Peace furls the pennon of the cross,
The banner of the sun.
The gods of trade will now rebuild
Port Arthur's battered crags,
While commerce mends with threads of gold
The tattered battle-flags.

MINNA IRVING.

TO JAPAN.

Not for the onsets of undaunted might
Made by your sons, when in their path there lay Death sure before them, yet unflinching they Won costly victory by fearless fight,
Is your great need; but that, repelling light
Profit or loss, you chose this better way—
Held pride in check, and, owning mercy's sway,
Raised conquest to a rarer, nobler height.
Therefore, now word goes forth that strife shall cease,
And new-made pacts of amity are knit.
When records tell the tale of your renown,
Entwining with your well-earned laurel crown,
Upon your brows posterity shall fit
The sacred olive of an honoured peace.

LADIES' INTERNATIONAL READING ROOM.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Friday at the Reading Rooms, No. 179 Bluff, Mrs Merriman presiding. There were also present Mesdames J. L. Dearing (Hon. Secretary), E. J. Moss, E. S. Booth, C. D. Moss, T. H. Tripler, C. Van Petten, Kuhn, H. J. Neville and Mess.

The following reports were presented:—

October 20th, 1905.
The Rules of this Association provide that the annual general meeting be held before the 15th of October; but in view of the fact that the present Committee had pledged themselves to raise funds by an entertainment, it was decided at the regular monthly meeting to set the date of this Annual Meeting later.

As you will hear from our Hon. Treasurer's Report the R. R. has been self-supporting for the past year, in spite of increased expenses incurred by moving to more expensive quarters and the Committee feel compensated for the time and hard work they have given and the responsibility they assumed in making the venture.

It has been the object of the Committee this past year, as heretofore, to do all in their power to meet the wishes of the subscribers and to do what in their judgment seemed best for the ultimate prosperity and popularity of the R.R., and moving to new and more convenient quarters was in direct response to complaints and to requests that we move to the ground floor.

Another serious inconvenience was the closing of our rooms on the occasion of all public functions in the Public Hall, when the rooms were needed.

We knew that a number of our old subscribers retained their membership for the sake of supporting an institution which they considered for the good of the community although they made practically no use of the rooms and also that many had resigned—the latter, I am glad to say, rejoined when we moved, and we have had an unusual number of transient members the past few months.

The subject of moving had been agitated and worn threadbare for two years but it was not until last spring, all conditions being favourable, a vote of the subscribers was taken, and resulted in a removal to our present quarters.

I know there has been in the past and, from what has lately come to our knowledge, there apparently still exists a feeling against the Ladies' International R.R. raising funds by giving an entertainment, on the plea that it is not a charitable institution, and I should like to say a word in explanation of our present position.

Since the R.R. was re-organized two years ago into an increased subscription, with the object of making it self-supporting, it has been so; but the balance at the end of the year was quite insufficient to allow the magazines, etc., to be ordered before subscriptions were collected. As the order for periodicals must go forward before the first of November it can readily be understood that the Committee were put to no little inconvenience and were obliged to collect subscriptions without delay, after they were elected.

The entertainment of last Tuesday was not given on a charitable basis except that we asked for donations of refreshments from subscribers, taking it for granted that they were interested in the success of our efforts. We endeavoured to give our patrons a good entertainment for their money, and if the spirit of the audience and the proceeds are an indication of success, we should be satisfied with the result.

Another difficulty with which we have had to contend is the need of furniture and funds to make the rooms more attractive and to put the books in good order.

Nearly all of the furniture we have now has been given or is lent. It is the desire of the Committee that whatever amount is needed from the proceeds of last Tuesday's entertainment, be devoted to putting the rooms and books in perfect order and the balance put aside for future use.

When we decided on moving last spring it was tacitly understood that as many of the present Committee as could do so should serve another year in order to hand over the R. R. next year in perfect working order, and for that reason, with few exceptions the present Committee offer themselves for re-election.

We all regret that Mrs. Dinsdale, our Vice-President, is unable to go on another year, but take this opportunity to express our appreciation of all she did for the success of our entertainment.

I wish also, on behalf of the Committee, to record our thanks to all who in any way assisted in the programme or in any other way, for our success was a direct result of their unifying efforts.

IRENE C. MERRIMAN,
President, L. I. R. R.

LADIES:—The tenth annual meeting of the L. I. R. R. was held at the Public Hall, on Wednesday, Oct. 19th, at 2.30, Mrs. Eldridge in the chair. There were twelve ladies present. At that meeting the new Committee for the ensuing year was chosen as follows:—

President—Mrs. Merriman.
Vice-President—Mrs. Dinsdale.
Hon. Secretary—Mrs. Dearing.
Hon. Treasurer—Mrs. E. B. S. Edwards.

Directors:—Mesdames Bellows, Booth, F. J. Hall MacArthur, E. J. Moss, and the Misses Lillian Hall and May Merriman; Miss Hall resigning, her place was filled by Miss Lloyd Thomas.

During the year the Directors have lost two of their number, Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Bellows, so that part of the year's work has been carried on by a reduced Committee. Regular monthly meetings have been held on the first Wednesday of each month and the work that the Reading Room has entailed has been done cheerfully and thoroughly. The number of magazines provided has included 30 monthly periodicals and 12 weeklies, 18 of which are English and 25 American. New books have been added to the library by the kindness of several well-wishers, as the report of the Book Committee will show.

There have been 90 members during the year. There have also been 5763 visitors to the Reading Room during the twelve months, 5,779 magazines and 2,800 books have been in circulation. These statistics will show that the Library seems to be of practical use to the Yokohama community. Two Social Teas were given by the Directors to the subscribers and their friends on the afternoons of December 19th and Feb. 13th. These events more than repaid the Committee for the labour entailed by the appreciation of all who attended. We were very kindly assisted in entertaining our guests by several gentlemen of the community.

On the 16th of April the R.R. was moved from its old quarters in the Public Hall to its present home in the Retz building, 179 Bluff. This was deemed a wise step on the parts of the Directors after much deliberation, on account of petty annoyance that often arose at the Public Hall, and also an account of the long flight of stairs. The work of moving was very cheerfully undertaken by the Committee and a House-warming was given by the Directors to all subscribers and their friends on April 18th in the new rooms. It proved a very pleasant occasion and our grateful thanks are due to Miss Schereschewsky of Tokyo for making the afternoon especially enjoyable with her charming recitations. For the furnishings of the new rooms we are indebted to several friends of the Association.

This move to the Retz building brought us in several new subscribers.

You will see by the Treasurer's accounts that for another year the R. R. has been self-supporting. The extra ten yen a month for rent since moving has made our expenses a little heavier than last year, but we are proud to report even a balance of yen 54.80. It was decided that a working fund would be of great benefit to the Association and Mrs. Merriman and her Committee conceived the plan of giving a Fête for the benefit of the R.R. in order to hand over to the new Committee a surplus sum sufficient for any extras that may accrue at any time. It is our pleasure to report the Fête a grand financial success.

Respectfully submitted,
MARY HINCKLEY DEARING,
Hon. Sec.

The Book Committee beg to report the donation of 143 new books to the library. In this connection our thanks are especially due to Mr. O. A. Poole, Mrs. Walter Austin, Mrs. N. F. Smith and Rev. A. R. Morris, and to the Consul-General of Sweden and Norway.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TESTIMONY OF STUDENTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—We the undersigned students of the Yokohama Commercial School, who acted as interpreters at the fête in honour of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance given on the Cricket-ground on the 11th inst., having read the letter published in your issue of the 18th dated from Kobe and signed "A teacher of Japanese Students," beg respectfully to give our experience on that occasion.

We went to the park at 2 o'clock and on arriving there, separated, and in a short time each one had introduced himself to a party of the men and remained with them the whole afternoon. Although there was abundance of beer, etc., very few, if any, of the men got more than merry. After the garden party was over some of us accompanied them to see the Cinematograph and others to see such sights as there are to be seen in and around Yokohama and we thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon and evening. We found much pleasure and improvement in the company of the Marines and Sailors and should look forward to another such glorious afternoon with joy.

Yours respectfully,

THE CONSTELLATION OF ORION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—May I call your attention to verse 7 of the "Tsuki-tsuki" poem you published to-day? No part of the constellation of Orion is ever visible after dark in June in the latitude of Karuizawa.

Can it be that some of the attractive statements made in the latter portion of the poem are also based on false premises? Cruel thought!

Yours faithfully,

HOPELESS BACHELOR.

APPEAL TO "BUSHIDO" FOR PEACE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I hope my Japanese cousins will not take it as an impertinence on my part if I venture with your permission, to call attention to the moral side of the present peace question. Politicians and able editors now-a-days as a rule leave entirely out of their calculation moral causes, but in the end moral causes often blow up to the sky the best calculations of the professional politicians and able editors.

I think the Japanese nation can be justly proud of the spirit of "Bushido," or chivalry, as displayed by the Japanese officers and soldiers at the front. But now if there is one virtue more than any other, insisted upon by "Bushido," it is that of generosity towards a defeated opponent. Once when an admiral was taken prisoner by the English, the first thing the English captain did on receiving the admiral on board, was to hold out his hands and say: "Fortune of war, Sir!" In the present war, Madame Stoessel, wife of the defender of Port Arthur, has called the attention of the world to the fine delicacy of feeling of the Japanese generals, officers and soldiers in everything they did, scrupulously not to hurt the feelings of the Russians after the surrender of Port Arthur. But after such a record, I sincerely trust that my Japanese cousins will not allow it to be said that the spirit of bushido is gone out of the Japanese nation, at least the non-military population of Japan.

I see that Marquis Yamagata has thought it worth his while to combat the idea that he advocated peace, because the Japanese military forces might possibly be insufficient to meet the Russians without danger. I think the noble Marquis has been over-sensitive. For I venture to think that it is not disgraceful to be weak, or even to be defeated in battle as the Russians have been. In a fight either one party or the other party must lose. I do think it would be disgraceful to be ungenerous, to crow over a defeated opponent. I further hold it to be disgraceful to impute base motives. Finally I hold it would be utterly disgraceful for man to be callous to the suffering which this war entails, and not to try to do what lies in his power to put a stop to it.

In ancient feudal China the two States of Tsai (晉) and Ch'u (楚) after a long and protracted war, had determined to suspend hostilities and agreed to the exchange of prisoners. An officer of Tsai by the name of Yzu-ying (知整) on being released was asked by the prince of Ch'u if he was angry. Yzu-ying said:—"Why should I be angry?—I owe my captivity to my own incapacity." The prince then asked if he felt grateful on being released. Yzu-ying replied:—"No, the two countries having consulted their best national interests and seeking to give relief to their people (三國圖其社稷而求紓其民), have both agreed to put away anger and resentment in order to become reconciled (名微其忿以相有也). They have agreed to the exchange of prisoners as a first step towards restoring good relations (兩釋虜囚以成其好). The good relations concern the welfare of our two nations with which I have personally nothing to do, why then should I be grateful to any body?"

Now the august rulers and responsible statesmen of Japan and Russia have, in the words of the Chinese text above, consulted the best interests of their nations (二國圖其社稷) and have sought to give relief to their people (面求紓其民). That, I take it, is the Why,—the true basis of the present peace. But the question as to whether the present peace will be a lasting one or not, does not depend, in my humble opinion, upon the perfection or imperfection of the present peace terms. The stability and permanence of the present peace will entirely depend upon the fact whether it is possible for the Japanese and Russian nations, in the words of the Chinese text above, to put away altogether the spirit of anger and resentment for a thorough reconciliation (微其忿各以相有也). A signed treaty of peace is only white paper or parchment with black ink.* Without a sincere wish to be at peace on the part of the contracting parties, there can be no peace; there can be at the most only armed peace, which, in my opinion, is worse than war. In short the only hope that I can see not only for permanent peace, but even for, if not complete, at least a modified form of permanent unarmed peace in the Far East, will depend upon how far both the Japanese and Russian nations are willing or able to loyally observe not only the letter but the spirit of the present treaty of peace.

In ancient religious times when men verily believed in God, a treaty which was called a covenant was a solemn religiously sacred instrument. A nation which broke such a treaty not only incurred the enmity of man, but brought upon them the curse of God. But in these modern times of progress and enlightenment it often happens when two nations make a treaty, they are already disloyal to the spirit of the treaty from the beginning even before they sign it, inasmuch as while the preamble to the treaty says there shall be peace and amity between the two nations, the contracting parties while solemnly agreeing to this, cherish in their hearts, not peace and amity at all, but suspicion, hatred and vengeance. Such treaties therefore are as false as dice's oaths from the beginning. There are again in modern times treaties which we Chinese call forced treaties (要盟),—such as the treaties China and, until now, Japan have made with the European Powers. As in English law, a contract which is immoral in the nature and essence of it, is null and void in law, so in a treaty by force, or made under the pressure of force majeure, there is only obligation to observe it as long as force or gun-boat is there to enforce it; there is no moral obligation to observe it. Confucius said:—In forced covenants, the gods do not interfere (要盟鬼神不答焉).

But in the present treaty of peace which the Japanese and Russian nations are about to solemnly enter into, there is no force majeure on either side. The two nations are entering into it freely and of their own accord. The treaty therefore is or ought to be of the nature of a solemn, religiously sacred instrument.

As to the terms of the Treaty the two nations should approach the consideration of these, not with the calculating spirit of peddling merchants whose sole object is to get the best price for their wares above every other consideration, but with the broad-mindedness and judgment of moral and civilised nations. While not entirely neglecting the question of material advantage or disadvantage, they should also look to the moral side of the question. If the Japanese or Russian nation find in any of the present terms of peace, anything that is unjust, immoral or iniquitous in the face of God and man, or anything calculated to injure the cause of peace, humanity or civilisation,—then in such a case, they should openly and frankly take means to repudiate it before its final ratification.

To me it seems that the most important clause in the whole treaty is the first, which says:—"Peace and amity or friendship shall be restored between the two Empires of Japan and Russia and between their people." If both the Japanese and Russian nations from the highest to the lowest, will only loyally carry out not only the letter but the spirit of this clause of the treaty, then there is every hope not only for permanent peace, but for permanent unarmied peace in the Far East. For in order to loyally carry out the spirit of this clause, every Japanese and Russian from the highest to the lowest must put away all feelings of anger, suspicion and resentment, and in its stead, cherish feelings of peace and friendship for each other. This is what their Imperial Majesties the Emperors of Japan and Russia by agreeing to this clause in the Treaty on behalf of their people, have solemnly engaged and bound themselves and their people. Any Japanese or Russian therefore who acts contrary to the spirit of this solemn engagement, is guilty of disobedience to his sovereign, disloyalty to his country and of bringing dishonour upon his nation.

I say therefore if the Japanese and Russian nations will be loyal to the spirit of this treaty, there is every hope not only for permanent peace, but for permanent unarmied peace in the Far East. In all international relations, as in the relations between man and man, there will always be differences of opinion and dispute. But now that the two nations have become better acquainted with each other, and with loyal friendship and respect for each other in their hearts, instead of anger and suspicion as formerly, the most difficult differences of opinion and disputes can be adjusted. There are in all conscience, enough of problems for the two nations to spend their energies in and even to call for mutual cooperation,—economic problems, problems of education, problems of combating the baser tendencies of their population, and, most urgently of all, the problem of relieving the distress of the people who have suffered and are suffering from the consequences of this unhappy war. Moreover I take the occasion of calling attention to the fact that the state of things in China is getting into a hopeless mess.

In conclusion I will again with all respect and submission take the liberty of reminding both the Japanese and Russian nations that it is true now as it was of old, that a nation who disloyally breaks a solemnly entered-into covenant which is now called a treaty,—a nation who does this, not only incurs the enmity of all good men, but brings upon that nation the curse of God!

I have, however, every confidence that both the Japanese and Russian nations will be as faithful in peace as they have been dauntless in war.

THE NAVAL VISITORS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—As to the drinking by the men of the British Fleet when on shore leave, from my experience in other ports I would venture the opinion that they did not drink so deeply as usual for the reason that the student interpreters had a conservative influence upon them. My own experience was that of meeting scores of jolly Jack Tars, not one of whom was the worse for liquor. Three of them I took out of a shop at the bottom of Surugadai, where they were drinking beer with an evangelical churchman, and persuaded them to follow me and listen to my explanations of the pictures on the ikonostasis of the Holy Orthodox Cathedral of the Resurrection.

Yours, etc.

CATHOLICUS.

A MATTER OF OPINION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—May I draw your attention to what I consider a most extravagant and monstrous statement in your able editorial under the caption, "Japanese Character," in the Weekly Mail of Oct. 14th? I think you did well to draw attention to the "singular tendency the critics often show, the tendency of detaching themselves completely from their own experiences in the home land." You rebuke Rev. A. B. Scherer's "dishonesty" in his book, "The Story of the Japanese People," because he has ventured "to pass judgments and pen charges without due equipment to be a judge or an accuser," and justly so. But in refuting his charges it seems to me that you have pretty nearly succeeded in getting into the same boat with the author whom you criticise. You say in reference to Scherer's charge of "abandoned impurity":—"He may frequent the society of Japanese gentlemen from year's end to year's end and he will never hear impure talk, though such may be called almost the staple of conversation among young men in the West." This charge against young men of the West was to my mind extravagant and even monstrous, and as I have always considered your editorials to show both thoughtfulness and fairness I was somewhat staggered to read this remark. Something—I called it "righteous indignation"—within me boiled. Had you concluded your sentence by adding such words as "of certain classes," or even by saying, "with whom we have had acquaintance," then no one could have called your statement in question, for there are barroom loafers, tramps, toughs of various sorts, and other classes, some of whom doubtless imagine that they are respectable and respected who do think impure thoughts and out of the fulness of their hearts their mouths speak. But is it fair, honest or just to suppose that such creatures represent "young men in the West"? I claim that it is not, and, sir, the logic of your article gives a very suggestive hint as to the kind of young men you associated with in the West—if you have any knowledge of them, as we must suppose you have, since you make a statement that could be based on knowledge only. But I would almost rather suppose that you made a thoughtless statement which you are not prepared to defend. Pray pardon me if I state in all humility that I think I can give evidence on this point, having lived in the West until 33 years of age, and having seen life among lumber-men in saw-mills; among business men as a salesman and collector; as a student in two Universities; as a sport on the football field and other athletic contests, and as a tramp for the fun of it in two continents. I have taken men as I have found them and have no reason to complain of the way I have been treated. Though sorry to have to differ from the editorial writer of Japan Mail, whose articles are usually marked by kindness and fairness, yet I must differ and also protest. I have met such men as you refer to—men of impure words—and all too many of them, but not so many as to lead me to suppose that "impure talk" might be "called almost the staple of conversation among young men in the West." Not by any means. Thankfully yours I sign my motto:

"Whatsoever is just, whatsoever is pure, Cherish the thought of these things." D.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE UNITED STATES AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

London, October 20.

President Roosevelt, speaking at Richmond, said that the United States can help the nations in the vicinity of Panama by wise and generous assistance. If they decline that help it will be bad for them and ultimately bad for the United States. It would probably cause the United States to face humiliation or bloodshed.

This speech is plainly directed against Venezuela and San Domingo.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

Later.

Both houses of the Australian Parliament have passed votes in favour of Home Rule for Ireland.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have left England for India.

THE CAPTURED BRITISH OFFICERS.

The Moorish Government steamer is expected at Ceuta to-day bringing the brigands the ransom for the British officers.

THE OUTRAGE BY MOORISH BRIGANDS.

London, October 20.

A Moorish Government steamer is expected at Ceuta to-day, bringing the brigand Valiente as ransom for the captured British officers.

Later.

The British warship Pathfinder has left Tangier for Ceuta, in order to obtain definite information concerning the captive British officers.

PLAIN SPEAKING BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

London, October 21.

President Roosevelt, speaking at Atlanta, referred to the cynical dishonesty wherewith some great fortunes had been obtained and used in the United States. He said that debauchers of business or political life should be treated with contemptuous abhorrence.

Referring to the boycott of American goods in Chinese ports, he said that China must beware of persisting in a course whereto she could not honourably submit America. The Chinese Exclusion law did not justify the boycott. The well-being of the wage-workers of the United States required the exclusion of coolies, but the law should be operated with as little harshness as possible, while Chinese non-labourers should be encouraged to come to America.

POLICY OF BRITISH LIBERALS.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking in the City, said a Liberal government would not change any of the three cardinal points of British foreign policy, namely, friendship with the United States of North America; the alliance with Japan; and the agreement with France. It was desirable, however, to re-establish the position of Russia in the councils of Europe. Any improvement in Anglo-German relations must be conditional on fair and good Franco-German relations. The Japanese alliance was defensive, but it was not intended to be used by any party in England for the policy of an expansion of our Indian frontiers.

TOGO AND NELSON.

London, October 22.

Admiral Togo has telegraphed to the Fishmongers Company of London at a dinner on the occasion of the Nelson Centenary, expressing his ever-increasing admiration and devotion to the great admiral. This feeling, Admiral Togo added, became more intense when he recollected that the Japanese navy was built on an English model.

Later.

A immense crowd assembled for a semi-religious celebration in Trafalgar Square in memory of Nelson's death. Bishop Well-ton officiated. Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional" was recited. The crowd sang the National Anthem in a most impressive manner.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO BRITISH NAVAL OFFICER.

London, October 22.

A piece of machinery fell on Commander

Phillips, of the British battleship Victorious whilst directing the salvage of the repair-ship Assistance, killing him on the spot.

THE CHINA COMMAND.

London, October 23.

Vice-Admiral Sir Arthur William Moore, K.C.B., C.M.G., has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the British Fleet on the China Station, succeeding Admiral Sir Gerard Noel. Rear-Admiral Curzeon-Howe succeeds Vice-Admiral Moore.

[NOTE.—The Navy List gives the following details regarding the new Commander-in-Chief:—Sir A. W. Moore, Commander of Orion during Egyptian war, 1881; present at the occupation of Ismailia; after that, placed in command of the Naval flotilla on the Sweet Water Canal, which was organised for transport of stores to the front, and conveyance of sick and wounded to the base; present at battle of Tel-el-Kebir; mentioned in despatches for his services in the Suez Canal operations (Egyptian Medal, Tel-el-Kebir Clasp, Khedive's Bronze Star, Medjidie 3rd Class); promoted for these services; one of the Representatives of England at the Anti-Slavery Congress assembled at Brussels, November, 1889; C.M.G., for services rendered in connection with the defences of Australasia, January, 1892; Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, 9th November, 1895. Vide Royal Humane Society's Medals; C.B., 22nd June, 1897, on the commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee; a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, January, 1898; Commander-in-Chief, Cape Station, 11th February, 1901. In his despatch of 23rd June, 1902, Lord Kitchener wrote, "I am greatly indebted to Admiral Moore for the kind manner in which he has always endeavoured to meet the requirements of the army in the field"; K. C. B. 26th June, 1902.]

THE CAPTURED BRITISH OFFICERS.

H.M.S. Pathfinder has returned to Tangier with the released British officers.

PRESIDENT LOUBET.

President Loubet has gone to Madrid.

RAILWAY STRIKES IN RUSSIA.

The railway strikes are spreading throughout Russia. Moscow is practically cut off. It is stated that the strikes are the result of political manoeuvres, aiming at the eventual starving of St. Petersburg and Moscow.

THE STORM CENTRES OF EUROPE.

Le Temps, in a noteworthy article, says that in the event of war between Great Britain and Germany the policy of France would be one of armed neutrality so formidable as to prevent anyone thinking of implicating her in a quarrel wherein she was not concerned.

Later.

A leading article in the Neue Freie Presse, discussing a possible war between England and France against Germany has caused fresh newspaper polemics. The acerbity of these disputes has kept alive the animosities excited by the Matin's disclosures.

PORTE ASSUMES THE OFFENSIVE.

The Porte has assumed the offensive. It has sent to the Austrian Embassy a note objecting to the presence of international delegates at Akbad, where their intervention in the affairs of Turkey would be prejudicial to the interests of the State. The Porte therefore requests their removal.

SOCIALISTS IN POLAND.

Later.

The Socialist parties in Warsaw have issued a combined proclamation declaring that they will forcibly present the election of deputies to the National Assembly.

RUSSIAN INTERNAL POLITICS.

London, October 25.

Meetings of all classes have been held in St. Petersburg to discuss political questions. A meeting of Lithuanians has resolved to boycott (the Government) and join in the struggle, with all the progressive elements against the bureaucracy. Similar resolutions have been adopted at other centres.

No cattle train has arrived at St. Petersburg for two days. Usually there are ten trains daily.

There is only a week's supply of meat in Moscow.

AMERICAN FINANCE.

A Washington report states that the annual Treasury report shows that the circulation has increased by eight million dollars, with prospects of a continued increase. As to the proportion between gold and national bank notes no other Government ever held so much gold as 748 millions in its Treasury.

THE GARTER FOR THE MIKADO.

Later.

King Edward has conferred the order of the Garter upon the Emperor of Japan. Prince Arthur of Connaught will take the insignia, but the date of his visit is as yet unfixed.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND THE PANAMA CANAL.

President Roosevelt, speaking at Mobile, again affirmed that the Panama Canal will be constructed, despite misrepresentation (on the part of) great commercial interests. In order to protect the Canal the fleet, though not necessarily large, must be the most efficient in the world. Thus there will be no chance of humiliation at the hands of any force in the Western Hemisphere.

THE RUSSIAN FOREIGN LOAN.

London, October 26.

Numerous foreign bankers are included in the new Russian Loan. Baron Revelstoke is now in St. Petersburg arranging details of the loan, which will probably appear in November and for upwards of seventy millions sterling, divided among France, Germany, Holland, England and America.

THE RUSSIAN TROUBLES.

The railway strike in Moscow has spread in every direction, involving a dozen principal towns. In the Lodz factories 36,000 men have struck, their action having a political character, and the proclamation of martial law is imminent. In St. Petersburg a deputation of railway employees who waited on Count de Witte, declared that the only remedy for the present situation is political liberty and the convocation of a duma elected by direct universal suffrage. Enough blood, they added, had been shed in Manchuria and the cities of Russia.

THE TURMOIL IN RUSSIA.

Later.

St. Petersburg is completely cut off except by telegraph. The gravity of the situation is hourly asserting itself. The whole of the State and Municipal organizations are dislocated by the wide ramifications of the strike movement, which is believed to owe its origin largely to the intensity of the discontent with reference to the inadequacy of the proposed reforms.

(RECEIVED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

PEST AT YINGKOW.

Yingkow, October 21.

Since the outbreak of pest at Yingkow there have been six cases, five of which have ended fatally and one is under treatment. There is no news of any outbreak of the malady in the vicinity of Yingkow or in Manchuria. Moreover, drastic sanitary measures have been taken at Yingkow, and as there has not been any fresh case since the 18th, it would seem that the malady will not spread.

(RECEIVED BY THE "KOKUMIN SHIMBUN.")

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS.

San Francisco, October 24.

Diplomatic relations between Japan and Russia will be restored in December. Mr. Bakemetseff, now a diplomatic official in Bulgaria, will proceed to Tokyo as Russian Representative.

MAORI LEGENDS.

[READ BEFORE THE YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY, BY MR. A. BELLAMY BROWN, ON OCT. 27TH, 1905.]

It is not the New Zealand, "the world's wonderland, the ideal country for the tourist, the sportsman and the settler—a land of wild and romantic landscapes, of amazing thermal phenomena, elysian warm mineral baths and matchless geysers; of Alps and glaciers surpassing those of Switzerland; of grand fiefs, beautiful lakes and rivers, waterfalls and dense primeval forests"—I am quoting the New Zealand Government Tourist Department's advertisement—; a land where the latest theories of socialistic experiment are actually put into practice by a Government controlled by a labour-party seemingly run wild—it is not the New Zealand of the present day that invites your attention this evening. Rather is it a New Zealand which is rapidly fading into the limbo of forgotten things, the New Zealand of legend and folk-lore. Whence came the Maori, whom Tasman in 1642 and Captain Cook, the circumnavigator, in 1769, found inhabiting New Zealand? The question has baffled several generations of enquirers, but opinion seems to be crystallizing around the very plausible theory that they came, ages upon ages ago, from the foothills of the Himalayas, being a branch of that Dravidian race which the Aryans—the fore-fathers of most of the western European nations—displaced when they descended from the cradle of the world into the plains of Hindustan. The more adventurous of the aborigines of India, thus forced to seek homes in other lands, passed by various unknown routes to Java, only to sojourn there until such time as a wave of Malay invasion sent them adrift again upon their weary-foot wanderings. But wherever they went the Maori always retained firm hold of the tradition of their first home, the sacred Hawaiki, and this unknown land bulks largely in all their tales of the past. Mrs. Wesley Turton, writing in the last Christmas number of the Otago Witness, calls the ancient Maori the Brown Sea Rovers, and the appellation does not appear to be misapplied when one comes to examine their history. They wandered for untold centuries and must have roamed the whole Pacific Ocean at one time or another, passing from island group to island group in their never-ending pilgrimage, ere they finally discovered New Zealand. The Aryans swept over India more than 4,000 years ago but Maori tradition places the first landing of their forefathers on the lovely "Land of the Long White Cloud" about the year 1150 of our era. Those were the days when Frederick Barbarossa held troubled sway over the Holy Roman Empire, when Anastasius IV. was Pope in the Eternal City; when Stephen of Blois was nearing the end of his worthless reign in England; when St. Louis of France was heading one of the most luckless of Crusades. The Maori have therefore been settled in their present home only 750 years. The effect of their long years of wandering is reflected in the folk lore of the race. As Mr. Percy Smith, author of "The Home of the Maori," observes: "The love of adventure, of moving about from place to place, has always been a feature in their lives. The effect the vast number of islands in Indonesia must have had on the people was to increase their powers of navigation. In passing onward by way of New Guinea, the Solomons, and New Hebrides—the Fiji group, the idea must have forced itself into their minds that the whole Eastern world was covered with islands, and that they had only to move onward into the unknown to find more lands on which to settle. Actuated by this ruling idea, they undertook long voyages in the assured belief of finding land. Many of their expeditions, no doubt, failed in the end they sought and disappeared for ever. We do not hear of them, it is the successful voyages of which a record has been preserved. Tradition has saved from oblivion the farewell address delivered by an aged chief, one well bowed with the weight of years and crowned with the snows of many winters, as the expedition which was to discover Aotea-roa, "the Land of the Long White Cloud," set sail from distant Rarotonga (in the Cook or Hervey Group), the last point of departure of what is known as the "pioneer fleet." He said:—"Depart in peace, and when you reach the place to which you go, do not follow after the deeds of Tu, the God of War; depart and dwell in peace with all men; leave war and strife behind you." Was he speaking satirically? The history of the Maori teems with bloody inter-tribal fights, wholesale massacres and diabolical revenges: and women were often the cause of the fiercest strife. It was summer, so the legends tell us, when the Maori reached their Ultima Thule, and full of joy they commemorated their arrival by building altars (tuaha),—one of which may still be seen on the limestone rocks at Kawhia,—on which they offered propitiatory gifts to their gods to disarm the wrath of the Spirit of the New Country, who might perchance be upset by their invasion. One of the prayers uttered by a great chief on behalf of his people, has come down on the lips of the Maori from father to son to our own day. It runs:—

"I arrive where an unknown earth is under my feet,
I arrive where a new sky is above me;
I arrive at this land;

A resting place for me.
O spirit of the earth! The stranger humbly offers His heart as food for thee."

The Maori found the islands peopled by a gentle race whom they called the Tangata Whenua, or Maui Maori. It was a race far behind the Maori in point of knowledge of the rudiments of civilization and it was either absorbed by intermarriage or killed off by the more warlike intruders. To this aboriginal race belongs the legend by which the Maori explains how New Zealand came to find a place upon the surface of the globe. One day, they say, the great demi-god Maui-tiki-tiki-o-Taranga, went out in his canoe to fish, accompanied by his three sons. Hardly had he cast his line when he began to mutter magic incantations, and lo, he drew to the surface the islands of New Zealand. The canoe grounded on the summit of Hikurangi Mountain at the head of Waiapu valley in the North Island. Leaving his sons to take possession of the new earth, Maui "returned whence he came." In this connection it is interesting to turn to the "Kojiki"—the early annals of Japan—and read by the aid of Professor Chamberlain's translation the Japanese account of the creation of the land of the Rising Sun. The "Kojiki" begins by enumerating the names of certain deities who were born at the time when heaven and earth began—"a time when the earth, young and like unto floating oil, drifted about medusa-like." To Izanagi (the male principle) and Izanami (the female) the youngest born of these deities, was given the task of consolidating this drifting land. They were given a heavenly jewelled spear and standing upon the Floating Bridge of Heaven pushed this instrument down into the brine "and stirred till it went curdle-curdle." Then they drew up the spear and the brine dripping down from the end thereof was piled up and became the island of Ono-goro. A later legend makes the whole Japanese archipelago the offspring of Izanagi and Izanami. Before passing on I might recall to your recollection that the Babylonian Epic of the Creation, the famous poem in honour of the god Merodach, begins:—

"When the heaven above was not yet named,
Or the earth beneath had recorded a name,
In the beginning the deep was their generator,
The chaos of the sea was the mother of them all.

Again, the principal deity of the Hittites and the dwellers in Philistia, you will remember, was Dag-On, half woman half fish, typifying that she had her birth among the mighty waters; and from these fancies of the earth's child-hood have undoubtedly descended to us the stories which deal with mermaids and mermen, Venus and Aphrodite, and the Sea King's daughter who lived under the sea. To the Maori race proper belongs much nobler, more deeply philosophical, legends of the Creation than the Maui Maori furnish. Says Mrs. Turton, in the course of her interesting narrative, "Conceiving of the lapse of countless ages before the dawn of light upon the earth, the Maori characterized this period as 'Te Kore'—literally 'nothingness' and assigned to its brooding silence countless ages. Gradually this empty silence drew towards the dawn of life and consciousness, which, descending to earth, passed through numerous stages, each occupying myriads of years before the concentration which expressed itself in the desire for existence, freedom. A very ancient mythological Maori chant embodies this as the primal impetus of "Seeking and Searching":

Darkness, darkness!
Light, light!
The seeking, the searching
In chaos.

Compare this, before passing on, with the almost parallel passage in Holy Writ:

And darkness was upon the face of the deep
And the Spirit of God moved (brooded) upon the face of the waters.

The next link in the Maori legends records the culminating throb of consciousness which resulted in the mythical marriage of Rangī (Heaven) and Pa-pa (earth). From their union, by long, slow processes, sprang the wonders of creation. For an unmeasured period the gods who were the offspring of these supreme powers, lived in utter darkness, since to separate the heavens from the earth was impossible. Finally, weary of the age-long darkness, five of the principal sons of Rangī and Papa conspired to separate their parents. After many and repeated failures Tane, the mighty and powerful, succeeded, aided not only by his brothers, but by a wonderful Karakia, or charm. It was long ere the piteous lamentations of the primal parents ceased. Farewell after farewell did Papa, the mighty mother, breathe forth, to be answered with passionate tenderness by Rangī, her faithful Lord and lover. Nor may this first parting of the Heavens and Earth ever fall into oblivion, since through all the ages does the round of the year's seasons recall it. The night dews of autumn, which lie heavy on the Earth's breast, are the tears of Rangī, still mourning his beloved; and again, when winter's icicles gleam cold and bright, men are reminded of Rangī's last farewell:

Oh, Papa, remain where you are.
But know that in winter I will sigh for you.

And of Papa's answer:

Depart, oh Rangī,
In summer I also will grieve for you.

Therefore to this day do the mists rise from the warm bosom of the earth and float upward to be drawn in by the breath of Rangī. Now, at this parting of Earth and Heaven some of the gods, their offspring, remained with their mother Earth, and of these Tane was chief. Rehua, God of Beneficence, accompanied his father Rangī to heaven, and remained there, dwelling in the tenth, or highest, heaven. Rehua, who in many of his attributes, closely resembles the Greek Zeus, was also known as the "Aged One." Despite the somewhat disquieting impression that thunder and lightning radiated from his person, Rehua was essentially a beneficent god opposed to strife and bloodshed, and by his genial influence on the hearts of men he dispersed sorrow and sadness.

Very touching is the next episode in this myth of Creation. Tane, filled with filial regret at the nakedness of his exiled father, roamed to the uttermost limits in search of coverings for him. So he brought back the various clouds of day and of sunset. Still disappointed because at night his great father gloomed cold and dark, Tane journeyed forth again and brought back the stars of night, so that now by day as well as by night Rangī was appropriately adorned. At this time only small vines and creepers grew on the earth and Tane, desiring to beautify his mother

Papa, obtained from Rehua trees and seeds of trees, all of which he planted. Tane therefore, in one of his attributes, is the God of Forests, and trees from the greatest to the least are known to the Maori as the children of Tane. Curiously enough, it is not until a later period in the nation's history, that any mention is made of other female deities, Papa, the great brown fruitful mother, represented, so far, the female principle, and in herself was all sufficient.

Mrs. Turton finds, on comparing the various tribal legends of the Maori, that despite a bewildering difference of detail, the essential facts regarding the Creation story and the doings of the children of Rangī and Papa, remain unchanged. Many points of curious analogy with biblical story present themselves as we peer into the more ancient legends. The loves of Tawhaki, the earthly denizen, and the celestial maiden Tāngō-Tāngō, embody the same idea as is expressed in Genesis VI., 2. The great flood which plays such a considerable part in all Polynesian mythology, is explained by the Maori as being caused by the persistent wrong-doing of men, who disregarded the divine laws of Tane regarding tapu. It was a canoe which saved the tribes from utter destruction, thereby reminding us of the Babylonian and Hebrew Stories of the Deluge. We touch Greek thought in the exploits of the demi-gods Rehua, Tane, Mani, and Tawhaki, which irresistibly recall the calm majesty of Zeus, the might of Hercules, the cunning of Prometheus, the fire-stealer, and the brilliance of Apollo. Nor does the vain Narcissus, in love with his own beauty, lack a counter-part in Maori mythology, as witness the legend of Tini-ran, who, to gratify his vanity, set apart several pools in the north island as sacred to himself so that he might admire his own reflection in their still depths. But it is around the restless and virile Tane that the primal myths of the Maori are most closely woven. His creative force, they averred, was expended impartially on small as on great things. Having adorned his father with the sacred red clouds and the glittering stars, and wrapped his mother in the gracious foliage of creeper, tree and fern, he caught the winds and prisoned them to silence their sad sighing,—but two escaped; he created the ocean, from whose depths Maui was presently to fish up Aotea-roa (N. Z.); created also the little weka, the sacred bird of Tane. But a greater ambition now filled his breast: He turned his thoughts to the creation of man. With the red soil of Hawaiki—(Adam, so the Rabbis tell us, was made from red earth)—Tane modelled a form resembling his own—(may I here recall that wondrous sentence in Genesis, "In His own image created He him") and raising it in his arms breathed upon the God Tu a mighty prayer. Tane called upon heat and light to warm the clay, saw it breathe and move, and in an ecstasy of delight at his own handiwork called the first man Tiki. But the labours of Tane on earth were not yet rounded to the perfect whole. The latest triumph of his creative power was lonely—he had no companion. No god, but only a mortal, Tiki lacked the power to surround himself with the embodiments of his fancy—people his own world. Amid the heroic strife and gigantic labours of the gods he shivered, pany, pitiful, alone. Therefore Tane resolved to create a companion for Tiki and once more took counsel with the superior gods. In the warm red earth of Hawaiki he modelled the figure of woman, himself endued her with life, named her Io-Wahine, and gave her to Tiki as companion and wife. The children of Tiki and Io-Wahine, with their descendants, have peopled the world. Tane, his labours being complete, ascended to his father Rangī and remained there. It is from the tragedy of Tane's own unhappy union that we learn of the existence of the underworld, the Po, or Hades of Maori belief. Tane had taken to wife a beautiful creation of his own named Hine-ata-uira, and while he was absent on one of his frequent consultations with the beneficent Rehua, Hine-ata-uira, falling a victim to women's besetting fault, curiosity, questioned those about her concerning her parentage. "Oh, you people," she cried, "where is my father, by whom I am?" Again and again was the question repeated ere those about her answered slowly and reluctantly. Then did Hine-ata-uira die of grief and shame and taking her children with her fled down the broad highway of Death to the dark under-world. Thither Tane followed her. Lacking the magic lute of Orpheus, which rendered the Greek god's search for Eurydice comparatively easy, it was with difficulty that Tane passed one after another the dread guardians of Hades, until at last he reached the gloomy shade in which Hine-ata-uira had hidden herself with their children. Long and tenderly he besought her to return with him to earth. She was inflexible in her refusal and he had to return alone. Songs and chants expressing the love and grief of Tane and Hine are among the tenderest poems of the Maori. The parallel legend in Japanese Mythology tells how Izanagi followed Izanami to the underworld, whither she had gone after the birth of the God of Fire. He implores her to return and she would fain do so, but asks him to wait until she has taken counsel with the eight deities of the place. Izanagi, impatient at the long tarrying, breaks off one of the teeth of the comb in his hair, lights it and enters the portals of Death, only to find his wife a mass of putrefaction. I prefer the ending of the Maori legend.

Tane, on his return to heaven, found ample scope for his virile strength and strategy in driving therefrom, like his prototype Michael, the Archangel, the discontented and rebellious spirits who had introduced strife and discord to those calm regions. Long before Milton sang of that titanic struggle, the driving of Satan and his host from the heavenly regions, the bards of Maoriland had woven the same ideas into chants and stories. They told how battle after battle was fought, and how some of the rebel spirits, hurled from the heavens they had desecrated, fell broken and defeated to earth; while others fell lower still, to Po, the place of endless night. On earth, to avenge themselves on Tane, they incited his earthly children to strife, cruelty and bloodshed, so that birds, fish and animals preyed on one another and man slew man without remorse. Doomed to eternally exist in doubt and discontent in this world or in the under-world of darkness, all the evils that afflict men spring from the influence of these fallen spirits.

With regard to some of the religious ideas of the Maori, we find that the whole universe was divided by them into three great states of which Rangī (Heaven) represented the Spiritual; Papa (Earth), Mortality; and Te Po (Darkness), Death. In Rangī, the spiritual world, there were no less than 10 divisions, each with its presiding deity and attendant spirits. The highest heaven was known as Te Rangī-a-mai-waho, and was the abode of To, or A, the Creator. To this heaven ascended the essence of the offerings of praise and thanksgiving, and supplications for help. Here was the heavenly temple Nahe-rangi, from whence were dispersed rewards and punishments both to the spirits in the remaining heavenly regions and to dwellers on earth. Each successive region, counting downwards, was the abode of beings diminishing in perfection and excellence in proportion to their distance from the highest heaven—the source of all good.

The soul of man was believed to be a ray from the power, or mana, of To, which, becoming detached in the heaven of Tema-rau-tu, dwelt there for a period equalling the average earth life of man, descended through the successive heavenly regions until it reached the lowest heaven, Te Rangī-o-tane. Below the fully-developed soul, now awaiting its earthly casket, lay the vast uninhabited space containing sun, moon and stars. Across this sea of ether must each soul take its flight ere it might be shrined in the body of a mortal infant. Below the abode of man lay the region of Te Rienga, or Te Po—the world of shades,—also divided into ten—some say twenty—planes of darkness and oblivion. These regions were, as we have already noted, inhabited from heaven by Tane, and to them came the souls of some men after the death of the body on earth. Whatever might be the cause of death, it was believed that the freed spirit, assisted by certain solemn and impressive rites, set out on a journey to Muri Whenua, a point at the extreme north of N. Z. There on the edge of a precipitous bluff jutting into the sea, grew a great Pohuta-kawa tree whose roots, thrusting over the rocks, reached the foot of the cliff. A vast cavern burrowed its gloomy depths beneath the cliff, and fronted the ocean, on whose eternal tides a mass of seaweed moved slowly, lapping the face of the rock as the surge rose and fell. Beside the gnarled tree the spirits kept their last tryst, chanting farewells to their respective tribes, in which they were joined by a chorus of dogs—? Cerberus. After a frenzied dance the human spirits, one by one, descended the overhanging roots, glided into the cave, and vanished in Te Uranga-o-te-ra, or the first region of the Shades. In this grim antechamber was a river named Karo-Karo Ponanui, where was stationed an ancient ferry woman, Rohe. Here, too, is another close analogy with the Greek myths—Rohe is the dusky counterpart of Charon who plied his grim traffic on the brooding bosom of the Styx. All those to whom Rohe granted passage, went irrevocably down the dusky way of death, but those who recovered from the coma caused by a blow, a fit, or a swoon, were supposed to have been refused a passage by the ancient ferry woman and were sent back by her to finish their life on earth. The period of existence in each plane of Te Po was considered to equal the average length of life on earth. It will thus be realised how small a portion of the soul's existence the ancient Maori conceived to be embodied in his earthly pilgrimage. Nothing can exceed the hopeless gloom with which he enshrouded this passage through the Shades. In striving to realise it, says Mrs. Turton, we cannot cease to wonder at the Maori's indifference to death and the extraordinary frivolity of the causes which incited him to suicide. As the spirit descended to one shade after another the darkness deepened, the powers of the soul deadened, until at last, reaching Toke, the lowest abyss, it assumed the shape of a worm, crawled blindly back to earth, and dying won at last long-deferred extinction. Such was the tale of the soul's life and death for the common people. Very different was the life eternal which was the heritage of the chiefs and priests. They were the descendants of those gods and goddesses, such as Tāngō-Tāngō who "saw the children of men that they were fair." The spark of divine parentage, however remote, was inextinguishable; thus the spirits of priests and chiefs alike returned to the heavens when their brief earth-life released them. Broadly speaking, the ancient Maori believed in eternal life for the souls of their nobles, the priests and chiefs, and gradual but complete annihilation for the souls of the peasants or common people. Abundant evidence of this is found in their burial rites, but time does not permit of a longer excursion in a field of research and investigation which grows more interesting the farther we penetrate.

The future of the Maori race, like all things else on this globe, "lies in the lap of the gods." Some observers declare the race is dying, fading away, though recent statistics of births and deaths do not confirm this pessimistic avowal. It was the earth hunger of the Aryans which drove the Maori forth from their prehistoric habitat; it was the earth-hunger of the modern descendants of the Aryan races which led to their rediscovery among the loveliest islands of the Pacific. That insatiable earth-hunger of the western European drove the Maori to rise in bitter rebellion against the white man fifty years ago, but peace has long since dwelt in the land. Writing in August of this year a member of the staff of the Otago Daily Times says:—

The power and dignity of the Maori is now as a sun that sets. A gripping hand is over all the Maoris. For Britain and for Britain's gods it holds the land, and whatever it can't assimilate it crumbles. The best of the Maoris won't mix. The race has come through storm and stress to quiet and relaxing times. Health and racial energy were of the spirit of the storm; the enervating balm is full of tubercles, heavy with the seeds of death. The history of British colonisation has been inevitably a long tale of the extirpation of the subjugated races. For these we tilt the plane of evolution, so that their progress towards the nebulous hereafter is quickened. Still swifter and swifter, as the game of civilisation goes on, the conquered peoples are toppled off into that ocean of unthinkable immensity whose depths no eye can fathom, whose mere idea no finite mind can grasp. In America the Indian races totter drunkenly to chaos, infecund; in Tasmania the last aborigine died a quarter of a century ago, killed over soon. In New Zealand the remaining Maoris, whom we found a warrior race of infinite promise, are patronised by the globe-trotter, used for the adornment of post cards, and generally regarded as an interesting asset of the Tourist Department. It is to be feared that this fine race is surely disappearing."

Let us hope that this word painter has filled in the shadows upon his canvas a little too darkly. As he observes elsewhere in his article:—

The Maori children are a joy. They are jolly and good-natured; they seldom seem to quarrel; their spirits are exuberant, their looks almost invariably charming. They are nearly always dressed neatly and knowingly. The wee maidens are as bright as sunbeams, and the small boys seem to lack the invincible gaucherie of the average small boy of British blood. They prattle delightfully in English—the language of all the younger folk. Just a little while before his death Tairaro (who died a few months ago in the South Island) was complaining to a friend that the Maori children were ceasing to get a fitting knowledge of the Maori tongue. That fact strikes a mere outsider, who knows nothing whatever of the language, as quite regrettable. The Maori falls on the ear as a pleasant and musical speech, with the glows and dusks of primeval woods and the silvery cadence of primeval streams in it. It is full of beautifully broad, soft vowels, like the Magyar, the pointed softness of the Spanish; it has the resonant vivacity of the Neapolitan, the crisp melodiousness of the Malay, and through it all there runs the slurring charm of the unique nasal "ag." It is certainly a language to be preserved.

Such a fine race as the Maori undoubtedly are deserve a kindlier fate than that of utter extinction. I am inclined to think that, as in the case of the Canadian Indians who have found peace, justice and humane treatment within the pale of the Pax Britannica, so it will be with the Maori, and that for them also

A brighter light is bringing in the dawn;
A higher hope is heralding the day!

FOR BABY'S SKIN
SCALP AND HAIR

Something for Mothers to Think About

EVERY CHILD born into the world with an inherited or early developed tendency to distressing, disfiguring humours of the skin, scalp, and blood, becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering but because of the dreadful fear that the disfiguration is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available, viz., THE CUTICURA TREATMENT.

Warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, to be followed in the severer cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (see below), to cool and cleanse the blood, are all that can be desired for the alleviation of the suffering of skin-tortured infants and children and the comfort of worn-out, worried mothers. A single set is often sufficient to cure when the best physicians fail.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafes, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sensitive, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are prepared to meet the wants of delicate women, and sensitive children, and are pure, sweet, and tasteless. They are beyond question the most successful blood purifiers and humour cures yet compounded.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Chancery Lane, London. French Depot: 1 Rue de la Paix, Paris. Forth: David Allen Cross. Dutch, Sole France, Boston, U. S. A. "All about the Skin," free.

Mr. Leavenworth's qualifications for the post, says the Nagasaki Press, include a considerable knowledge of the Far East; for some years he has been Professor at the Nanyang College, China, and he has travelled extensively in China and Japan. Mr. Leavenworth is one of the very few foreigners who possess a personal acquaintance with the Loo-choo Islands and the narrative of his tour in them is probably the most authoritative account published since the islands were ceded to Japan.

Of about seventy-five thousand Russian prisoners throughout Japan, some three thousand are under treatment in hospital for sickness or wounds. Two hundred and three among the invalids are severely ill.

THE Japanese prisoners in Russia will shortly be handed over to Japanese commissioners at a point on the Russo-German frontier. They will embark at Hamburg and Bremen before the middle of November and will land at Kobe.

A WASHINGTON report says that Mr. Takahira, Japanese Minister there, will leave on Oct. 1st for home on six months holiday. During his absence, Mr. Heki, first secretary of the legation, will take his place as Chargé d'Affaires. It is said that he is in bad health.

It is reported by telegram from Niigata that on the night of Oct. 30th, a burglar armed with a sword entered the residence of a civil engineer belonging to the prefectural government office. The intruder murdered a child and inflicted injuries on the engineer's wife.

THE Asahi says that the Russian authorities intend to remove sick and wounded officers and men from Siberia and Manchuria to Nagasaki. With this view they are making preparations to erect three large buildings in the compound of the Russian Naval Hospital there and other buildings elsewhere.

AN American journalist has secured an interview with Admiral of the Fleet Sir E. H. Seymour, G.C.B., regarding the naval future. The Admiral stated that, provided Britain, Japan and America continued harmonious in their relations, the navies of the world would not be called into use this generation or next.

THE captain and other members of the crew of the American steamer Centennial (2,000 tons) were released on Nov. 2nd in Yokohama. THE Idzumo and seventeen other vessels, including some converted cruisers and destroyers, left Yokohama on Oct. 26 for Shinagawa, and the Yakumo and twenty-nine others left for Yokosuka. There they will stay for about a week. At Yokohama the Shikishima and other battleships and cruisers as well as eleven destroyers are left.

A PORTION of the Second Division of the second reserve returning from the front passed the Hiranuma railway station by train at noon on Nov. 1st for Shinagawa. Another portion of the same Division passed the same point on the same evening. Various ladies representing public bodies were present at the station and welcomed them.

MILITARY TOPICS.

We gather from a critical article in the Keizai Zasshi that the Military Authorities have nearly concluded the construction of a large new gun factory. The site is mid-way between Oji and Itabashi and it covers an area of 100,000 tsubo (83 acres). The principal gate faces south and there are three secondary gates. An embankment with a thorn hedge surrounds the whole. The buildings number 20. They are mostly two-storied but some have only one storey and all are built of brick and roofed with zinc. Four lofty chimnies distinguish the principal factory. Rails are laid everywhere, and an electric line has been constructed to the bank of the Sumida to facilitate the transport of material, while a temporary station for the same purpose has been made on the Japan Railway Company's line opposite the Itabashi Powder Stores. Much energy has been shown in pushing on the work. Four thousand men are said to have been employed originally, but the number is now reduced to seventeen or eighteen hundred. The cost is put at 2 millions of yen, and the shops will be opened at the end of November. Apparently the idea is to transfer to this factory the duty of constructing heavy ordnance, hitherto undertaken at the Koishikawa arsenal.

The Keizai Zasshi condemns the whole enterprise. It wants to know when the Government obtained from the Diet an appropriation for such a purpose, and it assumes that when the arsenal is finished the nation will have to find money for its maintenance. That, however, is not the Keizai's cardinal objection. Its real ground of complaint is that whereas Japan's only hope of prosperity lies in becoming a manufacturing country, and whereas to become a manufacturing country her people must themselves carry on industries, the Government is unduly interfering with the latter result by itself invading the field. It has established iron smelting works at Yedamitsu, it has started a steel foundry at Kure, and now it is building this big arsenal.

It is generally possible to endorse the Keizai Zasshi's comments but the present case seems to be an exception. The manufacture of heavy ordnance and the building of armoured war-ships are operations which can not be abandoned wholly to private enterprise. The Government is bound to concern itself about such matters unless extraordinary aptitude and enterprise be shown by the people. Even in England, where no one can contend that the Government interferes unduly in industrial work, docks and arsenals are partly in official hands.

A staff officer, speaking through the columns of the Fiji Shimpō, insists upon the necessity from a military point of view and the advisability from an economical of improving the breed of horses in Japan. He instances the case of Austria as an example of successful management in this matter. Austria has carried horse-breeding to such a high standard that very large sums pour into the country yearly for the purchase of the animals for which she has become famous. This officer sees no reason why Japan should not occupy in the East a position similar to that acquired by Austria in the West. He speaks of the Chinese pony as far inferior to the Japanese, and he believes that since China must sooner or later become a military nation, she would be a splendid customer for horses if Japan were able to supply her wants. That appears to be a sound forecast, though we doubt whether all will agree that the Chinese pony is inferior to the Japanese. Such is not by any means the experience of racing men, and of the two animals we should say that the Chinese has generally better shape. But even though that be granted, there can be no doubt that the Chinese pony is greatly inferior to the European or American horse for cavalry or artillery purposes, and if China reorganizes her army, as she must do sooner or later, she should be only too ready to get a supply of horses from Japan if they were procurable there.

It is expected that the whole of the Japanese troops will be withdrawn to Japan within six months from the date of commencing the operation. That would mean that all the men will have returned to their country by about the middle of April next. From the 28th the service of trains on the Tokaido Railway was specially altered to suit transport requirements. We are not in a position to state exactly what number of troops are involved in the operation, but so far as armies are concerned there are six, and it will not be an excessive estimate to say that they aggregate from six hundred to seven hundred thousand men of all arms. Apparently the Authorities are bent upon making a record of celerity in transporting this large force. They certainly will make a very vivid contrast if they accomplish in six months a task which occupies the Russians for eighteen. But of course the conditions are very different.

On the 27th instant Lt.-General Miyoshi and the staff of the Tumen army reached Ujina from the seat of war and received a most hearty welcome.

It appears that a very large number of troops will be brought back during November. Their landing places will be Ujina and Moji.

It appears to have been determined that whereas the main bodies of all the divisions, immediately after landing, will proceed overland to their respective districts, the divisional and brigade staffs—that is to say, all officers of the rank of Major-General and upwards—will go in the first instance to Tokyo, where guards of honour will receive them at Shimbashi, and they will thence proceed to the Palace to have audience of the Emperor. The first arrivals under this programme will be the brigade under Major-General Sakai which formed part of the Tumen Army. These troops will reach Shimbashi at 3.48 p.m. on the 1st proximo and will re-entrain for Sendai via Shinagawa at 5 p.m. Major-General Sakai meanwhile will remain in Tokyo for audience on the 2nd. This latter arrangement can not be clearly ascertained from the published statements. It may be that the Major-General will not arrive until the 2nd in Tokyo. The commander-in-chief of the Second Division which constituted the Tumen Army—or a part of it—namely, Lt.-General Miyoshi, will arrive at Shimbashi on the 3rd at 1 p.m.

It is expected that General Baron Kuroki and his staff will arrive at Shimbashi in the middle of November. The distinguished officer will doubtless have a great welcome. He has served throughout the whole campaign, commanding the First Army from the moment of its advance northwards from Chemulpo to that of its splendid record in the Battle of Mukden.

It is stated that the captain of the Askold, who was supposed to be with his interned ship at Shanghai, has just made his appearance at Nagasaki in the Bogatyr. The circumstances under which he made his escape from Shanghai are not related, but it is easy to conceive that innumerable opportunities offered prior to the battle in the Sea of Japan.

A Russian officer is represented as stating that prior to the fall of Port Arthur a considerable number of ships entered Vladivostock but during the present year very few found their way thither. Coal was thus deficient, and the trains running between Vladivostock and Harbin had often to burn wood. There was a good supply of meat and food-stuffs in general, but vegetables were very short, and numerous cases of illness occurred in consequence. The news of the battle in the Sea of Japan had not intimidated the garrison. On the contrary the officer commanding the fort drew a sword presented to him by the Emperor and swore to defend the place to the death. This officer, whose name is not given, is said to have enjoyed much greater popularity and confidence than Skrydloff, whose Port Arthur record did not conduce to his reputation. The fortress could certainly have held out for 2 years. It was not strong in war-ships, but it had plenty of torpedo-craft and submarines.

It is said that there are 36 Japanese transports assembled at Dairen for the purpose of carrying home the troops, and that the process will commence immediately on a large scale.

The present forecast as to the programme of withdrawal is that General Kuroki's Army will be carried home in November and General Oku's in December, the armies of Generals Nozu, Nogi and Kawamura remaining until next year. But as there is a determination to expedite the movement as much as possible, the return of General Nozu's troops may be effected before the end of 1905. Field-Marshal Oyama and his staff are expected to get back at the end of December.

The Asahi Shimbun alleges that with some unexplained object the Russians have of late been employing Hunglutzs to spy out the Japanese positions and numbers. This procedure, after the restoration of peace, is naturally denounced as treacherous, but the story suffers from vagueness. Many of the bandits are said to have been captured in their attempts.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONY AT AWAYAMA.

A great concourse attended the religious rites performed in Awayama Cemetery on the 29th instant in memory of the naval officers and men who fell in the war. The western side of the spacious enclosure was set apart for the general public, the eastern for the families of the deceased, and at the northern entrance two battalions of blue-jackets were marshalled. Precisely at half-past ten in the forenoon Admiral Togo attended by Vice-Admirals Kamimura, Kataoka, Dewa and Uryu, moved up to their places on the east of the large building occupied by the officiating Shinto officials and by the offerings to the spirits of the dead. At the head of the front row of general worshippers sat Marquis Ito, Count Katsura and Count Okuma, and in their neighbourhood were a great throng of notables, naval, military, official and lay. Not very many foreigners were present, the Corps Diplomatique not having been invited. The ceremony commenced by Admiral Togo advancing to the front of the shrine and making an obeisance, after which the banding in and ranging of funeral meats proceeded, to the mournful music of a Shinto band. Then ensued the reading of funeral addresses, one by the principal Shinto official and one by Admiral Togo, after which the Imperial Princes belonging to the Navy, their Highnesses Higashi Fushimi, Yamashina and Fushimi, placed sprays of sakaki before the shrine, in which rite they were followed by Togo and his admirals and then by the general public. Immediately before this final tribute Admiral Togo advanced to the front of the western pavilion and bowed to the various sections of its multitudinous occupants. The illustrious Admiral has the reputation of being a diffident, retiring man, but nothing could exceed the calmness and dignity with which he performed every part of his duties at this ceremonial.

Admiral Togo's address to the spirits of the dead was as follows:—

"The clouds of war have disappeared from sea and from shore, and the whole city, with peaceful placid heart like that of a child, goes out to meet the men who shared life and death with you, and who now return triumphant under the Imperial Standard, while their families wait for them at the gates of their homes.

Looking back we recall how, braving the bitter cold and enduring the fierce heat, you fought again and again with our strong foe, and while the issue of the contest was still uncertain you went before us to the grave, leaving us to envy the glory you had won by your loyal deaths. We longed to imitate you in paying the debt we owe to sovereign and country. Your valiant and vehement fighting always achieved success. In no combat did you fail to conquer. Throughout ten months the attack on Port Arthur continued and the position was determined. In the Sea of Japan a single annihilating effort decided the issue. Thenceforth the enemy's shadow disappeared from the face of the ocean. This success had its origin in the infinite virtues of the Emperor, but it could not have been achieved had not you, forgetting yourselves, sacrificed your lives in the public service. The war is over. We who return in triumph, see signs of joy everywhere. But we remember that we can not share it with you, and mingled feelings of sadness and rejoicing struggle painfully for expression. But the triumph of to-day has been purchased by your glorious death, and long your loyalty and valour will inspire our Navy, guarding the Imperial land for all time.

"We here perform this rite of worship to your spirits, and speaking something of our sad thoughts, pray you to come and receive the offerings we make."

A very curious episode occurred at the naval in-memoriam ceremony in Aoyama Cemetery on Sunday morning. In the large marquee erected to receive those invited to attend the rites, long rows of forms were placed for the accommodation of the great assembly. At the north of the marquee in the front row immediately beside the obsequies pavilion, seats were assigned to the most distinguished personages present, namely, Marquis Ito, the Premier, Count Katsura, and Count Okuma. Some time subsequently to the occupation of the greater part of the marquee, a foreigner entered the enclosure, and, to the profound astonishment of every onlooker, was seen to march up beyond these three statesmen and to locate himself in a seat immediately on Marquis Ito's left, thus appropriating the place of honour par excellence, above the heads of practically all Japan's great men. In performing this inexpressibly gross feat, he passed in front of the three statesmen within a distance of a yard, yet he never made the slightest recognition of their presence or offered the shadow of an apology for his inconceivable act of gaucherie. The identity of the man was recognised, but we refrain from giving any indication, further than to say with thankfulness that he was neither British nor American, though he once, we believe, claimed the latter nationality. We allude to the matter because it is desirable to assure the Japanese, though we trust they know well already, that these Yahoo manners are not less shocking to foreigners than to the people of Japan.

TOKYO AS A SEAT OF EMBASSIES.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun is eminently qualified to discuss the interesting question which has now entered the field of practical politics, the question of replacing the Legations in Tokyo by Embassies. An inevitable feature of such a change would be a large addition to Japan's outlays under the heading of diplomatic establishments abroad, for if England has an embassy in Tokyo, other Powers will surely follow suit, and Japan, on her side, must nominate ambassadors of her own to all these States. Concerning this our contemporary gives the following figures:—

NUMBER OF JAPANESE REPRESENTATIVES, CONSULS, &c., ABROAD.
Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary.....	15
Secretaries of Legation, &c.	90
Consuls General.....	7
Acting Consul General.....	1
Consuls and Vice-Consuls.....	29
Honorary Consuls.....	35
Commercial Agents.....	1

EXPENSES OF THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

	Yen.
Expenses of Head Office.....	164,755
Expenses of Legations, Consulates, &c.	2,173,708
Total.....	2,338,463

Turning now to the comparative outlays of various countries on account of their diplomatic establishments, the following are the figures:—

	Yen.
Great Britain.....	1,155,558
United States.....	8,776,253
Germany.....	7,083,004
Russia.....	6,597,488
France.....	6,534,514
Italy.....	6,345,044
Austria-Hungary.....	4,569,744
Japan.....	2,338,463

This goes to indicate that Japan spends less on her diplomatic establishments abroad than any other Power, but if the various outlays be set down as fractions of every 1,000 units of State expenditure, the results are:—

	In every thousand units of state outlays.
England.....	9.1	do	do
American U. S.	6.0	do	do
Germany.....	7.4	do	do
Russia.....	3.2	do	do
France.....	4.7	do	do
Italy.....	9.7	do	do
Austria-Hungary.....	33.0	do	do
Japan.....	13.1	do	do

The impression suggested by this table is not very re-assuring but the Nichi Nichi Shimbun justly observes that in the case of a country making such rapid progress as Japan is doing, the development of her foreign relations necessarily outruns the growth of her State revenue or expenditure, as a matter of comparison. The fact is not at all alarming, and ought to be regarded as a normal incident of national progress.

At the beginning of the article from which the above extracts are taken, our contemporary declares it to be questionable whether a country so unskilled diplomatically as Japan can hope to derive any advantage from transforming her legations into embassies. The Nichi Nichi is a very high authority yet it is hard to comprehend the grounds for its statement that Japan's diplomacy is bad. We ourselves would have been disposed to pronounce precisely the opposite judgment, and we should base it on accomplished facts. What evidence is there of failure on the part of Japanese diplomacy? Has it not, on the contrary, been eminently successful, so successful that some foreigners are inclined to regard Japan as extraordinarily lucky, others give her credit for great adroitness, and one has gone so far as to opine that she is under the special protection of Providence? We do not recognise so much as one conspicuous blunder made by her diplomats, and if any one can conscientiously allege that she ought to have scored greater successes than she has actually scored, he must have an extraordinarily high view of possibilities. Of course the Nichi Nichi Shimbun will re-tort that the issue of the Portsmouth conference was a signal failure? We entirely disagree, and we shall continue to disagree until some one clearly explains what better results could have been obtained. General condemnation can not carry conviction to reasoning men. We must have an explicit indictment, and that is precisely what the critics refrain from giving. Not one of them—we mean not one of the responsible publicists, from which category we expressly exclude Mr. Kono Hironaka and his following—not one of them has had the courage to say that the war should have been continued rather than abandon the indemnity, and since there was no other alternative, we are landed in an impasse. It is our frank belief that party politics never displayed the pernicious character of its bias than it has done with regard to this peace treaty.

RUSSIA.

Telegrams pour in from Russia indicating a most alarming state of affairs. The country is represented as virtually in a state of insurrection. But experience has abundantly shown that a large margin of error and exaggeration must be allowed in the case of telegrams, and this is probably truer than ever in the present case, for the ordinary machinery of communication seems to be entirely dislocated and news-collectors must consequently rely largely on their own imagination or on emotional inferences. But it is at any rate tolerably certain that a state of the gravest unrest exists, and one is naturally impelled to ask how Japan would have fared had she failed to come to terms with her antagonist before these disturbances broke out. History repeats itself. Just as the Samnite war induced the Roman patriots to give real validity to the Licinian laws and thus to remove the discontent of the plebeians, so the war with Japan appears to have induced the Tsar to quiet the turbulent elements among his subjects by making promise of a constitution. But it is little better than a sham constitution, and the tumult of disaffection has arisen more violently than ever. Some may suppose that had not peace been successfully negotiated at Portsmouth the Tsar would have given genuine value to his constitutional concessions. But that does not seem to have been His Majesty's programme. His programme was to force the Japanese into a position manifestly hurtful to Russia's honour, and thereby to re-unite all classes of the nation for a renewal of the Manchurian struggle. He had two remedies in view: the constitutional remedy was to paralyse the peace party prior to the discussion of peace; the "national-honour" remedy was to paralyse them if peace could be proved un-purchaseable by reasonable concessions. Possibly we may be wronging the Tsar. He may be a genuinely honest reformer, and the very fractional nature of his concessions to the people may be due to a firm conviction of the necessity of caution. As things now stand, however, Japan may heartily congratulate herself that she concluded peace while her vis-a-vis was still in a chaotic condition. Had these disturbances in Russia broken out while the conference at Portsmouth was still wrangling, there would have been no end.

ENTERTAINING THE SAILORS.

It is stated that 50,000 people assembled at the Business Men's Welcome to Admiral Togo on the 25th October in Hibiya Park. Mr. Otori Keisuke acted as president, and the festivities were of a most hearty character.

The citizens of the Kojimachi District are planning a special celebration. One of their proposals is to change the name of the hill on which the Admiral's residence stands from "Hogen-zaka" to "Togo-zaka."

Until the 29th October the public will be admitted to inspect the captured ships now lying off Yokohama.

On the 29th at 9 a.m. Admiral Togo will attend a service at the Aoyama Cemetery in memoriam of the naval officers and men killed in the war.

Considerable sums are being subscribed for the entertainment of the sailors. Baron Iwasaki gives two garden parties in their honour, and consequently does not subscribe money, but the Mitsui firm gives 5,000 yen, and the Jiji's list is said to be swelling rapidly.

The Emperor invited all the officers of the United Fleet to the banquet in the Shiba Detached Palace on the 27th October. But of course only one half could absent themselves from their ships. The second half were invited to the same place by the Crown Prince on the 28th. Several of the Princes of the Blood and high dignitaries of State were present on the 27th, and the total number of guests was 1,200. The Emperor gave special audience to all officers of the rank of Rear Admiral and upwards. His Majesty adopted the same course with all officers, of whatever rank, who had received a kanjo, and in the case of an officer thus distinguished who had died of wounds or in battle, another officer was allowed to represent him. Where a kanjo had been conferred on a ship, the officer commanding the ship was received. To all officers thus honoured, the Emperor gave with his own hand a porcelain cup specially made for the occasion. It had the Imperial Chrysanthemum in gold inside, and, outside, the legend Meiji sanju shichi-hachi nen no gaisen kigen (Memorial of the triumph of the 37th and 38th years of Meiji). All the other officers received a similar cup, but not from His Majesty's hand. A corresponding ceremonial was observed at the Prince Imperial's banquet.

Some five thousand officers and blue-jackets of the Navy, and a few Englishmen, repaired to the Komagome villa of Baron H. Iwasaki on the forenoon of the 29th October, and enjoyed lavish hospitality among most beautiful surroundings. The day was quite ideal, calm, bright and pleasantly warm, and the park, which, after that of the Imperial Palace at Fukiage, stands unrivalled in Tokyo for scenic loveliness and spacious variety of landscape and water-scape, presented a spectacle such as Japan alone can show and such as only the sparkling atmosphere of Japan can enhance. On the villa side of the lake the scenery was not invaded by any evidences of feasting, and it was observable that many of the blue-jackets found palpable difficulty in tearing themselves away from this really exquisite scene to go in search of creature comforts or amusements less refined than view-gazing. Beyond the forest on the southern bank of the lake numerous pavilions had been erected specially for the occasion, and in each of these some special kind of food was served to all comers, geisha acting as waitresses and also as cup-bearers. In one pavilion the hostesses, Baroness H. Iwasaki and Baroness Y. Iwasaki, presided, and were assisted by Mrs. Kato Takaaki, Mrs. Kondo Rempo and some other ladies, all serving tea to such of the visitors as desired that beverage. At numerous places luncheon-boxes were handed out, and such of the visitors as had a taste for genuine picnicking, carried these boxes to chosen spots among the glades and groves, and there discussed their contents. There was a total absence of every kind of formality, and the blue-jackets abandoned themselves to their opportunities with most unequivocal enjoyment. Ten thousand bottles of beer—all Kirin brew—, dozens of tubs of sake and three hundred and fifty geisha Ganymedes were among the adjuncts of the revelry, and as a natural consequence several of the men fell into musical ecstasies or bansai manias, but none can be said to have passed the bounds of jubilant hilarity. "English gentleman, bansai!" was a cry that frequently greeted the British guests. Admiral Togo was not present. Duty detained him elsewhere, but it was understood that he had promised to attend on the 2nd proximo when the entertainment will be duplicated for the sake of those prevented from coming on the 29th instant. So far as history shows this exercise of hospitality is quite novel in Japan; novel in any country, indeed, for officers and men might be seen sitting side by side served by the same dainty little waitresses to soba, tempura, sake, beer and other edibles and potables. Dancing and ball-balancing formed the only pastimes specially provided; it was just a day's outing in a lovely park with abundance to eat and to drink and with every inducement to be happy. Of course there are very few private parks in Tokyo where five thousand guests could be conveniently accommodated, but the Komagome Park covers a space of a hundred and fifty acres, so that even this great throng had ample room to roam about in comparative solitude. It was undoubtedly a most highly patriotic act on the part of the Barons Iwasaki to provide such an entertainment, and concerning the pleasure afforded to the men, there is no question that to be thus welcomed at a private residence and treated exactly on the same footing as their officers made the blue-jackets supremely happy. These are the men by whose devotion, valour and highly trained skill Japan's great naval victories were won, and nothing is more important than to prove practically what a high value their country attaches to their services. The Barons Iwasaki, whose great wealth never betrays them into the smallest solecism of vulgar ostentation or into any abstinence from earnest industry, had a fine inspiration when they conceived this welcome to the sailors. Many congratulations are due also to those who planned the general features of the fete and arranged its details with such thoroughness and forethought. It is stated that only three days were available to put everything in readiness, yet such good use was made of the time that though the blue-jackets, bidden for 11 a.m., began to pour into the park two hours before that time, they found the preparations faultlessly complete. It need scarcely be said that many cheers were given for "the Iwasaki" and the "Mitsu Bishi."

On the afternoon of the 30th of October the Nobles Club gave a welcome entertainment to Admiral Togo and his officers, and on the forenoon of the same day a welcome was organized in the Hibiya Park by the inhabitants of the Kojimachi Ward of Tokyo, where Admiral Togo has his residence. The invitations were limited to residents of that district, and consequently the party was not large, but many ladies attended, and the greatest cordiality marked the event. A feature of the celebration was the presence of some thousands of school children of Kojimachi-ku. The people of the district presented to the Admiral a handsome pair of silver vases.

At the entertainment in the Nobles Club, which took the form of a garden party, their Imperial Highnesses Prince Yamashina, Higashi-Fushimi and Fushimi were present. A luncheon was given at 2 o'clock, when Prince Tokugawa, President of the House of Peers, delivered an address of congratulation.

Marquis Kuroda and Marquis Nabeshima gave entertainments on the 30th ultimo to the officers and men connected with their own provinces. Count Okuma also welcomed the warrant officers and men of Hizen extraction at his villa on the 31st ultimo.

On the 31st ultimo the City of Tokyo entertained one half of the warrant officers and men of the United Fleet and will entertain the other half to-day (1st). The men paraded at the Naval Club and marched to Hibiya Park with mounted constables leading the column.

The three educational bodies of the capital, the Teikoku Kyoiku-kai, the Tokyo-fu no Kyoiku-kai, and the Tokyo-shi no Kyoiku-kai entertained Admiral Togo and his officers on the 31st October, while the City was entertaining the blue-jackets in Hibiya Park. The number of naval guests on the latter occasion was some 8,000.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa gave a banquet on the 31st at which the whole of the staff of the British Legation seem to have been present.

Admiral Togo gave entertainments at the Maple Club on the 30th and 31st of October, the object being to express a sense of the fine service of the officers and men of the Navy; and of the excellent arrangements made by the officials of the Naval Department.

The Directors of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha will give a banquet in the Imperial Hotel on the 4th instant to Admiral Togo and the principal officers of the Fleet.

Osaka gave a brilliant entertainment in honour of the British squadron on the 27th October. The Mayor made a long address. He spoke of the great honour Japan felt in having become the ally of the most powerful empire in the world, and he expressed the sincere hope that this union would achieve its purpose of assuring peace to the East. He further stated that Japan's debt to England was very large, not merely because the Navy, whose victories they had now the pleasure to celebrate, was formed on British models, but also because England was Japan's example in matters of manufacture, a reflection which applied specially to Osaka, the centre of Japanese industry. It was an inexpressible joy that here in Osaka on the occasion of Nelson's centenary the representatives of the Navy which had inherited Nelson's fame should be welcomed by the nation whose glory it was to possess a Navy instructed by the heirs of Nelson's greatness, a Navy which had not shown itself wanting in loyalty or courage.

The Mayor's speech included other matters of secondary interest, and is said to have been somewhat unduly long, but the official—Mr. Shibahara—who rendered it into English, gave only a cleverly abbreviated synopsis. Admiral Noel, in replying, alluded to the splendid hospitality of which he, his officers and his men had been everywhere the recipients in Japan and said that this reception at Osaka, the great manufacturing city of Japan, gave him special pleasure. He had had the honour of seeing the great Naval Review in Tokyo Bay and of witnessing with his own eyes the might of a Navy which had won such imperishable renown and of which he had heard so much. Close acquaintance with that Navy had been a valuable source of instruction to him.

The entertainment is described as having been very brilliant. It terminated at 3.20 p.m.

The business men of Osaka, to the number of 52, gave a party in the Osaka Hotel on the evening of the 30th ultimo to Admiral Noel and his officers. The British guests numbered 75, and altogether 150 sat down to dinner.

THE CROPS.

On the 26th instant a general meeting of the Agricultural Societies (Nori-kai) throughout the country was held in the Agricultural Hall at Tamaike, Tokyo. Mr. Sakawa, Chief of the Agricultural Bureau in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, made a dispiriting report. He said that the crop yield would be emphatically bad this year, alike in the matter of silk, of tea and of rice. Two official estimates of the rice yield had already been issued. The first predicted a shortage of 9 per cent., compared with an average year, the second put the figure at 10 per cent. Of late there had been suggestions that the Government doctored these figures, but he assured the meeting that nothing of the kind had taken place. The fact was although, in certain districts, the rice had presented the appearance of being tolerably full-cared, it had subsequently been found that this semblance was misleading and that, instead of rice, the ears were filled with a kind of milky substance. It was an extraordinary phenomenon, well calculated to deceive. A third investigation was now in progress and its results would be duly announced, but it was to be feared that the figure would prove much more unfavourable than had been supposed.

Baron Kiyoura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, confirmed this pessimistic view, and said that the prefectures of Miyagi, Fukushima and Iwate were even threatened with famine, while in Tochigi and Gumma also there would be a marked shortage.

It is the custom with the Department of Agriculture and Commerce to make two investigations annually as to the state of the rice crop, but this year, owing to the very unusual climatic conditions, three examinations have been made. The result of the third has just been published. It puts the crop at 38,234,265 koku, which is 2,940,000 koku less than the figure stated after the second examination. This means that the yield is 25.7 per cent. less than that of last year and 13.9 per cent. less than the yield of an average year. Tokyo journals express some doubt as to the correctness of the estimate, and say that it will be fortunate should the crop prove to be no worse than the Noshomusho's figure.

The exact report compiled by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce is as follows:—"Reports have already been issued on two occasions showing the forecast for this year, but it would seem that the cold at the time of flowering prevented the filling of the ears, and although the weather subsequently became normal, the middle and late crops did not bear any grain in some districts. Another examination of the conditions on the 24th of October showed a decrease of 25.7 per cent. as compared with last year, and of 13.9 per cent. as compared with an average year. The following table shows the actual figures:—

Year.	Koku.
1895	39,960,798
1896	36,240,351
1897	33,039,293
1898	47,387,666
1899	39,698,258
1900	41,466,422
1901	46,914,434
1902	36,932,266
1903	46,473,298
1904	51,430,221
1905	41,174,388
{ Second Estimate	38,234,265
{ Third Estimate	44,388,016
Average year	44,388,016

The average year is obtained by taking the 7 seasons from 1898 to 1904, inclusive, and omitting the best year and the worst. It appears from the table that the shortage compared with an average year is 6 million koku, which at 14 yen, represents 84 million, of yen. Commenting on these facts the Nichi Nichi Shimbun states that the Prefects of the districts showing worst results are in Tokyo for the purpose of devising remedial measures. The steps recommended for immediate adoption are:—(1) That the agricultural guilds should be moved to make preparations for sowing barley as quickly as possible. (Barley is sowed in November and reaped in May. Ed I.M.) (2) To remove the rice without delay and fertilize the ground. (3) To avert the abuse of idleness by abolishing the system of pecuniary relief, and by requiring the local offices to start public works with the object of providing employment. (4) To remit the land tax and the land rate. (5) To arrange for the transport of rice and provisions at half rates to the districts where the crop has failed. (6) To form coöperative associations in the afflicted regions for the purchase of food stuffs and goods.

Collating the Customs returns, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun finds that during the past 10 years Japan has exported 13 million piculs of rice valued at 64 million yen, and has imported 59 million piculs valued at 236 millions. Evidently, as our contemporary observes, unless the growth of rice in Japan undergoes marked improvement or unless the surplus population finds some now invisible outlet, the import of the cereal must grow steadily. The question then arises whether this essential foodstuff should be subjected to an import tax. At present a war duty of 15 per cent, ad valorem is imposed. This tax is supposed to produce a revenue of 1½ million yen in the current year and of 3,800,000 yen next year. It is essentially bad policy, says the Nichi Nichi, to make the poor pay high for their food in order to bring such a petty sum into the treasury. There is the argument that this tax serves a protective purpose and encourages improvements. To that our contemporary replies by adducing figures. Thus:—

	Men.
People who farm their own holdings.....	1,470,000
People who partly farm and partly let their land	2,000,000
People who farm as tenants	950,000

It appears to be our contemporary's view that the only people who benefit by the import tax are those that farm their own land but we fail to follow that argument. It may be valid, indeed, so far as concerns the much talked of kochi seiri, which involves exchanges of holdings and diversion of roads. But in whatever capacity a man grows rice, he must find his account in high prices. The strongest objection to the tax is indicated in the figures of the following table (given by the same journal):—

RICE-CROP THIS YEAR TAKING TO AS THE AVERAGE FIGURE.

Miyagi Prefecture	1.4
Iwate Prefecture	4.0
Awomori Prefecture.....	4.0
Yamagata Prefecture.....	4.0
Akita Prefecture	4.0
Gumma Prefecture	4.0
Ibaraki Prefecture	5.0
Nagano Prefecture	5.0
Niigata Prefecture	5.0
Tokaido districts	8.0
Kyushu.....	9.0

If these figures be correct—and it is to be observed that they are more pessimistic than the estimate compiled by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce—it is plain that the poorer class who eat imported rice will be the chief sufferers by the tax. An impost having such an incidence is not commendable.

A GRUESOME TALE

Dr. F. J. Dillon, the well known correspondent, has published in Harper's Weekly a story which has caused much sensation, and has induced the Russian Government, so it is alleged, to order a strict investigation. The sensational passages are these:—

"But hunger and thirst are the two awe-inspiring demons of war whose victims are more to be pitied even than Uglolino in his hunger tower. I have heard of soldiers who, to quench their maddening thirst as they lay wounded on the millet-fields of Manchuria, drank human blood. I could if needs were, name some who came back from the war to their native village invalided, and whose experience had been even still more horrible. They themselves, told the story to some comrades in one of the central states of Russia, they told it simply, picturesquely, forcibly. "We lay helpless in the fields like children, covered by the milletgrass. My leg was as stiff as a board. We were fiercely hungry like wolves, human wolves. We would have eaten refuse had there been any at hand. But there was nothing. Every now and then we cast hungry looks at our dead comrades, and then we gazed at each other. We spoke with our eyes, we agreed with our eyes to commit a heinous crime. All the talk was done by evil glances. I can't say how, but we understood each other perfectly. And then—then we did it."

This is a very remarkable tale. It may be true. Nothing is impossible under the sun. But think what it signifies. In the first place, where did the men procure blood to drink? Did they sever their own arteries to obtain it or did they gather it from the wounds of their comrades? Again, how did the man whose leg was "as stiff as a board," and who, consequently, must have been unable to move—how did he approach the dead to take their flesh? Then again, if these wounded Russians were capable of doing such things, why did they not crawl away in search of succour? And yet once more, on what occasion prior to the battle of Liaoyang—for the unrequited millet fixes the date with some accuracy—did Russian wounded lie in the open untended for a length of time sufficient to develop the cannibalistic propensity? All experience goes to show that days and days of starvation are needed to overcome a man's natural repugnance to human flesh. We know of no occasion when the Russian wounded lay for days and days without succour. It is a shocking story, but happily there is a large margin for unbelief.

King Edward may offer a Cup for a Trans-Atlantic Race in 1906, and the Kaiser may offer a similar cup to be competed for in 1907.

CHINA.

It is stated that when the Changtu-Changchun section of the Manchurian Railway comes into Japanese hands, it will be so much injured as to require virtual relaying. The appurtenances have all been carried away and the road-bed greatly broken up. How much of this damage was done subsequently to the conclusion of the peace it is difficult to ascertain, though previous accounts suggested that the Russians were busying themselves to render the property as valueless as possible to its new owners. At all events it may be taken for granted that during the 18 months which will presumably intervene before the transfer of the road to Japanese hands, no attempt whatever will be made in the nature of upkeep nor will the troops be restrained from doing any mischief that seems good to them. Eighteen months of such a life can not be expected to leave a railway in a very presentable condition.

Peking reports that there has been a heavy earthquake in Mongolia. The district, from Kiatku to Kooloon suffered notably but no particulars are given of the damage done.

It has been finally decided that Howchow in Kiangsu shall be opened to foreign trade. Germany was credited with designs against this place.

The Fiji Shimpō has telegrams with reference to the great review which took place from the 22nd to the 26th of October in the Honan region of Pechili. Fifty thousand troops are said to have taken part. They were divided into northern and southern armies under the command of Viceroy Yuan and General Tich Liang. Some 30 foreign military attachés were present, as were also 300 representatives of the various provinces. The manoeuvring is described as having been excellent, and the bearing and discipline of the troops are said to have excited the admiration of all observers. These excellent results were freely attributed to the fact that Japanese experts have been engaged organizing and training this army of the metropolitan province.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō speaks of the fact that the German Minister in Peking has postponed his departure. Sufficient reason for the change may be found in the prospect of more or less important diplomatic questions connected with the Manchurian problem, but it is further stated that Germany contemplates acting as intermediary to procure the withdrawal of the foreign garrisons from the metropolitan province. She is prepared to withdraw her own force at once, and it has apparently occurred to her that her good offices may be useful to China in this matter. The telegram significantly adds that it is not known what reward Germany will claim for this service.

There appears to be a growing uneasiness lest the Chinese Government should make trouble about endorsing the arrangements embodied in the Treaty of Peace. The treaty provides that China's consent must be obtained to the transfer of the lease of the Liaotung Peninsula and to the acquisition of the Manchuria Railway by Japan. But the Chuo alleges that the terms of partnership between Russia and China with regard to this railway were of a very complicated character, and that it will be a matter of great difficulty to remodel the compact. In that event it may be found impossible to link up the Manchurian and Korean system of lines. Conjecture evidently bulks largely in this forecast. The Fiji Shimpō also takes up the matter. It has learned that the Government contemplates sending a special envoy to Peking to negotiate the affair, and it sees in the fact an admission that the terms of the Portsmouth Treaty are defective. If the duties of the envoy be mainly concerned with the larger question of the future administration of Manchuria and its opening to trade, the appointment may be viewed without uneasiness, but if he is going merely to obtain China's endorsement of a treaty dictated by Japan to Russia at the point of the sword, our contemporary thinks that Mr. Uchida might well have been entrusted with the task, and that the despatch of a special envoy would be a tactical mistake calculated to inspire in the breasts of Chinese statesmen an undue conception of the rights reserved to them. It appears to us that the Fiji also is writing "off the book," and that its censure has a large element of the prospective. That China's consent had to be made a condition of the Portsmouth Treaty is quite palpable. It would have been indeed a strange thing if, in the immediate sequel of a war fought to assert China's integrity and sovereignty inter alia, Japan had put her name to a compact constructively ignoring both the one and the other. Russia's rights in Manchuria were derived from China and in transferring those rights to a third party, their source had necessarily to be consulted. As to the special envoy, it will be time enough to discuss his uses when the fact of his appointment rests on something more solid than mere hearsay. This appears to us to be essentially a case of criticism vitiated by defective knowledge. The Fiji Shimpō remains so irrevocably convinced of a huge failure on the part of the Japanese Government at Portsmouth that it now approaches all official questions in a carping spirit. But the Fiji Shimpō must by this time know well what will be the verdict of history about the Portsmouth negotiations, and must know well that it will not be a verdict warranting the agitation started by the press and taken up by Mr. Kono Hironaka and his coterie.

An ugly trouble has recurred in the Anking district of Anhui province. Two American officers, Rear-Admiral Train and his son Lieut.-Commander Train, who commands a gun-boat, landed near Hwayang-ching on a sporting expedition. By an unfortunate mistake some pellets of shot lodged in the face of a woman, and her brother, refusing to treat the matter as an accident, attacked the party of sportsmen, who seem to have numbered four. Admiral Train was able to return to the gun-boat, but his three companions had to remain on shore pending further developments. A physician having been summoned, pronounced the wound trifling, but the friends of the woman still maintained a threatening attitude and finally a party of marines were landed. The result was a collision in which two Chinese were shot. It is stated that the matter is likely to be amicably settled. The day will come, we presume, when the territories of China will cease to be regarded as a happy hunting ground free to all wandering sportsmen. The quickest route to that result would be for the Chinese Government to take some practical measure of prohibition, but in truth it must be confessed that China is always the last to help herself.

A telegram from Peking to the Hochi Shimbun says that the United States Representative is discussing with the Wai-wu-pu the question of speedily opening Manchuria to foreign trade and travel, and the nature of the arrangements required for that purpose. The American Minister is busying himself specially in this matter because the United States acted such an important part in bringing about the conclusion of the peace treaty under which the opening of Manchuria becomes possible. But the nature of America's interest in the trade of Manchuria seems to furnish a sufficient explanation of this activity without going farther afield to look for motives. China's reply, it is alleged, is that she is determined to effect the opening of the three provinces as speedily as possible and that the steps are now under consideration.

According to news published by the Foreign Office Messrs. Diederichsen, Jebesen and Company of Kiaochow began from September 5th to run a steamer—the Chfoo of 135 tons—from Tsingtao to Haichow calling at Tsingkau. On the voyage from Tsingtao the steamer will probably carry some raw cotton, piece goods, matches, flour and so forth, but the staple products of Haichow, namely, beans, bean-cake, peanuts, barley and salt, will continue to be shipped by junk. On the return trip from Haichow the Chfoo will have to depend on a few Chinese passengers, no cargo being likely to offer. The service will therefore prove a losing venture but Messrs. Diederichsen, Jebesen & Company are not likely to abandon it as they will receive a government subsidy. The charges are, passenger fare (no distinction of class) $3; 1 bag of wheat or bale of miscellaneous goods, 10 cents; a case of matches, a bag of barley or rice, or a picul of cotton, 20 cents.

It is currently reported that Marquis Ito was asked by the Government to proceed to China as special envoy, but he declined.

Various regulations are published with regard to the education of Chinese students in Japan. The gist of these regulations is to extend the control of the Chinese and the Japanese Authorities; the former through the Chinese Representative in Tokyo; the latter through the Minister of Education. We gather from the character of these regulations that a much stricter regimen is considered necessary. The Chinese Minister has to be furnished with lists of intending students, and the Japanese Minister of Education is virtually empowered to make selections from among candidates for admission to public or private schools, such selections being subsequently submitted for final approval by the Chinese Government. It results that intending students have to submit applications in due form to the Minister of Education. Another provision is that a Chinese student, after having been expelled from a school for bad conduct, ceases permanently to be eligible for admission to any other school.

THE WAR-VESSELS BUILDING IN JAPAN.

The Nippon gives the following list of the war-vessels building or about to be laid down in Japan:—

At Kure, the battle-ship Aki (18,000 tons), about to be laid down.

At Yokosuka, the battle-ship Setsuna (18,000 tons), about to be laid down.

At Kure, the armoured cruiser Tsukuba (14,000 tons), laid down in February, 1905, and expected to be launched in February, 1906.

At Kure, the armoured cruiser Ikoma (14,000 tons), laid down in December, 1904, and expected to be launched in December, 1905.

At Yokosuka, the armoured cruiser Kurama (14,000 tons), laid down, but dates are not given.

At Kure, the armoured cruiser Izuki (14,000 tons), about to be laid down.

Referring to this subject the Fiji Shimpō says that the Japanese Admiralty has already elaborated a scheme of naval expansion which awaits the approval of the Diet. Japan's best ships are beginning to be out of date. Everything goes to indicate the building of larger ships with much heavier armaments and higher speed. In view of this change of plan the Kashima and the Katori, now building in England, would fall into the second place. The battle-ship of the immediate future will probably be a leviathan displacing 22,000 tons, with an armament of fourteen 12-inch guns and a speed of 20 knots; while the armoured cruiser will have a displacement of 15,000 tons and a speed of 25 knots. The ships now under construction in Japan are an approximation to the new lines. England is now building the Lord Nelson, a battle-ship with a displacement of 18,000 tons and an armament of four 12-inch and ten 10-inch guns, but English naval architects contemplate something much more formidable. Russia's new navy will certainly be on the modern models and Japan must live up to the time. These are the Fiji's views.

The Chuo Shimbun says that the new submarines, five in number, which performed evolutions before the Emperor at the Naval Review, have proved a great success and the Authorities are about to increase the squadron. The submarine is especially suitable in the navy of this country, for its management demands precisely the qualities in which the Japanese officer and sailor excel, courage which never shrinks from self-sacrifice and absolute coolness in action.

A second-class cruiser now under construction at Sasebo has been named the Tone, and a despatch boat building at Kobe has been called the Yodo.

The destroyer Asakaze was launched at the Kawasaki Yard in Kobe on the 28th instant. Captain Ommaney of H.B.S. Andromeda cut the rope freeing the vessel. It is reported that the affair was very brilliant, about a thousand ladies and gentlemen being present. The Asakaze is one of 5 destroyers ordered by the Admiralty from this same firm. The other four, which are understood to be now in course of construction, are the Harukaze, the Shigure, the Hatsuharu and the Usuki.

The Fiji Shimpō has a paragraph saying that two or three days ago the gunboat Posadnik (400 tons) was floated at Port Arthur. The Posadnik was built in 1893. She is a very fast vessel, her maximum speed being 22 knots.

The sections of the United Fleet now lying at Yokohama, Yokosuka and Shinagawa will remain there until the 10th of November, after which they will go round the coast and then break up into peace formation.

The Iwami (late Orel) is in dock at Kure. It has been found necessary to replace her upper deck altogether and also the greater part of her middle deck. Six or seven months must elapse, therefore, before she is fully ready to take her place in the Navy.

The Fiji Shimpō says that out of the 25 torpedo-destroyers to be added to the Navy this year, 9 have been constructed and 16 remain to be constructed.

Salvage operations are said to be vigorously progressing on the Mikasa. The authorities are determined to raise her with the least possible delay, and good progress is reported to have been made. The Chuo Shimbun indicates the end of November as the probable date of her resurrection, but the public, remembering that the end of October was spoken of originally, will probably be a little sceptical about this new forecast. It may be noted that the theory now entertained in naval circles as to the loss of the battle-ship is that decomposition had set in among the explosives in the magazine—that is to say among the cordite—and spontaneous combustion resulted. If that was the case, it will probably be very difficult to verify the fact.

The two gunboats recently floated at Port Arthur have been re-named, the Gaidamak becoming the Shikinami, and the Posadnik the Makiguno. According to the Fiji Shimpō the only vessels now remaining sunk in the harbour are:—

	Tons.
The Rasboinik	1,493
The Digil	1,334
The Zubiaka	1,235
The Bobre	950
The Amur	2,590

Japanese papers publish the following table showing the relative strength of the navies of the world, according to latest investigations, nothing smaller than a cruiser of 1,500 tons being included:—

	Ships.	Tonnage.	Average speed.
England	161	1,449,325	19.74 knots.
France	85	559,799	18.66 "
Germany	58	378,105	18.25 "
America	45	312,637	18.93 "
Japan	40	295,977	18.56 "
Italy	31	224,994	18.50 "
Russia	22	196,330	18.37 "

CAPTURED SHIPS.

The Official Gazette of the 1st instant contains an Imperial rescript ordering the release of all steamers with their cargoes captured by Japanese warships subsequently to September 5th, the day when the treaty of peace was signed. Six vessels fall under this category, namely:—

	Tons.
The Barracouta (American)	2,150
The Kowloon (German)	2,326
The Arnfrid (Norwegian)	?
The M. Struve (German)	1,518
The Hans Wagner (German)	1,596
The Centennial (American)	2,075

This measure of clemency will be highly appreciated. It is in compliance with the most enlightened rendering of international law, namely, the principal that an armistice may be regarded as commencing between two belligerents from the day when a treaty of peace is signed. Strictly speaking an armistice need not be counted to have come into operation until the commanders in the field have met and actually arranged all necessary preliminaries. But the Emperor of Japan takes the most liberal view of the matter, as His Majesty has done of all matters connected with the war. The advisers of the Throne during the past two years have shown much wisdom.

THE APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADORS.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun that the Government of the United States has approached Japan on the subject of raising the Legation in Tokyo to an Embassy. Thus England and America take the lead in giving practical recognition to Japan's new status as a great Power. The Nichi Nichi is frankly pleased by the change. It justly observes that the duties devolving upon the Ambassadors will not differ from those hitherto devolving on the Ministers, but there will be all the difference in the world in the matter of rank. Our contemporary expects that the example of London and Washington will be followed by Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg.

In the Fiji we read that Mr. Takahira is likely to be appointed Ambassador in Washington.

It would certainly be an act alike of justice and of grace that the diplomatists who have been largely instrumental in bringing about the Anglo-Japanese Alliance should be the first to receive the step of rank which this change of title implies. Sir Claude MacDonald in Tokyo and Viscount Hayashi in London had much to do with both the original Alliance and the new one, and their respective Governments would show only proper appreciation of their services by nominating them to preside over the first embassies. This is quite apart from the fact that it would be scarcely possible to find men better suited for the posts.

An extra of the Official Gazette published last evening announced that Marquis Ito was summoned on Friday to the Palace and received the Emperor's command to proceed to Korea as a special envoy bearing a Message to the Korean Court.

THE OGASAWARA "SHOGI."

Apparently there was truth in the statement made by some Japanese journals that Mr. W. J. Bryan had asked for and obtained the war-stool upon which Admiral Togo sat when performing the Shinto rite in Ueno Park on the 24th instant. To explain our own note on the subject we may say that although some papers published the shogi story, others alleged that the incident had nothing to do with the war-stool and that a common chair, usually standing in the salon of the Seiyō-ken restaurant, was the corpus vile. The former version appeared to us altogether incredible and being further assured that the latter was correct, we were glad to be able to adopt it. But the Fiji Shimpō now affirms confidently that the war-stool—an heirloom of the Ogasawara family dating from the year 1607—was actually handed over to Mr. Bryan at his earnest request, and that, learning subsequently what a special character it bore, he sent it back to the Mayor of Tokyo, with a letter explaining that he had not entertained the smallest idea of the stool's exceptional value to the Ogasawara family, and that under the circumstances he could not think of retaining possession of it. Thus the whole incident resolves itself into an affair of faulty interpretation. Had Mr. Bryan been informed of the facts in the first instance, he would surely have done what he did in the end, namely, abandon all idea of obtaining the stool. But in his eyes the shogi seemed a simple article of furniture without any associations other than those it had acquired as Admiral Togo's seat.

KOREA.

It is now stated that the reports as to gradual restoration of public peace and good order in the turbulent districts of Korea were purposely circulated to deceive the Japanese. We do not say "to deceive the Korean Authorities," for the suggestion is that these were privy to the commotion and were deliberately utilizing it. Mr. Hagiwara is said to have addressed a very strong remonstrance to the Seoul Government. He pointed out that more than 50 days had elapsed since the first outbreak of rioting, and that, so far from being quelled, the disturbance had now extended to three provinces—Kwangwon-do, Chhang-chong-do and Kyongsong-do. Assassinations, destruction of instruments of communication as well as of other property, and various outrages were rife. Yet the Korean Government, while professing ability to deal with the insurgents, had not taken any efficient step whatever, and the Japanese Authorities, finding the situation intolerable, were compelled to take the law into their own hands, in accordance with the rights conferred on them by convention. The sequel of this communication was that a party of Japanese troops set out from Seoul for the disaffected districts on the 25th inst.

The Japanese authorities have apprehended Mr. Li Kwi-won at Chemulpho, while en route for England, and have conveyed him to Seoul under escort.

Telegrams from Seoul suggest that things are quieting down in the peninsular empire. The people are said to be tired of intrigues and disturbances and to have recognised that the Peace Treaty and the Anglo-Japanese Alliances are not intended to injure the Korean nation but will rather tend to bring the blessing of security of life and property. Accompanying this information comes news that one of the Palace soothsayers has been arrested, and possibly the event may lead to the removal of these mischievous folk from the Emperor's entourage. It is almost impossible to detect the true facts as to Korea's conditions so deeply are they overlaid by conflicting rumours. At one moment the information is that things are at the worst; a few hours later the situation has undergone a metamorphosis. One can not credit these Protean changes where a nation is in question, and the inevitable conclusion is that the intelligence sent across the wires has highly subjective colouring. We are absolutely convinced, and we fail to see how any careful observer of events during the past 25 years can avoid the conviction, that the Korean problem can be solved in only one way, namely, by Japan taking firm hold, and abandoning the impossible task of seeking to direct without controlling. She has to control her own people as well as the Koreans, and so long as she abstains from taking effective measures to accomplish either end, she exposes herself to criticism often justly deserved and aggravates the difficulties of the situation. Her position with regard to Korea plainly dictates the course to be taken.

Mr. Hayashi left Tokyo for Seoul on the 30th instant. We may be permitted to express the hope that he carries in his pocket some instrument which will crown the very able diplomacy he has displayed during a long term of office in the Korean capital.

A telegram from Seoul dated the 30th October says that on that day the United States Minister and his staff withdrew from Seoul.

On the 29th of October, Mr. McLeavy Brown and Mr. Megata had audience of the Emperor. Mr. Brown reported that he had fully handed over the Customs to Mr. Megata, and the latter reported that he had taken charge. The Emperor thanked the retiring commissioner for his excellent services.

On the 30th the United States Legation guard of 30 men withdrew from Seoul. The city thus ceased to have any Western troops within its precincts.

It is stated that Mr. Hagiwara has presented applications for gold-mining and copper-mining concessions, the former on behalf of Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Asano; the latter on behalf of the Mitsui and Mr. Kobayashi. The concession for working the Suan gold-mine is said to have fallen to a British subject. There had been talk of a joint application by American, British and Japanese projectors.

The Korean Government has agreed to follow Japan's advice that trial cotton plantations and agricultural experimental stations should be established in various parts of the empire. Mr. Akakabe, an agricultural expert, has been appointed to choose the sites.

Telegrams from Korea confirm the statement that Mr. McLeavy Brown has been received in farewell audience by the Emperor and that he has finally resigned the post filled by him for so many years with such conspicuous ability. It is doubtless in the inevitable order of events that the Korean Customs should cease to be administered independently of the general scheme of State finance, the unification of which is one of the necessary reforms of the time. Mr. Brown seems to have recognised that necessity in a most loyal and disinterested manner, and it is agreeable to learn that his action is appreciated.

It is stated that the Koreans were altogether unable to perform their usual duties of husbandry in the regions occupied by the Russians during the war; that is to say, in the districts south of the Tumen and extending as far as Sonchin at least. This region is now threatened with famine. Officials have been sent to conduct investigations, and it is stated that on receipt of their report measures of relief will be concerted. At present the inhabitants are eking out a bare existence by the aid of provisions left with them by the returning Japanese troops as a matter of charity.

This line was opened to traffic as far as Pyongyang on the 1st instant, the fare for a third-class passenger being 4.90 yen. The only obstacle to opening the remainder of the road to Wiju is said to be that certain bridges are not fully constructed. Thereafter the question will arise of extending the road so as to connect with the Manchurian system.

In consequence of the representations made by Mr. Hagiwara to the Emperor of Korea, as to the advisability of developing the agricultural resources of the empire, a conference has taken place and it has been decided to organize what are called Menka Saibai Kyokai (cotton-planting associations), composed of Koreans and Japanese. This appears to be a very earnest effort, and as was recently pointed out in these columns, it has very vital importance for Japan. The subject was ventilated a few days ago at a meeting of projectors held in the Atago Hotel (Tokyo) in the presence of a number of journalists. We learn that trial growings of cotton have already been made. An improved kind of American seed was employed, and most excellent results were obtained, in spite of distinctly unfavourable climatic conditions. It has thus been definitely ascertained—so, at all events, the promoters of the movement state—that Korean soil is fully adapted to cotton-growing. The vital feature of the matter is that Japan now imports great quantities of raw cotton for her spinning industry, and that there is a corresponding outflow of gold. Thus in 1904 the import of this staple stood at 71,466,843 yen, and during the first 9 months of the present year it reached 95,125,393 yen. On the other hand Japan's principal staple of export—raw silk—brought to her coffers only 88,740,000 yen in 1904, so that she may be said to barely pay for her purchases of raw cotton by means of her sales of raw silk. If Korea, a silver-using country where Japanese notes are freely current, could be made to supply any considerable quantity of this raw cotton, the economical advantage would be very great. Korea has an area of 48 million acres, out of which the area actually under cultivation is only 4½ million acres—we quote figures submitted at the meeting in the Atago Hotel,—but it is very difficult to believe that not even one-tenth of Korea's superficies is under cultivation. Upland fields cover an area of 2¼ million acres, and if two-thirds of this space could be successfully applied to growing cotton, the produce would be 264 million catties having a value of 74 million yen. The prospect is therefore very tempting, though we can not doubt that it has been painted in rosy colours.

POLITICAL PARTIES AND THE GOVERNMENT.

A deputation from the two great political parties, the Seiyun-kai and the Progressists, visited the Premier on the 26th instant and sought information on three points.

The first related to an extraordinary session of the Diet. Baron Komura, the delegates said, had now returned. The Treaty had been ratified and promulgated. Yet no step had been taken to convene the promised special session. Count Katsura's reply was that the Treaty had indeed been ratified, but China's consent to certain of its provisions remained to be obtained, and pending that step, which would probably take about a month, the Government was not in a position to submit the Treaty to the Diet.

The second question related to the continued enforcement of the law of siege in Tokyo. It was contended by the delegates that persistence in the unpopular measure tended only to estrange and offend the people. Count Katsura answered that the Eiju Sotoku (General Sakuma) did not think that the enforcement of the law could yet be safely abandoned, and was not prepared to assume responsibility for any consequences that might ensue from its abandonment. The delegates insisted, however, that if popular discontent assumed a really dangerous form, it could not be controlled by martial law, and that the wisest course was to trust to the people's sense of order. The Premier promised to consider the matter.

The third subject of representation was that all possible expedition should be observed in dealing with the Manchurian and Korean problems. Count Katsura assured his visitors that the Government was fully alive to this necessity.

According to the latest calculations, the relative strength of the political parties in the Lower House is said to be :—

Seiyu-kai	141
Progressists	96
Imperialists	18
Koshin Club (seceders from the Seiyu-kai) ..	26
Yushu-kai	16
Unaffiliated	82

No forecast is yet made as to the attitude these parties will assume in the House. There is an idea in some quarters that the Seiyu-kai, obeying Marquis Saionji's instructions, will refrain from vehement opposition, and should that expectation prove correct, they will certainly be joined by the Imperialists and by a large section of the unaffiliated, thus bringing up the number of the Cabinet's supporters—perhaps "tolerators"—would be a juster term—to over 200. But experience has shown how futile are all estimates as to party politics in Japan.

THE JAPANESE IN HAWAII.

Mr. A. L. C. Atkinson, Secretary of the Hawaii Territory, does not believe that the islands are destined to be "Japonized." He admits that the Japanese population outnumbered the Caucasian in the ratio of two to one, and that these Japanese though they originally came as simple labourers, have made many advances in skill and have driven many American experts from the field. He also admits that there are growing up all over the islands thousands of young Japanese who, being American born, will have the right to demand American citizenship and to vote at elections. But he claims that the Japanese do not become expatriated, and have no desire for American citizenship. In the latter respect they differ from the Chinese who desire to become citizens because they can thereby elude the provisions of the Exclusion Act, and may travel to and from all parts of American territory. The Japanese on the contrary, "want our education, our business and mechanical knowledge and our money, but they want to keep their own nationality." Besides vigorous steps are at length being taken to secure a supply of American immigrants, and Mr. Atkinson has faith in the success of this movement. Incidentally he gives the following attractive account of Hawaii's prospects and capacities :—

Hawaii boasts of an incomparable climate, soil of unexcelled fertility and scenery so charming that no visitor ever fails to say its impression will linger in his memory till death. She has thousands of acres of splendid Government land lying idle. She has the finest and largest sugar mills in the world and vast cane fields watered by some of the largest pumps ever installed by man. On the single island of Oahu there is pumped from the soil by this vast machinery the incredible total of 350,000,000 gallons every twenty-four hours. In these great mills and pumping plants there is employment for a small army of skilled engineers and machinists. Hawaii's uncultivated acres can produce tons upon tons of valuable tropical staples for which the United States every year pays millions of dollars more than she need pay if Hawaii were her tropical garden. Yet the past two years have seen the American, in fact all the white, population actually decrease. The Japanese or else the Chinese have taken the skilled laborer's places and little has been done to encourage the American home-seeker, but a start has been made.

SAGHALIEN.

On the 21st October the handing over of Northern Saghalien by the Japanese to the Russians was to have been effected, but on that morning a fire broke out in the police station at Alexandrovsk and although the Russians landed and joined the Japanese in attempting to extinguish it, want of water and a high wind frustrated their endeavours and 30 buildings were destroyed. Thus the business of the transfer had to be postponed until the 22nd. The Russians agreed readily to all the conditions proposed by the Japanese, as might have been expected, for the protocol contained chiefly acknowledgements that all the steps hitherto taken by the Japanese had been proper and humane. It was provided that the Russians should charge themselves with the duty of tending the graves of Japanese soldiers who had lost their lives in the expedition.

The tenders for fishing privileges on the coasts of Japanese Saghalien were opened between the 18th and the 24th of October. The results showed that the fisheries are valued at a much higher figure than the authorities anticipated. Permits which were expected to fetch not more than 3,000 yen produced bids of twenty thousand, and whereas the anticipated total was only twenty thousand it reached 52,000 yen. The proceeds of the sale of permits are to be devoted to public works in the southern part of the island, which, under Japanese control, is likely to make rapid progress.

Next spring is now spoken of as the probable time of floating the Novik. Great progress was made with the work at first, and it seemed probable that the cruiser might be once more afloat by the end of September or the beginning of October, but a sudden change of weather delayed operations, and before they could be vigorously renewed the cold weather set in. Thus the celebrated cruiser must lie under water until probably next May or June. She went down in August of 1904 so that, if she be raised in May, she will have been 21 months on the bottom.

Allusion has been already made to the tenders for the Saghalien fisheries. The exact figures are thus given by the Kokumin Shimbun :—

	Yen.
East Coast, 36 places	49,983
Aniwa Bay, 29 "	48,861
West Coast, 49 "	424,790

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

It is in contemplation to appoint a committee expressly for the purpose of dealing with spoils taken from Russia on the field, and the present intention, it is said, is to collect these spoils temporarily in the buildings hitherto used for the accommodation of the Russian prisoners at Fukuoka. There are some 700 pieces of artillery, 130,000 stand of small arms, and fifty million rounds of ammunition. The 3-inch quick-firers, of which a number are included, are said to be the most valuable and serviceable among the guns. We suggest that the old Roman form of procession might be adopted in the case of some of these spoils: they might be carried in procession by the troops that won them. Japan has a great asset in the spirit of her people, and she should spare no means to foster it.

We learn that Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, on leaving Yokohama, contributed 250 yen to the Gunjin Engokai and 250 yen to the Ladies Patriotic Society.

A telegram reports the loss of the steamship Riusai Maru at Moji on the 28th instant. She dragged her anchor owing to a heavy wind and strong rush of current, and fouled the wreck of the Kyoyo Maru, previously sunk in the same vicinity. The Riusai received such damage in the collision that she sunk in 15 minutes. She was a vessel of 1,230 tons, laden with salt, coal, coke and cement. No lives were lost.

The Official Gazette contains the following, as translated by the Japan Times :—

- 1.—Vladivostok is still a free port.
- 2.—The port is not under Martial Law, so that there is no special obstruction in connection with the entrance of a vessel or discharging of cargo.
- 3.—As no pilot ship is stationed outside the harbour, those who intend to dispatch vessels to Vladivostok are advised to notify beforehand the Harbour Master (who is a naval captain) of that port of the probable date of the arrival of their ships there and ask him for the dispatch of a pilot ship. This request can be most conveniently made through the French Consuls in Japan.
- 4.—The supply of cargo-men and lighters at Vladivostok is probably very limited. This inconvenience may be surmounted by shipowners appointing an agent in Vladivostok and instructing him to prepare the necessary cargo-men and boats for the arrival of their vessels. The goods belonging to the Russian Government, may however, be landed by requisitioning the service of Russian troops. A shipping agent of good standing is Vladivostok in Messrs. Bryner, Kousnetzoff and Co.

Under its able President, Mr. Soyeda, the Industrial Bank has made a new departure. Employing the intervention of Mr. Takahashi, of the Bank of Japan, who is now in London, the Bank has interested English capitalists to the extent of 7½ million yen, and is thus enabled, not only to increase its own capital to 27½ millions, but also to offer itself as intermediary for the introduction of English money into Japan. We understand that the 7½ millions here spoken of represents money actually subscribed for shares in the Industrial Bank, which thus becomes an international institution. Mr. Soyeda is to be congratulated on this arrangement.

A cablegram received in Yokohama on October 28th announces that Mr. Harriman, who left here on October 13th at 3.30 p.m. by the Pacific Mail steamer Siberia, arrived in New York on the 26th instant at 7.30 p.m., the time being 13 days and 4 hours from the time of departure to arrival in New York City. Such a speedy trip will be recognised as undoubtedly unprecedented in the history of the world.

We observe with pleasure which will be shared by the numerous friends and admirers of Dr. D. C. Greene, that his son, Mr. Roger S. Greene, M.A. (Harvard), who for the past three years has served as United States Vice-Consul in Rio de Janeiro, Nagasaki and Kobe, has just been notified by cable of his appointment to be Commercial Agent of the United States at Vladivostok and has been directed to proceed at once to his new post.

The Bogatyr has at length put an end to all conjectures about her fate by turning up at Nagasaki. She received a very large share of public attention during the war though her exploits were limited to running on a rock at the entrance to Vladivostok. Thereafter rumour made periodical capital out of her. Now she was a hopeless wreck; anon she was completely restored to serviceability; by and bye she was undergoing repairs, and again she was lying in port barely kept afloat by pontoons. The fact is, according to the accounts of her own people, that she was not repaired so as to be ready for sea until the month of June last. She arrived at Nagasaki on the 29th, conveying the sailing vessel Yakudo (?), a ship of 800 tons which carried Surgeon Count Stanberg (?) and six other physicians, as well as a full cargo of medical necessities for the use of the sick and wounded among the Russian prisoners. Arrangements were made to pass in these stores free of customs dues. The Bogatyr carried Major-General Daniloff and his staff of 19 officers, who are charged with the arrangement and superintendence of all details connected with the prisoners. These officers were to proceed by train to Tokyo, starting from Nagasaki on the 30th, and the Bogatyr was to return at once to Vladivostok.

The Official Gazette of the 30th of September contains an announcement of the Communications Department that from November 1st private telegrams will be handled at the Korsakoff Communications Station but that they must be in the Japanese language. With the exception of messages directed to be kept till called for at Korsakoff, all will be distributed as ordinary mail matter. Mistakes, delays and non-deliveries will be at the risk of the sender.

We are asked to publish the following:—

Admiral Sir Gerard Noel regrets that owing to the letters and cards of welcome he has received at Yokohama from Japanese correspondents being so numerous and in many cases without the address of the sender, it has been found impossible to reply separately to all of them. Hundreds of letters and cards have been received.

The Admiral therefore hopes that those correspondents who have not received individual replies will accept this expression of his deep gratitude for their kind messages.

Diadem, at Yokohama, 24th October, 1905.

We read in the Shogyo Shimpō that the Silk Association of America having addressed itself to the Japanese Department of Agriculture and Commerce making certain proposals with reference to the conditioning of silk, the Department introduced the subject to the Dai-Nippon Sanshi-kai (the Sericultural Company), and the latter, deeming the question highly important, held a meeting of its council and appointed a special committee by which certain recommendations have been made. The view taken by the Company is that America being Japan's great customer for silk every effort should be made to meet American wishes. The conditions of silk manufacture in Japan and the customs of the trade render it impossible to comply with all the suggestions of the Association, but they will be communicated to the sericulturists who will be asked to gradually effect whatever changes may be necessary so as to meet American views. An answer in this sense has been made to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, and in transmitting it to America the Department has asked that as American method of six-monthly settlements causes much inconvenience in Japan, it should be altered on the lines followed in European markets. We need not state in details the points raised by the American Association, as we reproduced the letter in full at the time of its arrival in Japan.

An article in Harper's Weekly discusses the prospects of Christianity in Japan. From it we take the following:—

"Of course, Japan, if she accepts Christianity at all on any considerable scale, will make her own interpretation and adaptation of it. The religious practice that results will be Christian, but it will also be Japanese. . . . Presumably there will be minor sects wherever there is Christianity, but Japan, if she has them, will be likely to develop her own. Christianity has adjusted itself more or less to the character, history, and primitive institutions of all the Western peoples who have accepted it. It is conceivable that its adjustment to the Japanese would be easy and perfect beyond any precedent. It is an Asiatic religion offered to an Asiatic people, for the Japanese are still Asiatics, though unlike all the rest. Self-abnegation, idealism, the sacrifice of the present to the future—of ease, and even life, to duty—seem to come more natural to the Asiatic mind than to the Western mind. Moreover, the religions of Confucius and of Buddha, which have helped to civilize Japan, are great religions, holding many truths of philosophy and ethics in common with the religion of Christ. No nation seems ever to have been so favourably situated to consider and compare the great religions of the world, and choose the best, as is Japan to-day. . . . Nothing can be forced upon her. She knows the defects of her own religious system; she can look abroad and study the fruits of every other system, and if she finds a better one can take so much of it as she thinks is true."

We read in the Shogyo Shimpō that much attention is being directed to reimbursing the losses suffered by Japanese subjects who were obliged to abandon all their belongings and fly to Japan on the outbreak of war. No indemnity having been obtained by this country there is no fund for relieving these sufferers. On the other hand, to ignore their claims altogether would have a deterrent effect on over-sea enterprise which the Government is anxious to encourage. There are over 3,000 claimants, and something will probably be done for them.

On the 31st instant the Foreign Representatives repaired to the Palace and offered their congratulations on the restoration of peace. They do not appear to have entrusted the duty to the Doyen alone. He, indeed, spoke first, but each Minister seems to have subsequently spoken for himself, and the Emperor replied to each severally. It must have been a tedious kind of ceremony, particularly for the Emperor, who probably repeated the same formulae over and over again. Subsequently luncheon was served in the Chikusa salon.

It is expected that the proclamation convening the Diet will be issued on the 4th or the 5th instant, in which event the session would commence about the 20th of December. The mandate will precede the Emperor's journey to the Shrines of Ise, whither His Majesty proceeds in a few days to return thanks to Heaven for the Empire's victories.

The Official Gazette contains an announcement that hereafter all fees, fines, and certain monies in connexion with criminal and civil procedure may be paid in stamps instead of in cash as hitherto.

A brilliant banquet was given at the United States Legation on the 1st instant, the principal guests being Admiral Togo and his Admirals. These officers wore full-dress uniform for the first time during three years. After dinner a reception took place which was attended by many of the leading residents of Tokyo and Yokohama. Mr. Griscom asked the Admiral to write his name in a copy of Mr. Nitobe's "Bushido," since the Minister regarded the great commander as a personification of the creed set forth in the volume.

ORGAN RECITAL AT UNION CHURCH.

The first organ recital for the season in connection with Union Church, Yokohama, came off on Wednesday evening and attracted a large congregation. A. R. Gaul's sacred cantata "Ruth," was the principal feature on the programme and the solo work was distributed among Miss Mendelson (Ruth), Mrs. W. T. Payne (Naomi), Mrs. G. W. Brockhurst (Orpah) and Mr. S. H. Somerton (Boaz). The chorus was composed of the following. Soprano—Mrs. A. Bellamy Brown, Mrs. J. F. Drummond, Mrs. E. C. Irwine. Mrs. Kenderdine, Mrs. J. MacBeth, Mrs. L. Pollard, Mrs. C. Thwaites, Mrs. W. K. Tresize, Mrs. A. J. H. Windett, Miss Bagnall, Miss Bunting, Miss E. Bunting, Miss Cain, Miss Dunsan, Miss Kenderdine, Miss Loomis, and Miss Watt. Alt.—Mrs. A. L. Bagnall, Mrs. A. A. Bennett, Mrs. J. Neil, Mrs. Thom, Mrs. W. K. Wilson, Miss Clausen. Tenors—Mr. Ellis, Mr. Graham, Mr. Pollard, Mr. Quinton. Bass—Mr. Gibson, Mr. Kendall, Mr. O. Kendall, Mr. MacBeth, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. W. K. Wilson. Mrs. Payne was in excellent voice and sang her part very sympathetically, particularly in the trio "Farewell, the hour has come for parting." Miss Mendelson, though almost prostrated by a heavy cold, which necessitated her leaving out some of Ruth's solos, was heard to fine effect in the well-known and ever-welcome "Entreat me not to leave thee," and also in the dramatic scene with Naomi. To Mrs. Brockhurst fell the minor part of Orpah but she has never done better or more expressive work, being evidently in full sympathy with the words and with the music. Mr. S. H. Somerton, as Boaz, was heard to advantage, particularly in the last solo, "Glory be to Thee, O! God," which went capitally. The chorus was well in hand, showing plainly the conscientious training of the choir-master, Mr. Vincent; and in attack and balance they were admirable, though the tenors once or twice were inclined to hurry. The Wedding Chorus, perhaps, was the best of all the choral pieces, going with a splendid swing, after the preliminary hesitancy was mastered, which the rather incoherent and tricky finale, "Rejoice, rejoice, rejoice," certainly lacked. Taken on the whole the Cantata was well given and justified its selection in the winter's programme.

The second part opened with two pieces for the organ "Pensee" (Blumenthal) and "Chant d'un Ange" (Lorne) rendered in a masterly way by Mr. Vincent. Mrs. E. C. Irwine then sang most delightfully Gounod's "O, divine Redeemer," after which Mr. Vincent gave a truly magnificent performance of the overture to Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," bringing a very enjoyable recital to a close.

We gather that at the next recital in December Simper's "The Nativity of Christ" will be given.

ARREST OF A DANISH NOBLE.

Baron von Dittow, of Denmark, has been arrested by the Kaga-cho police, in Yokohama, and removed to the Yokohama District Court, the charge alleged against him being fraud. It appears, according to the police, that on Sept. 12th, he arrived at Yokohama from Shanghai and put up at the Grand Hotel. He stayed there till the 28th of the same month. During that time, he hired from Messrs Durand and Co. No. 83, and Messrs Durand, Cobb and Co. No. 37, carriages, each with two horses. In these carriages he visited several shops, etc., and bought various goods. Among others he obtained two cameras, valued at yen 150 at Kimbel's photographic studio, Honcho-dori; various fine art objects from Messrs Arthur and Bond, No. 38; clothes valued at yen 120 from A. H. Shing, a Chinese tailor, No. 16, and on Sept. 26th he succeeded in borrowing yen 520 from an American at No. 100 Bluff, on the understanding that he would pay back the amount on the following day on receipt of a remittance from Shanghai. Two days later, on Sept. 28th, he left the Grand Hotel saying that he had to pay a visit to Kobe on business. He did not pay for what he purchased or borrowed. Having some suspicion, the Kaga-cho police sent telegrams to Kobe, Osaka, and Kyoto to have him watched. The authorities found that the man was at the Fujiya Hotel, Miyanosita. He returned to Yokohama on October 25th and the police immediately arrested him. While he was being removed to the Criminal Court, he escaped from the detention ward and ran to the Nippon hatoba near the Court. Being pursued by the Court police, however, he jumped into the sea. He was re-captured. He is now undergoing preliminary examination at the Court.

THE RETURNING TROOPS.

WE observe with pleasure that, judging from the reception given to the first batch of returning troops at Ujima—the second reservists of the Tumen Army—there will be as much enthusiasm over the military triumphs as there has been over the naval. Some apprehension might justly have been entertained of discrimination in favour of the Navy, for it is obviously impossible to organize on behalf of the Army any collective demonstration such as has been made on account of the Navy. The latter can be assembled in one place and its triumph can be celebrated in presence of the whole service, but the former has to return in sections to the various head-quarters, and though each Division may be enthusiastically welcomed by the locality to which it belongs, it is obviously impossible to have a general fête. There is all the more reason for an earnest effort on the part of the provinces. Nothing has been more admirable throughout the war than the whole-hearted co-operation of the two services. Admiral Togo's last report to the EMPEROR is a model in this respect, for he unequivocally attributes the final success at sea to the thoroughness of the operations on shore. Nevertheless there is observable in some quarters a disposition to exalt the Navy's triumphs at the expense of the Army's. The Nippon, a journal usually edited with great ability, is the mouth-piece of these comparative thinkers. It expresses the view that whereas the Navy did its work completely, the Army fell short of entire achievement. Has the Nippon considered the relative nature of the tasks falling to the two services? Does it remember that whereas all the world bowed before the military might of Russia, none regarded her naval puissance as very formidable? Upon the Army devolved the task of entering the lists with the real giant, and although the Navy's achievements were magnificently thorough, splendid, indeed, beyond the most sanguine expectation, it was the Army that won the long series of grand victories beginning with the Yalu, ending with Mukden, and including Nanshan, Telisz, Liaoyang, the Shaho and Heikautai, to say nothing of minor but scarcely less desperate engagements. We say deliberately that when the history of the war comes to be impartially written the verdict will be that whereas the Japanese Navy showed a degree of competence which far exceeded any forecast, the Japanese Army fought one of the grandest fights in the annals of all nations, and should views such on those enunciated by the Nippon induce the nation to show any comparative coldness towards its returning soldiers, Japan will not deserve the honour she has won. Tokyo is particularly well situated for organizing a great welcome because it is the head-quarters of two Divisions, the Guards and the First Division, and though the exigencies of transport may necessitate the sectional return even of these, arrangements should be made for a special fête when all have returned. Japan can not show too much gratitude to her Army. Kobe also will have an excellent opportunity, for three Divisions, the 7th, the 8th and the 10th, are likely to land there en passant, and these brave fellows should receive an ovation such as will show their country's profound appreciation of their deeds.

HORSES.

IT is stated that as one result of the war the Military Authorities intend to establish a bureau called the Basui-Kyoku (horse control office), which will have for prime purpose improvement of the breed of Japanese horses. Experts will be selected from all departments of the Government, and a system will be mapped out with an operative period of 17 years. The total outlay is stated at 20 million yen, and according to the present programme sires from Austria and Hungary will be chiefly imported to cross with the native stock. It may not perhaps be generally known that this is a question which has already received keenest attention at the Government stud-farms (shuneryo) in Shimosa and elsewhere. There the problem of inter-breeding has been studied for years with excellent results, and nearly all the handsome animals used by staff-officers in the army are bred at these farms. Stock has been imported from all countries and thus, if the Army Department is now about to organize an extensive programme, as rumour alleges, there need be no groping in the dark, for all the necessary experience has been garnered. The nation has to thank the EMPEROR for liberal patronage in this matter. The Japanese cavalry in the war with Russia did not by any means justify the pessimistic estimates originally formed by foreign critics. It may be remembered that we always traversed those estimates and pointed out that in spite of the apparently inferior quality of their cattle, the Japanese troopers would be found efficient and useful, one reason being that cavalry has ceased to depend on rush and momentum, essential qualities in former times; another, that the little Japanese horse is exceptionally hardy and can live under circumstances where a European or American horse would starve. We observe, therefore, with much satisfaction that experience has borne out our views. The special correspondent of The Times, writing from General Nogi's head-quarters under date of June 20th, says:—"The truth is that the Japanese cavalry has proved itself extremely efficient and capable of doing work consistent with the highest traditions of the arm." Probably there never was a war where the supposed superiority of the cavalry force on one side was so marked as in this Manchurian combat. The Russians had an immense mounted force, traditionally of the very highest capacity, whereas the Japanese were abnormally short in this branch of the service, from an arithmetical point of view, and their troopers were mounted on cattle which scarcely appeared to deserve the name of horses. Yet in the result the Russian cavalry accomplished virtually nothing, whereas the Japanese made some of the finest reconnaissances and raids on record. There is not, therefore, so much fault to be found with the Japanese horse for cavalry purposes, though undoubtedly great improvements may be effected, and when we come to artillery there can be no question that a much heavier animal is needed. Their artillery, indeed, calls for urgent attention at the hands of the Japanese. The gunners left nothing to be desired in the war, but the guns and their teams were conspicuously below the Russian standard.

THE RUSSIAN PRISONERS AND THE JAPANESE.

IT is stated that the Russian prisoners will be embarked at three ports, Yokohama, Kobe and Nagasaki. The proportions will be: at Yokohama 18,177; at Kobe, 39,676, and at Nagasaki 14,233, making 72,086 in all. No statement is made as to the time of the removal, but presumably the utmost expedition will be observed. So far as can be judged at present, German steamers will be mainly employed for this purpose.

Further evidence is afforded of the extraordinary carelessness shown by the Russians in observing the convention with regard to information about prisoners. Up to the signing of the peace treaty Russian official information on this subject had shown only 46 Japanese officers and 921 men in detention. Independently, however,—that is to say, from the men themselves or from indirect sources—it had been learned that in addition to the above, 5 officers and 629 men were held, making a total of 1,601. After the conclusion of peace, the Russians were asked what Japanese prisoners they had in custody, and they answered, 90 officers and 1,670 rank and file, adding that they were not in a position to state the exact number confined in the army lines. Naturally the Japanese Authorities were much astonished by this confession of ignorance. They pressed for details, and were finally informed that 162 prisoners were at Harbin and 56 in the field hospital. Thus the total appears to be 1,978, instead of 1,601. It is impossible to reprobate this carelessness, or callousness, too severely. According to the usages of civilized warfare as sanctioned by the Hague Tribunal a belligerent is required to organize a prisoners' information bureau to the end that the utmost possible vigilance shall be exercised in collecting the names and condition of prisoners and transmitting the facts to the other side. This is in accordance with the plain dictates of humanity. War does not demand that women and children shall be condemned to shed needless tears. Not a moment should be lost in conveying information of the safety of any officer or soldier who may have been captured. Otherwise great and unnecessary grief is inflicted on families which are anxiously waiting for the return of fathers and sons from the field. Yet it now appears that whereas the Russians were actually holding 1,978 Japanese prisoners, they sent to Japan a list of only 967, and left the wives and children of soldiers in this country to discover as best they might whether any hope of the return of their loved ones might still be entertained. Had any perfunctoriness been shown by the Japanese in this matter the Russians might have found some excuse, though two wrongs do not make a right. But there had not been any perfunctoriness. Immediately on the outbreak of hostilities the Japanese organized the Furyo Joho-kyoku, by which the utmost care was taken to convey to Russia without a moment's needless delay detailed lists of prisoners and accurate information as to the name of each man and his condition. The Russians, however, though confronted with this excellent example and instructed by the laws of war, were not moved either by gratitude or by duty to a reciprocal exercise of charity. They left the matter mainly to chance, indifferent, it would seem, to the bitter grief their carelessness must inflict on parents, wives and children in Japan. There are in every community certain individuals whose elementary passions master them in times of crisis, and betray them into committing excesses which in their sober moments they would execrate. Hence it is that in the hour of combat or while its mad excitement still stirs the blood, shocking brutalities are perpetrated by soldiers. It would seem that such things are inevitable concomitants of warfare. But what excuse is to be found for the inhuman indifference to suffering that this callousness about prisoners displays? No excitement, no passion, can be pleaded in palliation. It is a matter of commanding officers' duty; a duty belonging to moments of calm reflection and to be discharged under absolutely unperturbing conditions. It really appears that the Russian record shows no darker spot than this story of inhuman carelessness in the matter of Japanese prisoners. Now that peace is restored and the time has come for making every effort to replace the two nations on a friendly footing, it is congenial work to notice these things, or to formulate the moral they obviously point, namely, that throughout the war the Russians declined to include the Japanese in the category of human beings. Yet there can be no doubt as to the necessity of publicly exposing such lapses from the code of civilization.

SUSPENSION OF THE "OSAKA ASAHI."

THE suspension of the Osaka Asahi for the third time has evoked comment both in Yokohama and Kobe, to say nothing of Tokyo, and a marked copy of the Japan Chronicle has reached us containing a long article on the subject. The Osaka Asahi is a very important journal, scarcely second to the Tokyo Asahi. Both papers are the property of the same persons and both are run on generally the same lines. A sentence of suspension in the case of such papers means a very heavy loss, and it is not surprising that there should be much sympathy. We are somewhat surprised, however, that doubts should exist as to the nature of the Osaka journal's offense. Our Kobe contemporary, for example, finds in the incriminated issue of the Osaka Asahi nothing worse than a paragraph inciting the people to send post-cards to Count KATSURA urging the Ministry's resignation, and considers that "only by a very great stretch of official imagination can this be described as 'an attempt to disorganise the administration of government' or such 'an incitement to disturbance and crime' as would justify suspension." As to that there are two points to be observed. The first, and by no means the less important, is that owing to the exigencies of the moment the operation of the ordinary press regulations is suspended and the Government is dealing with newspapers under an urgency ordinance. In other words, a special occasion exists, and therefore the measures adopted for dealing with it must not be judged by normal standards. The second point is that in preaching this method of procedure the Osaka Asahi constituted itself an instrument for inciting disturbance. Newspapers are not prevented from criticising the Ministry, or from urging its resignation. Articles in both senses are freely published at present by Tokyo journals and have been published ever since the conclusion of the peace treaty. The Jiji Shimpō, for example, occupied a large space of its editorial columns day after day with writings calling for the Cabinet's departure from office. We have never seen a subject so persistently ridden to death. Yet the Jiji and others writing similarly have remained unmolested. Such expressions of opinions are held to be within the legitimate province of journalism. It is otherwise when a newspaper ceases to be merely critical and explicitly prompts the adoption of an abnormal kind of agitation by the public at large. From that moment such a newspaper is unquestionably "inciting to disturbance." If unhappily such a law has to be enforced at all, it must be enforced without discrimination. We can not pretend to feel much sympathy with the press in this affair. It appears to us that the newspapers, as a whole, acted an intemperate and pernicious part, and were largely responsible for the rioting that ensued in Tokyo and elsewhere; rioting that did Japan very great injury.

There is another question calling for short comment. Article VIII. of the Constitution, under which the operation of the ordinary press regulations has been temporarily suspended in favour of a law entrusting very arbitrary powers to officialdom, says:—

"When there is an urgent necessity to secure public order or to avert public calamities, the Emperor issues, when the Imperial Diet is not sitting, Imperial Ordinances in the place of Law. Such Ordinances are to be laid before the Imperial Diet at its next Session, and when the Diet does not approve the said Ordinances, the Government shall declare them to be invalid for the future."

Commenting on the above our Kobe contemporary writes thus:—

The clear intention of the Article in the Constitution which we have quoted is that when the Government finds it necessary to issue an Ordinance in the case of some public danger, the Diet shall be called together with a view to ratify the action taken by the Government. If that be not the meaning then the whole Constitution is so much waste paper. All that is necessary would be for an unpopular Ministry to issue an Ordinance while the Diet was not sitting, cancel it when the Diet was summoned, and promulgate the Ordinance again as soon as the Diet was closed. By this means it would be possible for the Government to govern the country on exactly the same lines as before the Constitution was granted, and this cannot have been the intention of its framers. If the Ordinance is continued in operation, the Diet should be summoned to ratify it; if there is a disinclination to convoke the Diet, the Ordinance, in view of the absolutely quiescent state of the country, should be forthwith cancelled.

It is impossible to agree with this contention. On the contrary, it appears to us that the clear intention of the Constitution is not at all what our contemporary claims. The 8th Article of the Constitution is a provision intended to supply the legislative lacuna which would evidently exist if, in the interval between the Legislature's regular sessions—an interval of nine months in every year—no machinery were available for dealing with emergencies. The Emperor reserves to himself competence to deal with such emergencies, and it is precisely because of the existence of this prerogative that no necessity offers for convening the Houses in special session to sanction any exercise of it. There have been numerous instances of urgency legislation during the past fifteen years and there has not been one instance of a special session convened to sanction such legislation. As to the contention that unless a special session be summoned on each occasion of the issue of an urgency ordinance "the Constitution is so much waste paper" since the Government can legislate as it pleases while the Houses are prorogued and can on the eve of the ordinary session, rescind any urgency legislation unlikely to obtain their sanction, re-enacting it when they rise, we are inclined to doubt whether such an argument is seriously advanced. Certainly, the state of affairs pictured by our contemporary is not conceivable in Japan. Besides it is not possible. The Constitution does not permit the Ministry to manipulate its ordinances in that hole-and-corner fashion. Whether an urgency ordinance has been repealed or has not been repealed before the Diet meets, it has to be submitted to both Houses for post-facto approval.

MARQUIS ITO.

THE Japanese newspapers state that the EMPEROR has appointed Marquis Ito to proceed to Korea in the capacity of Ambassador, and that His Excellency will leave Tokyo on the 5th instant for Bakan, where he will embark in a war-ship. The principal members of his staff will be Mr. TSUZUKI

KEIROKU, Major-General MURATA, Rear-Admiral INOUE, Baron TAKASAKI and Mr. FURUYA. No comments are made on this measure, perhaps because the news reached the press at a late hour, but we shall of course hear much of it. Marquis Iro does not make such a journey or accept such a mission without some very definite and important purpose. It is to be sincerely hoped that his mission precludes the adoption of a much more unequivocal policy on Japan's part towards Korea. There has been for some time a feeling that such a departure was imminent, and since there can be no doubt of its necessity in the interests of the peace of the East, we may perhaps hope that it will now become an accomplished fact. Korea has been of late a veritable seed plot of rumours, many of them injurious to Japanese reputation. It would seem to be certain that the military have taken steps which, though not intended to constitute any serious menace to rights of private property, were construed in that light by the ignorant populace; it appears that the mischievous effect of these steps might have been obviated, or at any rate mitigated, had closer relations existed between the military and the civil administration, and it appears also that not a few outrages have been committed by Japanese subjects whom the Korean laws, operated by Koreans, are incompetent to control, whereas the Japanese themselves have hesitated to provide any effective machinery for preserving good order outside the districts conventionally falling under their directive authority. All these abuses have been keenly watched by foreign onlookers, who, whether they be sincere philanthropists or scheming news-mongers, have shown little disposition to appreciate Japan's difficulties and have further allowed themselves to be swayed by an emotional regard for Korean independence, a condition which the experience of twenty-five years has proved to be impossible of maintenance and incompatible with the preservation of peace. Sentimental solicitude for the thing called national liberty is very attractive and may always be successfully employed as a moral tocsin, but fine as the institution is for its own sake its preservation may sometimes prove far too costly, and where, on the one side, we have wars so terrible as those witnessed in 1894-5 and in 1904-5 and, on the other, the inviolability of an essentially unprogressive and degenerate nation's right to enjoy the licence of intrigue, corruption and stagnation, there really can not be much hesitation in choosing. Neither does any reasoning individual doubt that the more thoroughly Japanese sway is extended in Korea, the better will the Koreans themselves fare. With Japan's modern history before us and in full sight of Formosa's history during the past decade, this fact is axiomatic. When Japan first took hold in Formosa many foreign voices of condemnation and abuse were raised against her. It is certain that had she not grasped the nettle timidly in that case as she has hitherto refrained from doing in Korea, her reputation would have permanently suffered and she would now be confronted by a gigantic failure. She is there ~~fore~~ not without the teaching of practical experience, and since she is now sending her most renowned statesman, we confidently anticipate that she intends to succeed. Only one danger has to be avoided—half measures. She must take her courage in both hands and leave the irresponsible clamourers to cry in the wilderness.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"Masterpieces Selected from the Korin School."

THE publication of the series of beautiful volumes which have been issuing for some time from the press of the Shimbi Shoin, recently suffered an interruption owing to the absence abroad of Mr. S. Tajima, proprietor and director of the remarkably enterprising establishment the public has to thank for these valuable books. It appears that Mr. Tajima returned last March, and steps were immediately taken to obtain materials for continuing the publications. Since then we have seen the third volume of "Selections from the Southern School of Painting," and now we have to welcome Vol. IV of the Korin series. Vol. III. has not yet been issued owing to difficulties in collecting and arranging matter, but Mr. Tajima determined, wisely we think, that instead of delaying for the sake of a question of numerical sequence, it would please the public better to give them Vol. IV. at once, and to bring out Vol. III. subsequently. In the library the books can be arranged at will. This fourth volume contains, as before, "biographical sketches of the artists of the school and some critical descriptions." It opens with a life of the celebrated painter Hoitsu Sakai, concerning whom Mr. Tajima's appreciation is that "in delicacy of touch and in effective association of details he may be said to surpass even Korin; but in true artistic inspiration it may well be claimed that Korin was superior to Hoitsu." This appears to be a perfectly just verdict. To Hoitsu is due the renaissance of the Korin school and there can be no doubt that, admirable as were Korin's decorative and artistic abilities, they would never have won the high place they occupy in Japanese admiration had not the genius of Hoitsu and his profound reverence for his great predecessor's motives and methods re-directed public attention to the genius of Korin. Thirty very striking examples of the work of Hoitsu, many of them in colours, are reproduced in the volume. Many of the originals are in the collection of Baron Y. Iwasaki, and Mr. Kuyemon Ozawa's gallery furnishes several others. These are not the only two fortunate collectors whose treasures are placed under requisition but they are the principal. The universal judgment will be, we think, that among all the books hitherto published by the Shimbi Shoin, none can surpass this latest volume. The work of Hoitsu, as here exhibited, shows a combined delicacy and strength of line which seem to be almost beyond the range of human attainment. Perhaps these qualities are nowhere shown in greater perfection than in plates 109 and 110, reproductions of paintings in colours on a silver-paper ground, mounted as a pair of two-fold screens in the collection of Count Tokugawa. But every picture in the volume merits praise from these points of view. As to the typography, the paper, the binding and the general style of the book, they continue to be worthy of the contents of the admirable series. It may be mentioned in conclusion that only a thousand copies of the work are printed and each is numbered and signed. We therefore advise all those that rejoice in artistic instincts to lose no time in obtaining a possession so beautiful and so illuminating.

"How Civilization is Killing Art in Japan."

The title here set down is taken from the pages of The Literary Digest where it stands at the head of an article epitomizing Mr. Sydney Adamson's lament over the commercial spirit which he thinks, is creeping into every sphere of Japanese art, vulgarizing and vitiating it. "How civilization is killing art in Japan." What a title! What a monstrous heresy it embodies! Its concoctor evidently imagined that "civilization" came to Japan only when she learned to ride in railways, speak across wires and use breech-loaders. Apart from the title, however, the article has interest for the sake of the following extract from Mr. Adamson's essay:—

"Bad enough it was to turn out cheap imitations of Japanese paper and metal work in Birmingham and Paris; worse still when the 'enterprising' trader moved his workshops for the manufacture of this tawdry ware to Japan. But vilest of all is his latest insolence, exposed to me all unconsciously by a leading curio-dealer in Kobe, when he told me that he insisted on his artists following his designs, 'conforming to European taste, you know.'"

"I had wandered through his large rooms filled with the greatest conceivable crimes against art and nature, asking vainly if he had nothing really Japanese to show me. I told him frankly that his store was filled with abominable rubbish. He admitted it, though I believe to this day he does not know the difference. I wanted to buy some good Japanese prints. He called his manager, a Japanese, and to them both I explained minutely what kind of prints I meant—those cut on wood by the artist and printed in colours on paper. He appeared ignorant of the existence of such art, and appeared to consider me a mild lunatic. I then asked who were the leading artists in Japan; they did not know. In despair I asked if they had any Utamaros. They apparently had never heard of the greatest of Japanese masters. Once before, in Nagasaki; I tried the same experiment. There, after much explaining, a Japanese dealer in Satsumas and Ivory admitted that he had seen such prints, but had no idea where they were made or where one could buy them. Vaguely, he suggested perhaps in Yokohama."

Who was this Kobe curio-dealer? He is to us a wholly incredible person. A man who, though making his livelihood by the sale of Japanese works of art, does not know what a coloured print is, does not know who Utamaro was, and is ignorant of the names of any of the best living artists—such a man has hitherto had no existence outside the realm of romance.

Buddhō Saizen, by NANJO and MAEDA, Tokyo, Sansendo; Leather, yen 1.20, Cloth, yen 60.

IN a popular lecture a well-known Buddhist priest comparing Buddhism and Christianity considered it a point in favour of the former that it has a great number of sacred books—Nanjo mentions 1,662 books in his catalogue of the Tripitaka—while the latter has but one. Whatever advantage this may be from an academic point of view, it involves a great practical difficulty for one who wishes to examine the doctrine; and in Buddhist circles it has resulted in the growth of widely separated sects each one basing its doctrine and practice on certain sutras.

The book before us has an English title on the case of the beautiful copy that is bound in leather, stating that it is "A Compendium of the Holy Tripitaka." It contains a selection of extracts from various sutras explanatory of a systematic outline laid down in the following table of contents, which will give a good idea of the scope of the book. In translating such terms into

The book contains 494 pages, and in addition a life of Shaka with a sketch of the spread of Buddhism in India, China, and Japan. In form the book is strikingly like the New Testament, but it is better printed and gotten up. It is also noteworthy that since the first edition was published, at the end of June, two more editions have been published. What the size of an edition is, however, there is no means of knowing. The question suggests itself whether Christians may not learn from the Buddhists, as the Buddhists have learned from them, and put forth through the ordinary channels of the book trade a "Kirisutokyo Seiten," containing an outline of doctrine in the words of Scripture.

The writers say that they have chosen the simplest forms of translation of the sutras, and the style may perhaps serve as a model of dignity and simplicity. The book fitly begins with this passage breathing so much of the spirit of Buddhism:—"Doing no form of evil; doing all forms of virtue; Cleave thyself, thy own heart,—this is the teaching of all the Buddhas." (1)

Together with much that is abstruse we come across such simple illustrations of the heart of faith as the following:—"As a man with a hand can enter a mountain of treasures and take them out at will, so can one with the hand of faith enter the Law of Buddha and take out at will unfailing treasures." (2)

Another sutra gives the opposite side as follows: "If a man has no hand though he goes to a mountain of treasures there is after all no gain; so one without the hand of faith though he merits with the "Three Treasures" gains nothing." (3)

It is remarkable that to the "Three Treasures" a fourth seems to be added in Dendo, the Transmission of the Way, concerning which we read:—

"O all disciples! Ever practise the ten virtues with joy; in all living beings ever arouse the heart of sorrow and take away its pain, ever arouse the heart of kindness and give its joy." (4)

These extracts will give some idea of a book that should be useful to the student of Buddhism; but more especially to the student of the forms and language used to express religious thought.

Short Stories for Composition and Conversation, with Notes and Appendix by W. A. DE HAVILLAND, M.A., Tokyo, Sansendo.

TEACHERS of English composition and conversation will welcome the appearance of Mr. De Havilland's little book, for there is hardly anything which troubles a teacher, especially one who is new to the work in Japan, than the furnishing of material sufficient to fill up the whole hour every day for a year. Experientia docet might be easily changed into experientia magistrum docet, for the writer remembers how he had to struggle years ago in his work, and how he seldom succeeded in finding the kind of subject just suitable for his class. How often, too, was the question in his mind, "Whatever shall I teach them to-morrow?" It requires a great deal of experience in order to know what to teach, as well as how to teach it. Mr. De Havilland has published a little book of short stories, with short notes on difficult points occurring in each. They are short enough to be, in many cases, written in the class-room. An outline of each story is also furnished, and this may be written on the board to help the students to remember the trend of the tale. There is so much quoted conversation in these stories that it would not be a bad plan to use them also as reading lessons. Many of the books used as readers are not of much benefit, for they contain the English of years ago, without any quotations, so that a student has only to go on reading in a sing-song way, and has no chance of studying what is most important, the natural inflexions of the voice as used in speaking—in commands, entreaties, questions, threats, doubt, etc. After the stories, of which there are fifty-seven, come a few exercises in conversation and an appendix of common errors to be avoided, but often found, in composition. Last of all there are a few pages of spelling, words, which are almost invariably misspelt by students, should be written; the words appear to be taken from the stories. Their pronunciation is indicated by a key at the end of the book, which is so arranged that it will open like a folded map, and it can be seen side by side with any page in the book. It is to be hoped that this little volume will have the sale it deserves.

China Coast Tales, by LISE BOEHM; Shanghai, Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Ltd.

THE slim paper-covered volumes which bear the title quoted above have reached their fifth series, and the ninth of the stories is called "The Acting Third Assistant." The scene is laid in Tientsin in the year which saw the terrible massacre of the French Sisters, the murder of the French Consul and the destruction of the Roman Catholic Cathedral. The incidents are therefore rather remote as time is reckoned among foreign residents in the Far East, but nevertheless the practised pen of Lise Boehm helps us to visualize the period and to realise the characters who played their little part in the grim tragedy in their habits as they lived. It is in character drawing, perhaps more than in narrative, that Lise Boehm excels, and in Andrew Scott, the Acting Third Assistant, she has drawn a portrait that easily takes rank as among the best in her extremely diversified gallery. The Frenchwoman, Eugénie de Lisle, is also drawn so vividly and truthfully that she falls naturally into the scenes amid which her delineator places her. For the rest, the story is told in excellent English, the elemental and the more sordid passions, which Lise Boehm delights in portraying, are not so predominant in the present tale as in some of its predecessors, while two at least of the minor characters are very human and therefore most loveable, in their very blamelessness. This is a new trait on the part of the writer. Per-

Japanese Types, sketched with Brush and Pen by MINNIE A. SCHWABE and Mrs. EMILY S. PATTON: Yokohama, Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Price yen 3.

WE must own to a feeling of disappointment in taking up this book. Miss Minnie Schwabe's dainty sketches have won a deservedly high place in local esteem, but those which appear in this collection do not do her justice. In the process of reproduction they have suffered "a sea-change"; all their dainty, elusive charm has flown: it is as if a rough rude hand had rubbed away the gossamer from a butterfly's wing. The printer, too, has made a most unfortunate selection of type for the letterpress,—especially with regard to the title-page,—creating a very painful effect owing to the uneven distribution of the ink, which all the charm of Mrs. Patton's apt description cannot dispel. Altogether the result is a good idea spoiled for lack of a little foresight and tasteful discrimination. The book nevertheless, and with all its limitations of craftsmanship, will make a pleasant souvenir for home-friends, for the pictures are very typical and the descriptive notes by Mrs. Patton are in the happiest vein.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE LITERATURE.

A large number of books containing collections and explanations of Japanese verses are to be found on the bookstalls, but we doubt whether any of them are worthy of comparison with Mr. Ōwada Tateki's Uta Manabi, which has now reached its third edition. Mr. Ōwada has devoted the whole of his life to the study of Japanese literature. On the Yamato-kotoba his dictionary is one of the best in existence. We ourselves have had it in constant use for many years. To any foreigner wishing to make a study of Japanese poetry the Uta Manabi may be safely recommended, as the author has made a special point of clearness of arrangement and explanation. By his manner of treatment Mr. Ōwada turns the study of poetry into the study of the Japanese language used in the days when what may be regarded as the standard verses were penned. He puts before us in a clear and concise manner the various developments which the language underwent in order to serve as a suitable medium for expressing poetic thought. There are not a few foreign students of Japanese who have reached the conclusion that the study of Japanese poetry for the sake of the ideas expressed in ancient verses is bound to end in disappointment. Compared to Shakespeare, Goethe, Byron and Milton the Japanese poet is nowhere. In this country the imagination took no lofty flights, and as to the serious, earnest curiosity that led our great poet to attempt the exploration of the hidden truths of the universe, in this country it did not exist. There is no great depth in Japanese poetry. Nippon's verse-writers were intense admirers of nature's many beauties. This reveals itself in the headings under which Mr. Ōwada arranges his poems; "New Year Verses, Spring, Summers Autumn, Winter." Then among the miscellaneous subjects there are, "Heaven, Earth, Wind, Rain, the Stars, the Sun, the Moon, the Sea, An Old Bridge, One's Native Village, Friends, Dress," etc., etc. Of what we may call strictly abstract subjects there are next to none. It is perhaps true to say that a certain pensiveness of tone, in some cases amounting to pessimism, pervades all Japanese poetry. In this respect Western poetry taken as a whole differs little from Eastern. Mr. Ōwada tells us in his introduction that he has purposely omitted from his collection verses on whose interpretation there has been much controversy. These, he thinks, if reproduced in this book would have bewildered readers. He has also omitted modern verses, with two or three exceptions. Mr. Ōwada discusses a number of interesting topics, beginning with an explanation of the connection of poetry with singing, and arguing that its existence is owing to the unsuitability of ordinary prose language for the expression of certain fancies to which the mind would feign give vent. Mr. Ōwada is of opinion that which is known as gagen (classical language) received its highest development prior to the Kamakura era. And most of the gagen are to be found in the verses that have come down to us. But certain gagen were seldom used except in prose writing. Mr. Ōwada gives a list of these words. Among them are tsuratsuki, tsurawae, tsumajayiki, osaosa, ideide, and mutoku. Some words that are found in the titles of poems are never used in the poems themselves. Such are Tenshō (meteorological phenomenon), Gyofu (a fisherman), Yukyo (lonely living), Sankyō (山居) and some 20 or 30 others. Among words for congratulation, there are many that have two distinct forms, one for poetry and one for prose. Thus taoru changes into oru, to bend, tamazusa into fumi, a letter, oguruma into kuruma, and sakurabana into sakura no hana, and so on. In the very ancient verses the word endings were quite different to those adopted in later ages. The ancient nu become no, yoshinu changing into yoshino (吉野), tanushi into tanoshi, delightful, and hikaku into kiku, to hear. Of these and many other strange freaks of ancient and medieval literature Mr. Ōwada gives a minute account. On those affiliated words known as jukugo as used in verse-making Mr. Ōwada's remarks are very interesting. With the Chinese jukugo one soon gets familiar. The rules governing the use of the poetic jukugo are quite as strict as those which are followed by all accurate prose writers. Thus we have haru . . . kaze, haru . . . kasumi, and haru . . . same; natsu . . . yama, natsu . . . goromo, and natsu . . . no (a plain); fu . . . sora, tsuki . . . kage and so on. Mr. Ōwada points out that the term sokugo was originally applied to all language not used in poetry. It now usually bears the meaning of colloquial as distinguished from written Japanese. To the very low class colloquial found in certain verses that have come down to us Mr. Ōwada applies the term higo (卑語). Mr. Ōwada rightly points out that much of the charm of Japanese verses depends on the impression they make on the ear when recited as well as on the skilful selection of words. We may say that there is little connected with Japanese verse-making that is not fully treated in Mr. Ōwada's volume, which covers over 1,000 pages. The price of the book is 1 yen 50 sen.

Dr. H. Nakamura contributes to the Gwankei Jihō a learned article on "The Effects of Treaties on Third Powers." At the beginning of the article he quotes a number of cases in which the third Power was a state concerning which two other countries made treaties and he points out that the wishes of these third Powers were not taken into consideration at all by the contracting Powers. The first instance given is the Treaty of Tientsin in 1885, when Japan and China agreed that in case of a disturbance in Korea each of them should send troops to suppress it. Then came the Treaty made by Japan and Russia relating to Korea in 1896. This concerned the control of communications in Korea. On neither of these occasions was Korea's consent received or sought. At the famous Berlin Conference in 1878 seven Powers drew up a series of articles relating to Bulgaria, Roumania and Servia without making these states parties to the treaty in any way. The same was the case with the Congo Treaty of 1885. After quoting many learned authorities on the subject of the rights and obligations of third Powers, Dr. Nakamura sums up the discussion under four headings as follows:—(1) If a Treaty does not affect in any way a third Power, that Power is bound to recognize the Treaty. (2) Though there may be things determined by treaty that are against the interests of a third Power, that Power must recognize that treaty. If such a Power opposes the drawing up of the treaty, it must be done on the ground of the facts on which the treaty is based not being correct. No other right of interference exists. (3) If there be it pulsations in a treaty which infringe on the rights or injure the interests of a third Power, that Power has the right to object to be made to suffer from the treaty. But this objection does not invalidate the treaty itself. According to International Law a treaty is not necessarily rendered invalid because it infringes on the rights of a third Power. (Kokka ga takoku no kenri wo gaisuru koto wa kanarazu shimo tsune ni kokusaiho ihan ni arazu.) It may be provided in a treaty that the territory of a third Power shall be divided up and distributed among other Powers, that places shall be occupied by troops, and harbours shall be temporarily used. No protests from a third Power can invalidate the treaty made, however much it may infringe on the ordinary rights of that Power. (Dai-San koku no kenri uo gai suru no jōyaku to iyedomo, jōyaku sono mono wa tōzen mukō naru mono ni arazu.) There are circumstances which make it necessary for allied Powers to ignore the rights of third Powers. This is the case where disturbances have to be put down by force. In all ordinary circumstances the right of protest against objectionable effects of treaties is recognized by International Law, but such protests do not render a treaty null and void. (4) Treaties that are contrary to International Law are ipso facto invalid. No treaty, for instance, could give certain Powers the right of exclusive appropriation of the high seas. The whole question of the rights of third Powers according to International Law is full of interest and has not been by any means thoroughly discussed, says Dr. Nakamura.

Among the many interesting Character Sketches appearing in Mr. Toyabe Shuntai's charming little volume called Jidai Jimbutsu Gettan, already reviewed at some length in these columns, "The Life of Dr. Kato Hiroyuki" is particularly well written and appears to us on the whole to be thoroughly impartial. We should like to reproduce it as it stands, but this being impossible on account of its length we select some of the most important parts of the critique, for critique it is.

Among the veteran educationists of the Meiji era Dr. Katō, who is now nearly 70 years of age, will be long remembered as a man of character, purpose and learning. The number of veteran educationists now living is not large. The list includes the names of Messrs. Tsuji, Izawa, Kubota, Hamano, Kikuchi and Yamakawa. Dr. Katō is in many respects a greater man than any of these. At least so thinks the Japanese public. In 1877 he became President of the Tōkyō Kaisei Gakkō, which he developed into a university, its name being changed to the Tokyo Daigaku and he himself acting as President. In 1886 the leading educational institution of the country underwent further development and in accordance with Japanese custom had a new title conferred on it, being then called Teikoku Daigaku. The Itō Cabinet, which was in power, then appointed Mr. Watanabe Hiromoto its President—a decided rise for this gentleman, whose name was then little known. Dr. Katō was then created a member of the Senate (Genrōin)*. But in 1890 he was again appointed President of the University, which post he occupied till 1893 when Doctors Hamano, Toyama and Kikuchi filled the position in succession for very short periods, giving place to Mr. Yamakawa Kenjiro. None of these Presidents did as much for the University as Dr. Kato, whose name will go down to posterity as the chief founder of what still remains Japan's chief seat of learning.

As a scholar Dr. Kato has been made the subject of much adverse criticism. There are those who represent him to be a perverter of learning, a panderer to vulgar appetites and the representative of official learned clannism of an objectionable type. Among certain classes there is a strong dislike for both his character and his learned theories. But whether there is any adequate cause for his unpopularity we very much doubt.

* Considered equivalent to placing a man on the shelf at that time; which idea is cleverly expressed by Mr. Toyabe in the one word mo thus: kare wa Daigaku yori Genrōin Gikwan ni iemin ni sararetarishi mo, Meiji niju-san nen &c.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

Dr. Kato has in many cases alienated sympathy from himself by the unreserved manner in which he has published his views from time to time, even when those views were by no means mature. At the beginning of the Meiji era he appeared before the world as the author of what was then regarded as an extremely radical political treatise called the Shinsei Tai-i (眞政大義). This work maintained the theory so ably advocated by Hobbes that man has natural political rights. European Governments in Dr. Kato's opinion rest on this principle, and hence he decided that they alone were the true forms of government and that the Japanese system was improper. He went as far as to say that no monarch can justly ignore the rights of his subjects and that hence the Japanese Emperor should always allow his mind to be swayed by the wishes of the people. At that time he was one of the members of a Committee appointed to enquire into forms of Government and laws. His adoption of democratic principles was regarded as rendering him unfit to act on such a Committee. But it was not long before he was convinced by a study of Darwin's theories that man's political rights are not inherent, but the result of the progress of society, which in its advanced stages confers those rights on him. He then brought out a new work called Jinken Shinsetsu (a New Theory on Man's Rights). His former works had, in the meantime, given much offence to the Court and to a certain section of the public and it was decided by the authorities that their circulation could not be allowed to go on. On being notified of this Dr. Kato at once withdrew all the books which uphold the theory of man's inherent political rights, namely the Kokutai Shinron, the Shinsei Tai-i and the Rikken Seitai-ryaku. It being widely known that these books had been suppressed by the Government, their author became the butt of much ridicule. His change of front was very adversely criticized at the time by an undiscerning public, but the fact was that Dr. Kato was in search of political truth and he is to be admired for the courage to withdraw writings which no longer represented his real convictions.*

Mr. Kato cannot be called a thorough philosopher, as he has elaborated no distinct system of philosophy†. But he is an investigator and a thinker of a high type. The opposition he has stirred up in the country is one proof of his ability. In many things he has been ahead of his age and has figured in a somewhat grand manner as an Athenian contra mundum‡. In his early political investigation he does not seem to have kept pace with the progress of thought in England or he would not have adopted Hobbes' theories so readily. He laboured under the disadvantage of studying English thought by means of German books; for he is no English scholar, even to-day. Taking European languages in the order in which they were studied in this country, Dutch came first, then English, then French, then German. Under the Tokugawa regime there existed an institution for the study of foreign languages called Banshō-ori-shirabe-sho (a Place for the Examination of Barbarian Literature!) In his early years Dr. Kato was connected with this institution. He added German to the 3 languages investigated and he himself studied that language earnestly and subsequently became the translator of a noted work on German Law which took the title of Doitsu Kokuhō Hanron (汎論). Thus did he become the pioneer of German study in Japan. Foreign languages in this country had three earnest men as student pioneers. Fukuzawa was the father of English

* It will be remembered that early in his career Gladstone wrote an essay in defence of Conservatism.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

† Here we disagree with Mr. Toyabe. The Germans take an opposite view; they having written much on Kato's system of philosophy, as we pointed out some years ago when reviewing Dr. Kato's Evolution of Law and Morality.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

‡ It is perhaps true to say that Dr. Kato has grown more conservative in his old age. His defence of the suicide of the troops on certain transports published in the Taiyō was a case in point.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

study, R. Mitsukuri of that of French, and Katō of that of German. Each of these pushed the study of one language only in the institution over which he presided. Fukuzawa had his Keiō-gijuku, Mitsukuri his Shihōshō Hōgakkō, and Katō, his University. Mitsukuri's School was subsequently abolished, and so practically only English and German were left to compete for patronage. It was owing to the way Katō pushed German study in the University that it gained the position of eminence it now holds. It may be said that as far as education is concerned the Japanese world for many years was dominated by two leading spirits Katō and Fukuzawa.* In a Biographical Dictionary published in Berlin Dr. Katō and his writings are honourably mentioned and he is said to be one of the great leaders of thought in modern Japan. Though much credit is due to Dr. Katō for the way in which he has pushed German study, upon him lies the responsibility of introducing objectionable German official ways and usages. I refer to the practice of manufacturing officials at the University. For the prevailing notion that one of the chief objects of the education received at the University is qualification for holding office under the Government Dr. Katō's teaching and influence is to a large extent responsible; though of course had not the Government seen that it was to its interest to educate its officers in a fixed way Dr. Katō could never have effected what he did. It is now felt by all broad-minded people that the turning of the University into an official factory was rendered comparatively easy by the preference shown by Dr. Katō for German methods. This degradation of the Chief educational institution of the land has considerably helped to found such institutions as the Keiōgijuku and the Waseda Semmon Gakkō, both of which are staunch champions of the principle of the independence of learning. Comparing the influence of Fukuzawa and Katō as educationists, though Katō's scholarship is much beyond that of Fukuzawa as the Teikoku Daigaku is beyond the Keiōgijuku, when we come to the matter of national progress Fukuzawa did infinitely more to develop the nation than Katō could ever do, the reason being that Fukuzawa was permeated with English political ideas, and Katō has always been tied to German notions. Then Fukuzawa's principles and ideas were all of a practical nature, such as the masses of the people could understand and appreciate; whereas Katō preaches, evolution, natural selection and many somewhat abstruse philosophical theories. Hence as an educationist the great Doctor of Literature and Law was surpassed by the unsophisticated, indefatigable Sage of Mita.

YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

The race for 39 Raters and Cruising Class, which was not finished on the 21st inst for want of wind, was resumed on Saturday. Only two of the Cruising Class started, Nina and Asagao. The wind at gun fire was very light, and for the first ten minutes they made very slow progress towards the Harbour Entrance. The breeze then gradually improved, and enabled the race to be finished in good time. Beating out through the war vessels to the Lightship, the wind was very shifty, varying from E. to S. E. At the Lightship, Nina was 14 minutes ahead, and gradually increased her lead all the way round the course, finishing with some minutes to spare. Times at the finish:—

Asagao4.41.25	50 mins.	3.51.25

The 21 Raters raced over the Mandarin Bluff—Quarantine ship course for the prize presented by A. E. Jones, Esq., the Commodore of the Shanghai Yacht Club. By the special conditions of the race, no paid hands were allowed, and the sailing crews consisted of members only, who had to set sails before the start, and moor the boats properly after the finish. A great deal of interest was taken in this race, especially by the verandah captains and the sendos. Winsome was quickest over the line on gun fire, with Edna on her weather quarter, next best. These two had a mild luffing match until Edna's skipper saw that he could not get to windward of Winsome. They could all make the Harbour Entrance in one board on starboard tack, and Winsome was first out, with Witch close up, and Edna next. Winsome and Edna were close together at the Mandarin Bluff Mark, but Winsome had the right of way, and rounded first. They made the quarantine ship easily on starboard tack, and Winsome was a little slow in getting out her balloon jib for the return to Mandarin Bluff. Edna did not catch her, however, and Winsome got away a bit in making the quarantine ship for the second time. Spinnakers were set to starboard for the run back to the Harbour entrance, and Winsome's crew showed commendable smartness in getting her sail out and drawing before they were clear of the mark vessel. Edna was some distance in from the quarantine ship before her spinnaker was drawing, but then she began to overhaul the leader; too late, however, to catch up on her. Gybing at the Harbour Entrance, they had reached on port tack to the finish, where they were timed as follows:—

Edna3.53.22	Second prize by the Club.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

The 21st session of the Yokohama Literary Society was opened in Van Schaick Hall on Friday evening, when the President, Mr. A. Bellamy Brown, lectured on Maori Legends. Following the lecture some lantern slides were shown illustrating types of Maori men and women, Maori carvings, tattooing and mat weaving; some views of the towns of Dunedin, Invercargill, The Bluff, Christ Church, etc.; pictures of New Zealand birds, and sheep farms; scenes from the hot spring district of the north island, the cold lakes of the south, or middle island, the whole finishing with some pretty views from the fairyland of the West Coast, the famous Milford Sound district.

Dr. Dearing, in the course of the evening gave notice that at the next meeting he would propose "That non-transferable season tickets of admission to entertainments of the Society shall be issued to all members." The Society had outgrown the free and easy regulations of its early days, and had become so large that a considerable majority of the members were personally unknown to the Secretary and the officers. It was therefore necessary that some such regulation as he proposed should be adopted as a protection to the Society's treasury. By the issue of season-tickets the Society would know who were members, who were invited guests and who were not entitled to admission to their meetings. The President announced that the motion would come up for discussion at the next meeting.

The musical programme was as follows:—

Song....."Till Death"..... Angelo Mascheroni .	Mr. B. C. Foster.
Pianoforte Solo....."Barcarolle"..... Tchaikowsky .	Mr. S. W. Argent.
Song....."The Message"..... Blumenthal .	"My mother bids me bind my hair"..... Haydn .
	Mrs. E. C. Irwine.
Song....."I Fear no Foe"..... Signor Foli .	Mr. E. Kendall.

The next meeting will take place on November 10th, when Dr. Clay MacCauley will deliver an address on "Shi-kata-ga-nai"—the Only Way, a story of the Samurai.

THE LAW COURTS.

GIELEN v. CHAO WEI-LI.

An action instituted by Mr. H. V. Gielen against Chao Wei-li, a Chinese merchant, petitioning for affirmation of purchase of an estate from the defendant and the registry concerned, came up again on Oct. 27th in the Yokohama District Court.

After a brief discussion as to evidence, a Japanese was called as a witness.

I. Nakamura deposed that he occupied a brick house on lot No. 156, since 1878. The building belonged to Chao Ming-ku, the father of the defendant, and he paid rent to him every month up to November, 1903, when the owner died. Later, witness received a letter from Mr. Gielen saying that the house, together with other buildings adjoining, had been transferred to him by the heir of the deceased, and asking the occupant to pay rent to the new owner. In December, 1903, a Chinaman representing Mr. Gielen came to witness to receive the rent. Since then, witness paid the rent to Mr. Gielen through the Chinese collector. Before the death of Chao Ming-ku, witness heard that the estate had been disposed of to Mr. Gielen to repay a loan.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine an official of the Yokohama City Office, with regard to the registry.

Defendant's Counsel stated that the summoning of the official requested by the plaintiff was not necessary. The property in dispute had been owned by Mr. Macmillan, who transferred it to the late Chinaman. The conveyance is still registered in the City Office. The transfer between the late Chinese and Mr. Gielen was merely registered by the transferee in the same office but there was no countersignature by the seller. Consequently the city authorities seem not able to give a definite explanation as to the purchase of the estate by Mr. Gielen.

The Court rejected the request of the plaintiff to summon an official of the City Office.

Thereupon Counsel briefly spoke. The Court declared that the hearing was concluded and said it would give judgment on Nov. 2nd.

A GAMBLING MURDER.

In the Tokyo District Court, T. Takeuchi, (37) a gambler, was sentenced on Oct. 30th to death. He murdered in November, 1903, another gambler, K. Sato by name, from Nagoya, in a house at Shitaya, Tokyo, inflicting on him fatal injuries with a sword.

A TRADE MARK CASE.

A case lodged by the Bell's Asbestos Co., No. 78, Yokohama, against the Okura-gumi claiming yen 2,060, was brought up again on Oct. 31st in the Yokohama District Court. The Court delivered judgment dismissing the plaintiff's claim.

NISHIKAWA v. WRIGHT.

In the Yokohama District Court the hearing of a case filed by K. Nishikawa, a jinrikisha coolie, against Mr. W. N. Wright, No. 40, claiming yen 46.50, was resumed on Nov. 2nd before Judge Kawamura.

Tomatsu, a jinrikisha coolie, deposed that on May 19th, the plaintiff was bitten by a dog belonging to the defendant. For some days the plaintiff was ill and unable to work. On June 14th, witness saw the plaintiff at the English hatoba.

At this stage the Court asked witness whether he knew Shibukawa and Aihara, both jinrikisha coolies. Witness said—Yes, they are regarded as employees of Mr. Wright because they always use on their caps and lanterns the words "Wright's Hotel."

The Court.—At the previous hearing, these two coolies were examined as witnesses and said that plaintiff did not leave his work after the dog bit him.—Witness.—I don't know what they said in the Court, but I know that the plaintiff was at home for some days because of injuries inflicted by a dog.

T. Mihara, a plasterer, stated that he lived in the neighbourhood of the plaintiff's house and that he knew about the plaintiff's illness, which was caused by a dog biting him. He was at home till about June 15th, the affair took place on May 15th. He believed Nakamura to be a coolie employed by Mr. Wright as he always used a cap and lantern with the words "Wright's Hotel."

Nakamura, a jinrikisha coolie, said that he was not an employee of Mr. Wright. Before February or March, he wore a cap and used a lantern with the words "Wright's Hotel." He did not know of the accident. About a week later, however, he heard from the plaintiff about his injuries. He did not know whether the plaintiff left his work after the accident.

Plaintiff's Counsel spoke briefly. Mr. Wright presented a lengthy statement in rebuttal.

The Court declared the hearing concluded and said that judgment would be delivered on Monday.

THE TOKYO DISTURBANCES.

Two men were arrested on Nov. 1st by the gendarmes in connexion with the Tokyo disturbances and were removed to the District Court. The number of the accused is now 205 in all.

Mr. W. Fukuda, of the Niroku Shinbun, was summoned on Nov. 1st to the Court and examined by Mr. Nakagawa, a Preliminary Examination Judge.

The same day Judges Nakagawa and Ushioda searched a house in the Nihonbashi district and seized several letters.

BANK NOTE COUNTERFEITERS.

S. Tanaka, a copperplate engraver, and K. Imura, a merchant, of Kyoto, I. Amano, a merchant of Osaka, and O. Okuyama, a lithographic printer of Tokyo, who were charged with having counterfeited three thousand 10 yen notes and five thousand 5 yen notes of the First Bank and circulated a portion of them in Korea, were sentenced on Nov. 1st in the Tokyo District Court, Tanaka and Imura to penal servitude for twelve years; Okumura to six years' minor confinement; and Amano to fifteen days' imprisonment with hard labour.

AMERICAN ASIATIC ASSOCIATION OF JAPAN.

The annual general meeting of members of the American Asiatic Association was held on Monday at the U. S. Consulate-General, Mr. N. F. Smith, President, in the chair. There was a large attendance.

The Report of the Honorary Secretary (Mr. G. H. Scidmore) and the Accounts of the Hon. Treasurer (Mr. W. L. Merriman) were duly approved.

The following officers and members of Committee were elected for the ensuing year: Mr. N. F. Smith, President; Mr. B. C. Howard, Vice-President; Mr. G. H. Scidmore Hon. Secretary; Mr. W. L. Merriman, Hon. Treasurer; and Messrs. J. W. Copmann, D. H. Blake, E. W. Frazar, E. Mendelson, C. Gibbens, Rev. E. S. Booth, and Mr. J. B. T. Gibbs, Committee.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

To the members of the Yokohama American Asiatic Association of Japan.

Gentlemen:—The following is a summary of the work of the Association during the past year:—

March 4, 1905.—A dinner was given by the Association at the Grand Hotel, Yokohama, at which the American Minister, officers of the American Navy, leading Japanese officials and business men and a large representation of our members attended. A number of excellent speeches and much thorough enjoyment marked the occasion. During the evening a telegram of congratulation was sent to President Roosevelt.

April 1, 1905.—The Executive Committee discussed the subject of a Consular Convention between the United States and Japan and the Secretary was instructed to bring the matter to the attention of the American Minister.

April 5, 1905.—The President of the Association, Mr. N. F. Smith, reported upon the present crowded condition of the Yokohama General Cemetery, the prospect of opening a new cemetery near the former site range, and the work done by the sub-committee appointed to look after American graves.

May 3, 1905.—The President of the Association, Mr. N. F. Smith, presented to the Association a complete descriptive list of American citizens who have been interred in the Yokohama General Cemetery since July, 1870. This list is to be kept for the inspection of any of our members, and is to be added to, should further interments of Americans be made here.

May 30, 1905.—A sub-committee, consisting of the Rev. E. S. Booth and your Secretary, cooperated with the American ladies of Yokohama in the decoration of the graves of our sailors and soldiers at Yokohama and appropriate services were held at the American Naval Hospital.

July 4, 1905.—Messrs. B. C. Howard and W. L. Merriman again performed the duties of sub-committee and carried out a most successful programme in connection with the celebration of Independence Day. Yacht races, with prizes from the American Minister and this Association, a baseball match, and a splendid display of fireworks in the harbor were the principal events of the day. Subscriptions for these purposes were, as heretofore, on a generous scale.

July and August, 1905.—Through the efforts of the Executive Committee, substantial pecuniary aid was secured in connection with the increased supply of news telegrams from the United States, via Manila.

September 11, 1905.—The Executive Committee authorized our President to advance funds of the Association to assist one of our members, who, by incurable illness and business reverses, had been reduced to pressing want.

The President of our Association, as chairman of the committee of the Perry Memorial Relief Fund, in aid of the families of Japanese soldiers and sailors has handed over to the Imperial Household Department the sum of yen 103,175.41.

The charity fund for the relief of destitute Americans, which we placed in the hands of our Consul-General at Yokohama, has been judiciously administered, and he now holds a balance thereof amounting to yen 346.42.

Yours respectfully,

GEO. H. SCIDMORE.

Secretary.

Yokohama, October 18th 1905.

FOOTBALL.

The game of Rugby football at the cricket ground on Saturday attracted a large attendance of players and indicated that this side of "football" will be very popular in Yokohama this winter. There is evidently a lot of good material eager to be broken into shape at the disposal of the Rugger captain, and if judiciously worked a very good team should result. The game on Saturday proved a win for Whites by one goal to nothing, Dixon securing the point from a free-kick.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The destroyer Akatsuki has been detached from the standing squadron, at Saseho.

The celebrated picture of Benjamin Constant, representing Pope Urban II. entering Toulouse to preach the crusade, in which so much interest was centred when on view in the French Exhibition of 1900, is causing as much trouble in that city as did the family group of the Primrose family. Constant's picture was acquired for the Salle des Illustres in the Capitol of Toulouse. There it ought to have been painted, for it is now seen to be too large for the wall. There seem to be three ways out of the difficulty, viz., to cut the canvass, to make structural alterations in the Salle, or to place the picture somewhere else, and obtain another for the Capitol.

The United Kingdom, for the ten years from 1894 to 1904 led the world in imports, says Bradstreet's. The enormous figure of $2,681,629,000 was reached, a gain over 1894 of $674,419,000, or 34.94 per cent. In exports the United States stands first with an output for the past year of $1,491,745,000, against $793,393,000 in 1894, or a gain of 88.02 per cent. Germany is a close second in imports, and third in exports. With receipts of $1,514,661,000, an increase of 61.60 per cent., she had exports totalling $1,142,987,000. Japan made the largest proportionate gain of all the countries. In 1904 imports were $184,938,000, against $60,211,000 in 1894. Exports were $157,233,000, against $57,544,000 in 1894. In imports the gain was 207.15 per cent., and the export gain was 173.24 per cent.

A story which the late Dr. Barnardo used to tell always seemed to conjure up a picture of Fagin's thieves' academy. He had rescued a small lad who seemed anxious to get away from his office, where the boy told him quite a romantic story of the manner in which he had been taught to earn a living, and of the proficiency he had acquired in the fine art of "fob diving." Dr. Barnardo, which all his knowledge of the dark side of London life, had his doubts of the lad's veracity, and somewhat sharply told him to sit quiet while he wrote some letters. Soon there came the request, in an amused tone, "Can you tell me the time, sir?" and the Doctor felt in his pocket for his gold watch, which had been already secured by wif, who had thus sought to give practical demonstration of his powers and his truthfulness.

At Liege there is now being enacted the closing scene of probably the saddest tragedy ever recorded in the annals of music. Men still middle-aged can remember the fame as a violinist of Sigismond Sicard, the youthful prodigy encouraged by Wagner and Gounod, and patronised by nearly every crowned head in Europe. In July, 1879, Sicard, whose adult powers had confirmed the promise of his boyhood, was staying in Brussels after a successful tour in America, and during a walk with his friend, Wieniawsky, was struck by lightning while sheltering under a tree against a thunderstorm. Wieniawsky sustained shock, from which he died in the following year, and Sicard, paralysed in the left side, recovered after ten years, only to fall into hopeless relapse under the shock of his talented daughter's death in 1892. Beggarred, forgotten, and reduced to mental mediocrity, though able to walk, poor Sicard is to-day eking out the last dregs of a miserable existence as a street hawker in Liege. Beside a calamity like this, even that of Mozart seems insignificant.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

By a vote of 46 to 10 it was recently decided by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions to not discuss the question of "tainted money" any further in any of its phases.

Mrs. Urquhart, the aged mother of Mrs. Brown Potter, has come to her daughter's assistance and has made a home for her, taking a house near Staines-on-the-Thames. It is of old Georgian style, with a beautiful garden and surrounded by high walls.

William V. King, superintendent of the New York Cotton Exchange, estimates the cotton crop of 1904-05 at 13,654,029 bales, the largest ever produced. The crop for the previous year was 10,051,914 bales. Of the total, 10,295,445 bales were receipts at ports, 1,132,606 bales receipts overland, and 2,225,978 bales southern mill takings. Mr. King estimates that the financial resources of the south are probably increased $630,000,000 by the crop.

Hereafter, according to orders given the priests by Archbishop John L. Glennon in the Synod of the Diocese of St. Louis, a return must be made to the plain Gregorian chant. All music of an operatic or dramatic nature must be abandoned and paid choirs done away with. As the Gregorian chant is for male voices, women are to be excluded from the church choirs and from taking part in the diocese as soon as possible. An order was made by the Archbishop that hereafter no intoxicating liquors shall be sold at any of the church festivals.

Surgeon General R. M. O'Reilly of the U. S. army has submitted an exhaustive report on the health conditions of the army to Secretary Taft. The report says that the enlisted strength of the army, as shown upon the monthly sick reports, was 58,740, and on the returns of the military secretary 60,139, and calculations are made upon the latter figures. There were 79,586 "admissions to the sick report" during the year, 406 deaths from all causes, and 1877 discharges for disability. The figures, he says, show a steady and progressive improvement in the health of the army.

It has been decided by the physicians in attendance upon President Harper of the University of Chicago that nothing will save his life but a surgical operation of heroic character. It is admitted that there is practically no chance of saving his life unless the cancer which is killing him can be checked by the removal of a portion of the large intestine. It is proposed by the surgeons to make an examination to decide upon the advisability of the operation. It is, however, admitted that the chances are greatly against the permanent relief of the patient if the operation is performed.

Mr. W. J. Bryan has written another letter to President Roosevelt. He says in part:—

To President Roosevelt: Permit a parting word. You have the contest of your life before you and I desire to render you all the assistance in my power. You have asked Congress to enact a law so enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to permit it to enforce and fix freight rates. The railroad magnates expect to block the passage of the bill again.

Stand by your guns. You have developed a reform element in the Republican party; you must lead it or suffer the humiliation of seeing the leadership pass to some one else. Go forward. You owe it to yourself; you owe it to your party and more than all, you owe it to your country.

W. J. BRYAN.

Jefferson P. Raplee, once a wealthy New York banker and business associate of Jay Gould, Commodore Vanderbilt and John P. Blair, went to the poorhouse in New York on Oct. 9th. Raplee was one of the best known men along Broadway in his day. His father, who was Judge Raplee of Yates County, New York, left him a large fortune. In 1856 he opened a banking house at 137 Broadway, which capitalized at $200,000 and did a yearly business of $500,000, which was a large sum at that time. Since 1867, when this bank made an assignment after some unfortunate speculation, Raplee's fortune, although invested in a banking venture, steadily diminished. Three years ago he closed his last office at 136 Laherty street and began to live on the remnants of his former wealth. He was unmarried.

Ex-President Grover Cleveland will go to The Hague as one of the representatives of the United States Government at the second peace conference called by the Czar, if he will accept the honour. While a formal invitation from Russia to the United States has not been received, President Roosevelt is already considering the personnel of the representatives of his Government. There will be five. In addition to Mr. Cleveland other persons considered in this connection are General Horace Porter, Joseph R. Choate, President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University; Brigadier General William A. Crozier, U. S. A.; Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., retired, and General George B. Davis, U. S. A., retired. No time has been set for the meeting of the next conference, but it probably will be held early next summer.

While several members of the faculty of the University of California were taking measurements of the movements of the Arapahoe glacier several days ago, they found in the terminal moraine the carcass of a mountain sheep which evidently had been caught in a crevasse of the glacier many years ago and carried down, being in cold storage en route. The horns and skull have been placed in the museum. There had been no decomposition, the ice preventing that. Measurements show that in the last year the ice about 100 feet from the edge of the glacier moved at a rate of 27.7 feet per annum, while at a distance of 3000 feet from the edge the ice is moving at the rate of only 11.15 feet a year. A series of zinc tablets were placed upon the glacier a year ago and their location noted. The change in their position showed the movement.

A number of the Episcopal clergymen of the diocese of New Hampshire have made preliminary arrangements for the formation of an association which will have for its ultimate object the union of the Anglican church with the orthodox church of Russia and other ancient churches of the East. The organization is the outgrowth of the thanksgiving service in Christ Church at Portsmouth, which followed the signing of the peace treaty between Russia and Japan and at which priests of the Episcopal and Russian churches officiated. The new organization will follow the lines of "The Eastern Church Association" of the Church of England and will have branches in all dioceses of the Episcopal church in this country, if the plans of the promoters be successful. It is said that within the past half dozen years the relations between the Russian and Episcopal Churches have been growing closer, but until the thanksgiving evening held in Portsmouth there has been no general participation in one service by both Russian and Episcopal priests.

The number of railway passengers killed in accidents in 1904 was 441; in 1903, 321; in 1902, 303; in 1901, 282; in 1900, 249. Referring to these figures, the Chicago Record Herald says:—"The increase in 1904 over 1903 was 37 per cent. The increase in 1903 over 1900 was only 29 per cent in all. For casualties to passengers that did not result in death the rate of increase last year was not so alarming, but still it was very high. The figures are 9,111 casualties for 1904, 6,963 for 1903, 6,080 for 1902, 4,988 for 1901, and 4,128 for 1900. This shows an increase of 331 per cent for 1904 over 1903, as against an increase of 69 per cent for 1903 over 1900. The increase in the number of passengers carried by the roads is trivial as compared with the increase in accidents. For 1904 over 1903 the increase in passengers was less than 3 per cent. Comparisons between American railroads and foreign railroads are very unfavorable to the former, and many explanations are offered by railroad managers. The general explanations are not in point, however, in view of the figures above given. What is needed is an explanation of the rapid rate of increase in the death list last year. The best way for the railroads to give such an explanation is by practical measures for putting an end to the slaughter."

Stories of shipwreck are being constantly told in New York harbor, but it is doubtful if a more curious one has come to light than that told on Sept. 19 by Captain Barry of the steam freighter Cumbal. After being on the rocks in the Straits of Magellan from December 4th to March 23d she managed to get off and make for Buenos Ayres, where she was temporarily repaired. Then she put out for New York, steaming stern forward most of the way for the forward part of the bottom of the boat had been left on the rocks, and the action of the water in sailing bow foremost caused the vessel to leak. The crew deserted, the wind and waves shook her from bow to stern, and everything seemed to combine to make the trip one of the hardest the officers and crew had ever known. The ship went into the dry dock in Erie basin, after being five months overdue. During all this perilous voyage there was one woman aboard. She was Mrs. Barry, the captain's wife but she had such implicit confidence in the ability of her husband to steer safely to harbour in New York that she did not worry much.

The Denver Republican points out in an editorial that the farmer has been making money at a rate that makes the small business man and mechanic envy him, and more and more the mind of the people is turning back to the land. Increases in value of from 25 to 50 per cent in the last two years are reported in the regions of the Mississippi valley, through Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa, in particular. Even worn-out lands that have produced practically nothing for years have suddenly come into command and find buyers in men who intend to again put them under production. In the irrigated sections of Colorado lands that two years ago were selling at $40, $50 and $60 an acre are now going at $100 and $125, and even as high as $250 has been paid for Greeley lands within the month. In these sections sales are restricted in number by the fact that even the higher prices fail to tempt many farmers into selling; they say that they would not know what else to invest their money in that would pay them such good returns as do the farms, even at double the prices of two years ago. It is not extraordinary to clear $50 an acre a year on beet lands, and this would be 10 per cent a year on lands at $500 an acre, a price to which it is predicted the best lands in these sections will go in a few years.

Forty-eight of the fifty-one members of the Indian Territory statehood committee met recently at Muskogee. The committee agreed upon the name of "Sequoyah" for the new state. Referring to the selection of this name, a writer in the St. Louis Globe Democrat says:—"Sequoyah was the Cherokees' Cadmus. He devised their alphabet, and in it a newspaper has been printed for many years. No other man of his race has conferred more credit on the Indian name, although many Indians have won a high reputation in war, oratory and statesmanship. Sequoyah deserves to have some permanent memorial erected to him and a state which would carry his name would, of course, be a particularly high honor. But there is not the faintest chance to get the Indian Territory admitted separately. The leaders at the Muskogee convention of a few days ago knew this. Some of the rank and file of the Indian delegates may imagine that if they persist in their agitation for a state by themselves they will get it. But the chiefs of the Cherokees, the Creeks and the rest of the five tribes are aware that this separatist crusade is an iridescent dream. Congress would never admit the Indian Territory except as a part of the proposed state of Oklahoma. This has been shown so often and so plainly that no intelligent person in either of the twin territories has any doubt on this point."

Rain-in-The-Face, one of the leading chiefs in the Custer massacre, and who is said personally to have killed General Custer, died at the Standing Rock Reservation, South Dakota, on September 12th. He was 62 years old. In 1878 Rain-In-The-Face was notorious for his bloody work on the Little Big Horn, when General Custer and his gallant troopers of the Seventh fell and were killed almost to a man. Sitting Bull, whom General Miles called the "Red Napoleon," has been credited with having directed the movements of the Sioux on that savage day. This statement has been confirmed and denied by writers and Indians, but there has never been any doubt that Sitting Bull took an active part in the battle, even if he did not assume absolute command of the warriors. Nobody has successfully disputed the melancholy achievement of Rain-In-The-Face during the last hours of Custer's command. The savage was then a youngster, with all the characteristic cruelty of his race. He bore himself with reckless bravery during the fighting, and when the troopers were all but gone he burst upon them like a demon and fired the shot that stretched Captain Tom Custer at the feet of his brother. A bullet from a carbine struck Rain-In-The-Face in the left knee, shattering the bone and hurling him out of his saddle. He fell almost squarely upon the body of Captain Custer, but was quickly rescued by his people and borne away. That wound left him a cripple and compelled him to use crutches the rest of his life. When Sitting Bull hoisted the white flag on the British line Rain-In-The-Face, along with such brainy chieftains as Gall and Grass, accepted the inevitable grace and thereafter lived in a quiet way at the Standing Rock agency. For a time he was employed among the Indian police at the agency. In 1893 he visited the World's Fair at Chicago in company with Major McLaughlin, the famous agent at Standing Rock.

All American export records were broken in the amount of merchandise shipped to foreign countries in the 12 months ended August 31 last. The preliminary statement of August exports given out by the bureau of statistics to-day shows that the total for the last 12 months has been $1,566,468,308, as against $1,457,044,909 for the 12 months ended Aug. 31, 1904, and as against $1,501,212,938 for the year ended on the same date in 1901, which was the record year prior to this. The August exports were valued at $17,453,581 and were larger by more than $9,000,000 than in any August in the history of American commerce. The exports in August of last year were only $9,253,881—yet the fiscal year of which that was the second month was a great one in the export trade. The total imports last month were $95,826,548, which was also an August record. The imports in August of last year were $87,737,868. The fact of surpassing importance in connection with imports of foreign goods last month is that the dutiable invoices were far in excess of the non-dutiable. The value of dutiable imports was $56,017,921, and of non-dutiable $39,808,627. There was, of course, a big increase in customs receipts, for the imports of dutiable merchandise in August of last year was nearly $10,000,000 less than last month.

Mr. Henry St. George Tucker of Lexington, Va., President of the American Bar Association, in his address at the opening of the twentieth annual meeting of that association, made a plea for professional purity. Mr. Tucker referred to what he termed the remarkable address of President Roosevelt before the Harvard Alumni in which the President said:—"We all know that, as things actually are, many of the most influential and highly remunerated members of the bar in every centre of wealth make it their special task to work out bold and ingenious schemes by which their very wealthy clients, individual or corporate, can evade the laws which are made to regulate in the interest of the public the use of great wealth. Now, the great lawyer who employs his talent and learning in the highly remunerative task of enabling a wealthy client to override or circumvent the laws is doing all that in him lies to encourage the growth in this country of a spirit of dumb anger against all laws and a disbelief in their efficacy." Commenting on Mr. Roosevelt's remarks, Mr. Tucker said: "The serious charge made by the president against some of the members of our profession must give us pause. His recognized position in the country of stimulating lofty ideals in life, as well as his recognition of the position of our profession in molding public sentiment in the country, forces upon us willingly or unwillingly, as an association, the inquiry not only whether the charge be true but also the broader inquiry whether the ethics of our profession rise to the high standard which its position of influence in the country demands. Surely no more important question than this can be forced upon the profession. I am one of those who believe that the profession of the law is more potential for good than any other profession, excepting the Christian ministry, and in some respects more powerful for good than even that high profession. Its power for evil is correspondingly great. The lawyer who fights his battles in the open, with no weapons save those taken from the arsenal of eternal truth and right, who scorns the temptation to advance a principle for his client or his cause as his own which cannot be defended in the forum of conscience, leaves a lasting impress for good upon those who hear him; and day by day in the shop, in the street, in the market place, and around the family hearthstone the discussion continues which quietly but effectively forms a part of the character of the community in which he lives."

Naval officers in the Bureau of Navigation are studying the problem of towing the big steel dry-dock just accepted at Sparrow's Point, Maryland, from that port to Cavite, for which it was designated. The bureau has written to the headquarters of the Suez Canal Company in Paris asking about restrictions of traffic through the canal and for figures in the way of tolls. So huge is the structure that it may impede traffic in the canal and may cost the Government an extravagant price in tolls. In some ways the immense structure, badly needed as it is in the Philippines, is a sort of white elephant to the department. To tow the structure will require five ships equipped with towing machines. These are not on the market, but must be built to order. Unless the canal company grants considerable reduction from its published tolls and permits the dock to sidetrack in the lakes of the canal while ships pass by, the expense will be ruinous. If the dock is to be towed around the Cape of Good Hope the tow must be started right away and the towing machines have yet to be built. A start later in the season means the encountering of probably disastrous storms at the Cape. Neither is the Suez route devoid of danger, for the monsoon season on the Indian Ocean and again close to the Philippines presents considerable hazard.

Fifty million dollars is an enormous sum for a railway to earn in twelve months, but at least six companies exceeded that amount in 1904. The Pennsylvania system alone, including leased and proprietary lines separately operated earned the vast total of $238,242,000. But next to that the list of railway companies which exceeded $50,000,000 in the year is as follows, with their earnings: (1) Pennsylvania Railroad (3,748 miles), $118,145,000; (2) Southern Pacific Company, $92,933,000; (3) New York Central & Hudson River, $78,578,000; (4) Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, $68,171,000; (5) Baltimore & Ohio, $65,200,000; (6) Chicago & Northwestern (1904-05), $55,745,000; (7) Union Pacific, $55,279,000. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, which in 1904 earned $48,330,000, came within about $200,000 of the $50,000,000 mark in the year ended on June 30, 1905. The increase made by the seven companies since 1900 is wonderful, even after taking increased mileage into account. Thus, the Pennsylvania Railroad gained in round numbers $32,500,000; Southern Pacific, $32,000,000; New York Central, $18,000,000; Santa Fe, $18,200,000; Baltimore and Ohio, nearly $20,000,000; Northwestern, $13,200,000; Union Pacific, nearly $13,500,000. The seven companies, representing 48,700 miles, or nearly 25 per cent. of the total mileage in the country, together earned in the year $534,000,000, against $386,600,000 in 1900, an increase of $147,400,000 or 38 per cent.

PROF. BOWNE OF BOSTON UNIVERSITY AT DOSHISHA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—World citizenship is nowhere better exemplified than in the person of a true scholar. He is of his own land; but he is of every land as well, and finds congenial welcome among the cultured of every race. Japan's entrance into the Sisterhood of States is not more remarkable and gratifying than her recognition as the home of those who are members of the great brotherhood of scholars. Each year sees men of high attainment in increasing numbers visiting Japan and receiving that appreciative welcome that bespeaks the fraternal.

During the past few weeks, Professor Bowne, of Boston University, for thirty years an honored member of that faculty, has visited the educational centres, and given inspiration with the voice of prophetic philosophy. In Sendai, Tokyo, Kyoto, he impressed all hearers with the strength of his personality and the conclusiveness of his reasoning as well as with the spirituality of his philosophic conceptions.

Last week Dr. Bowne spent in Kyoto as the guest of Doshisha, before whose students he delivered five addresses. On Sunday, he preached upon the theme, Man's Attitude in the Presence of Life's Great Problems. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday mornings he lectured before the students of the Theological and College Departments. He aptly terms the philosophy toward which all thought is tending, Personal Idealism, clearly distinguishing it from Pantheistic conceptions on the one side as from every phase of Materialism upon the other. Science and Philosophy work in distinct spheres, mutually supplementary and essential, Science dealing with the succession of phenomena, Philosophy with neumenal causality. Recognizing the discoveries of the most advanced Science, he finds them having no effect upon the question of causality, with which alone Philosophy and Religion have to deal. In Epistemology he sees the key to a clear conception of the Being in Whom all things live and move.

The address on Thursday afternoon was before the entire student body and invited friends. Its theme was, The Function of the Scholar. He would have the scholar a mediator between the past and the future, a critic of civilization, recognizing the distinction between the constant and variable in social as well as personal ethics, and pressing thought forward to that more spiritual philosophy which the future demands.

Dr. Bowne speaks with great simplicity and his language is most easy to understand; but his philosophic positons are grasped with difficulty by those untrained in philosophic thinking. The 600 students of Doshisha were most fortunate in having so large a section of his time; and his idealistic optimism, together with his sound, healthy sense, gave added inspiration to the plans being formed for the celebration of Doshisha's thirtieth anniversary, which falls upon the 29th of November. To that occasion all are looking with interest, as for the last ten years the school has seen a steady advance, its enrollment at present being the largest for over ten years, and the prospects of future development being hopeful.

At the close of the lectures, a lawn reception was tendered Dr. and Mrs. Bowne and Miss Morrison at the home of Dr. Learned. Governor Omori honored the occasion and many of those interested in questions of education were present. Principal and Mrs. Niwa received with the guests of honor.

On Saturday, Oct. 28th, Professor and Mrs. Bowne left Kyoto for Kobe whence they sail for China on November 3rd.

ORION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In reply to remarks of "Hopeless Bachelor" in your issue of Oct. 21st let me state that I warned

"Miriam" that some bald literalist—I mean some prophet of a bald literalism, not one literally bald—would take exception to her disposition of the heavenly bodies. Too often from yonder ivied casements or other coigns of vantage have I looked on great Orion sloping slowly to the west, and too many autumns have I waited to welcome again his lordly march across the evening sky to be entirely ignorant of his appointed whereabouts on a midsummer night. But she replied that hers was "art for art's sake," and that the lay of the San-yo-dori was not intended as a treatise on astronomy. She suggests that if a "Hopeless Bachelor" is ever so happy as to share in such an experience as that of "Jack" and "Moll" he will probably see not one, but half a dozen Orions, and many other extraordinary celestial phenomena, irrespective of the season of the year. And anyway, she maintains, it is nowhere said or sung in the poem that the latitude of Karuzawa is the only one where Romeos and Juliets may walk abroad to view the moon, whatever good prominence that mountain resort may have won as a Lovers' Paradise. Love claims more latitude than that, and for anything said to the contrary Jack and Moll may have been in Australia or Patagonia, or in the Fiji Islands, when they plighted their troth with the Man in the Moon and Orion for witnesses. She had no intention of luring anyone to Karuzawa next June with the hope that Orion might be found "visible after dark," or before dark either, for the matter of that. And then she snapped her pretty fingers at astronomers, meteorologists, et id omne genus, and sang to her mandolin as follows:—

"Love counts each season June,
But star and moon
And varying planet's light
She lacketh not to adorn each charmed night.
Her rosy fingers clasp no almanac.
To signs of Zodiac
She pays scant heed,
Nor fetters her soul with astronomic creed.
"Whatever skies the dreaming earth enfold
Her liberal hand can thole
No closely counted dole,
But gifts the night with more than eyes can hold.
"When the Great Stars to distant zones are fled
Be but her whisper said
And each bereaved space
Of the forsaken heaven is filled apace.
"From skies that flame above the Arctic snows,
Or where old Nilus flows,
From coasts of grey Cathay,
She beckoneth such stars as there may stray.
"She leaneeth on the slow revolving Wain
The jewelled Southern Cross,
None witting of its loss,
And the Seven Planets cluster in their train.
"Across the unlighted gulfs waves she her wand
And from the abyss beyond
The beck of telescope
The obedient stars throng up each shining slope.
"Or lacketh yet some lustre, she can call
Those cressets weird that swing
Within the Polar Ring,
Where ghosts of dead Auroras rise and fall;
"Or ominous spheres of flame, in tropic night
Which far-sailed mariners view,
Before the ill-starred crew
Slow sliding down the shrouds in all men's sight.
"Thou sceptic sad and cheerless celibate,
Wouldst thou then know
What stars diverse may glow,
What sundry constellations scintillate
O'er a wee burnie's flow,
In January night or night of June,
In any latitude beneath the moon?
Take with thee words which Love shall teach thy lips,
And One whose ears to win such words are meet,
And when the red sun dips
And the night sky is full of silver ships,
Beside that prattling stream thy tale repeat.
Strange stars will swim upon the dusky blue,
To catch her whispered word,
Of which nor Newton knew,
Nor Herschel heard."

THE BRITISH SAILORS AS TEACHERS OF ENGLISH.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")
SIR.—It is always more pleasant to praise than to criticize, and criticism is useless unless it results in the bettering of the conditions blamed. In a former letter about the British sailors at Kobe there was no intention to criticize the men, but only to suggest to the city authorities a wiser method of entertainment. Since this criticism has been taken up by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun with regard to another point, there is nothing more to say except to express a wish that the experience gained will be a guide in future entertainments. As to the men themselves, many of them have formed friendships with the boys; they have learned much from one another; letters and photographs have been exchanged already; and these unofficial teachers of the language, have done much that cannot be done in the class room, for the boys have acquired some confidence in their own powers, finding that it is not so hard to talk when they have to talk. I would therefore return thanks to those many volunteer assistants in the teaching of our difficult tongue, and express my wish that the boys may have many more visits from them.

I am, Sir, Yours faithfully,

A TEACHER OF JAPANESE STUDENTS.

"AN EPISODE."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In reference to a paragraph in your issue of the 31st inst., entitled "An Episode," I beg to say that I was the foreigner referred to. In explanation I have to say that I do not know Marquis Ito personally, nor Count Katsura, and that I have seen Count Okuma only once twenty years ago, so that no intentional discounties can be laid to my charge. A naval officer conducted me part of the way, and as I saw an empty chair at the end of the row I occupied it. That is all. Your belief that I once claimed American nationality is wrong. I have at all times strongly asserted my German nationality and am proud of it. The three statesmen in question of course have a right to assume that everybody knows them, and had I had that honour I should have been the last person in the world to be guilty of such utter vulgarity as to take a seat above them, or even close to them. That is all that I have to say in this place.

Yours truly,

F. SCHROEDER.

THE "KANAGAWA MARU'S" MAIL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In connection with my letter dated the 14th August last regarding the mail bags for London and Vienna despatched from this office per steamer Kanagawa Maru on the 10th May last, which were said to have been received by the offices of destination in a wet condition, I beg to state that we are now informed by the United States Post-Office Administration that the wet condition of the sacks in question was due to the fact that they, with others, were thrown into a stream of water upon the occasion of the wreck at Katka Station, Idaho, on the 3rd June last, of the railway train which was conveying them eastward from Seattle.

Yours faithfully,

T. AONUMA,

Superintendent of Foreign Mails,

THE BRITISH ADMIRAL'S SPEECH.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In the last Japan Weekly Mail it is stated that at the Uyeno celebration last week, this was said: "The British Fleet regretted that it had been unable to gather such laurels and to garner such a unique experience in naval warfare, but they hoped that their turn might come in due time." Is it possible that a British admiral said that, and especially one who bears a name redolent of holly and ivy, "peace on earth, good-will toward men"? If he did, is that what is sometimes called "spoiling for a fight," and does it not lend colour to the fear often expressed by those who long for the reign of the Prince of Peace, that a standing army and navy may force a war that might be avoided? Does it not seem that, of late, while Japan has been levelling up, "dear old England" has been levelling down, until there is not only no difficulty in the two countries meeting upon the same moral plane, but that, in some respects, Japan is ethically in advance of the Occident? Could any one think of the admiral who offers his devotions at a Shinto shrine giving utterance to such words as these: "they hoped that their turn might come in due course"?

I know well how serious a matter it is to "speak evil of dignities," but I felt that somebody ought to speak, and therefore could not refrain from asking permission to express my surprise and pain.

Yours, etc.,

A BRITISH SUBJECT.

JAPANESE SILK IN AMERICA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—Under this heading you inform your readers that according to the Shogyo Shimpō the Silk As sociation of America has addressed itself to the Japanese Department of Agriculture and Commerce making certain proposals in regard to conditioning of raw silk, etc., and that the Department introduced the subject to the Dai Nippon Sanshi Kai (The Sericultural Company). The latter deeming the matter of great importance in view of America being Japan's largest customer for silk held a meeting of its Council and agreed to communicate with the sericulturists, who would be asked to gradually effect what changes may be necessary so as to meet American views. So far so good; the action of the Dai Nippon Sanshi Kai has been quite commendable, but what are we to think of the doings of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce which, we are told, whilst transmitting a reply has asked that as the American method of 6 months' settlement causes much inconvenience in Japan it should be altered on the lines followed in the European markets? Now the Japanese sericulturist receives hard cash down for every ounce of silk he sells in the Yokohama market and incurs no risk whatever. Should, however, he prefer to ship direct to America he has naturally to take the same risks as any foreign exporter who accepts the usage of the New York silk trade, which is a six months credit sale.

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce would make itself ridiculous in the eyes of the American Silk Association by any such proposal.

I inclose my card,

KOREA: A DEGENERATE STATE.

(BY GEORGE KENNAN IN "THE OUTLOOK.")

There is now in progress in the Far East a social and political experiment which, in point of interest and importance, is not surpassed. I think, by anything of the kind recorded in history. For the first time in the annals of the East, one Asiatic nation is making a serious and determined effort to transform and civilize another. Asiatic peoples, in centuries past, have exchanged ideas, arts, or products, and the higher has sometimes handed down its knowledge and such civilization as it had to the lower; but no Oriental nationality ever made a conscious and intelligent attempt to uplift and regenerate a neighbor until Japan, a few months ago, took hold of Korea. The interest and importance of this experiment are not wholly due to its unique and unprecedented character. An experiment may be new and yet have little or no bearing on human progress and welfare. The Korean experiment, however, is not one of this kind, inasmuch as its results are likely to affect vitally the interests and happiness of millions of people, and may completely transform social and political conditions not only in Korea but throughout the vast empire of China. The present war has made Japan the predominant power in eastern Asia, and there can be little doubt, I think, that she is about to assume the leadership of the so-called Yellow Race. In the Korean experiment we may see what capacity for leadership she has, and what are likely to be the results of the exercise of her newly acquired influence and strength in the wide field thrown open to her by her recent victories. She has successfully transformed and regenerated herself, but has she the disposition and the ability to uplift and civilize the degenerate nation on the other side of the Tushima Strait or to guide wisely and unselfishly the greater and more promising people on the other side of the Yellow Sea? It is my purpose, in this and subsequent articles, to state the Korean problem and to show under what conditions and in what way Japan is trying to solve it.

The first thing that strikes a traveler in going from Japan to Korea is the extraordinary contrast between the cleanliness, good order, industry, and general prosperity of one country, and the filthiness, demoralization, laziness, and general rack and ruin of the other. The inhabitants of the two empires seem to be ethnologically related, and they resemble each other somewhat in color and in physical type; but in moral and intellectual characteristics they are as far apart as the Dutch and the Venezuelans. The Japanese are clean, enterprising, intelligent, brave, well educated, and strenuously industrious, while the Koreans strike a newcomer as dirty in person and habits, apathetic, slow-witted, lacking in spirit, densely ignorant, and constitutionally lazy. So far as history enables one to judge, the two peoples had a fair and equal start, and there is reason to believe that at first the Koreans took the lead; but, as a result of the feudal system, and of other causes not fully and clearly ascertainable, Japan advanced, improved and eventually developed a high type of individual and national character, while Korea gradually declined, lost what character and culture she had, and finally sank to a level little above that of Hayti and San Domingo.

The impression prevails in America that Korea has a real civilization, but that it has been arrested in process of development, and has come to a state of stagnation like that which we observe in China. It seems to me, however, that Korea presents a case, not of arrested development, but of disintegration and decay. Its civilization has not become stagnant; it has rotted. China may fairly be regarded as an imprisoned and cramped organism which would grow if it were set free and stimulated. Korea is an organism that has become so diseased as to lose its power of growth; and it can be restored to a normal condition only by a long course of remedial treatment. With these few words of preface to indicate the nature and difficulty of the Korean problem, I shall proceed first to a consideration of the conditions and limitations under which Japan is forced to work in her attempt to solve it. These conditions and limitations may conveniently be grouped under three heads: (1) The Emperor; (2) The Government, and (3) The People.

1. The Emperor. In February of last year the Governments of Japan and Korea entered into a formal agreement by virtue of which Japan undertook to "inure the safety and repose of the Imperial House of Korea," and to "guarantee the independence and integrity of the Korean Empire," while Korea promised to "place full confidence in the Imperial Government of Japan," and to "adopt the advice of the latter with regard to improvement in administration." As a result of this agreement Japan is now bound to work for the regeneration of Korea through and by means of the existing Korean Government, or at least through and by means of the Korean Emperor and his subordinates. Her limitations, therefore, are such as ours would be if we were compelled to govern and civilize the Philippines through a Filipino Emperor, aided by a Filipino Cabinet and supported by a full set of Filipino officials in all positions of responsibility and trust. The parallel is not a perfect one, but, for the purpose of my argument, it errs on the right side, inasmuch as the Tagalogs and Visayans probably stand higher in character, education, and ability than the great mass of the Koreans. Japan's task, therefore, is more difficult than ours would be under the conditions assumed. The proof of this statement seems to me abundant and conclusive. Take first, for example, the Korean Emperor. An American gentleman of impartiality and sound judgment, who has lived many years in Korea and has had an opportunity to know him well, describes him as follows:

"The Emperor of Korea is a gentle little man, who has sinned away his day of grace, and now sits unconscious of the crack of doom impending. He has a pleasant face and a gracious smile. Of late years his teeth have turned yellow, and he is getting puffy under the eyes; but he is still handsome—as Koreans go. He has none of the marks of a savage, either in his face or in his voice, but seems admirably suited to a drawing-room of the time of Moab and Edom, could he have lived then. He is an abstemious man in his meat and drink, and quiet in all his ways. He smokes little, and chews nothing but an amber bead. He is a head shorter than the Crown Prince, but wiser, on the whole. He likes dress, and to play with the stars and garters of his Order of the Indian Empire and the other decorations that have been brought to him from over the sea. He is unconscious as a child, stubborn as a Boer, ignorant as a Chinaman, and vain as a Hotentot. He has read nothing, and has heard only flattery for forty years. The atmosphere that surrounds him is one of dense ignorance, and consequently he is as timid as a fawn deer. He is extremely superstitious, and makes up for his lack of book-learning by séances with spirit-rappers and consultants of the eternal shades. He loves his sorceresses, witches, wisewomen, and ground-doctors, and consults them constantly on the affairs of State. Not a day passes but messages come to him from the spirits of the dead. He is kindly disposed, and only the other day sent a special gift to help a poor old coolie whose tumble-down hut and poverty he happened to see when he was on his way from his burned Chongdong palace. He does not like his people, because they scare him with their Independence Clubs and Societies for the Propagation of Peace. He will have the head off his best friend if that friend gives him cause for alarm. He and his older brother are not on speaking terms—in fact, he would be very glad indeed to have his older brother depart this life. He is afraid of his nephew, Prince Chung-Yong in Japan, and would like to have him quietly and quickly put out of the way. His own son, Prince Eui-Wha, now in America, keeps at a safe distance, for he has failed on more than one occasion to obey his father, and knows full well that if he returned, unprotected, his life would be but a shadow that passes away. This gentle little man, who consults his horoscope through the medium of soft-handed women, can order the execution of a friend without a tear, and then go on playing with his stars and trinkets. He has never advanced one step in the way of true reform, and yet he takes a deep interest in the drawing-room touches of Western life. He knows the exact difference between the uniforms of the representatives who appear before him, and just how many gold strings there are to each country's epaulettes. He has studied clocks, watches, and barometers, not as articles for use, but as ornaments. He likes machine guns, not to fire off, but to make believe with. He is, indeed, a spoiled child, who regards his country as something created for his special delectation, and all the people as flocks and herds intended for his slaughter. He is as incapable of grasping the meaning of the age he lives in as a ten-year-old youngster would be of taking Port Arthur."

Although this character sketch is admirably accurate so far as it goes, it does not by any means complete the portrait of the Emperor as a ruler and a man. He is absolutely incapable of forming a correct judgment with regard to men and events, and in consequence of this mental disability he is deceived by his courtiers and cheated by all who have business dealings with him. If a soothsayer, a fortune-teller, or a fictitious spirit tells him that the Russians will shortly drive the Japanese out of Korea—a thing that he ardently hopes for—he gives full credence to the prediction, and tries to shape his conduct or his policy in accordance with it. If a sorcerer declares that a certain palace or a certain banqueting hall is an inauspicious place of entertainment for a distinguished foreign guest or visitor, he will order the removal, at the last moment, of a luncheon or dinner that is all ready to be served. Foreigners whom he has entertained tell me that, by direction of fortune-teller or spirit mediums, he has had such changes made two or three times in succession in the course of a single hour.

But these are, comparatively, trifles. Under the influence of personal fear, the pressure of stronger characters in his Cabinet, or the misleading and often malevolent counsel of sorcerers and soothsayers, he is ready to sanction or permit the most diabolical treachery and cruelty. Only five years ago he lured back from the safe refuge of Japan, under promise of a fair trial, two obnoxious Korean reformers named An-Kyung-Sit and Kwan-Yung-Jin, who are described by a well-known American resident of Seoul as two of the best men that Korea in late years has produced. Having got them into his power, by means of a promise that he apparently did not intend to keep, he had them secretly put to death in prison. During the greater part of his long reign, and even up to a time that is still recent, bodily torture has been a recognized and essential feature of what is known in Korea as judicial procedure; and the Government, with his Majesty's sanction or permission, has burned men with hot irons, imprisoned them in cages, broken their bones with levers, or torn them asunder by driving apart four bullocks harnessed to their ankles and wrists. While the Emperor was a refugee in the Russian Legation at Seoul, in 1896, Mr. Waerber, the Russian Minister, persuaded him to put a stop to these inhuman practices; but the prohibition was enforced for a period of only six months. When the royal fugitive went back to his palace, the torture of prisoners and witnesses began again.

To what extent the Emperor himself was responsible for the barbarous custom of hanging or impaling the heads of decapitated "traitors" on spikes over the Little West Gate of the capital, and distributing bloody fragments of their dismembered bodies throughout the provinces as a warning to the disaffected, I do not know; but certain it is that men who had been guilty of these atrocities were often advanced and rewarded. The assassin of the Korean reformer Kim-Okkyun, for example, was given an important position in his Majesty's service, while another murderer, who had attempted to take the life of the liberal Pak-Yong-Hyo, was made Minister of Justice. Thieves, extortioners, counterfeiters, and assassins have again and again held positions in the Emperor's Cabinet, and even now—in this year 1905—the Korean Minister of War, Yi-Yong-Ik, is an uneducated coolie who is so unclean personally as to be offensive to the senses, and who is described by foreign residents of Seoul as a low-born, illiterate, and unscrupulous adventurer, who has accumulated an immense fortune through extortion and fraud, and who manages to retain his position by supplying money to the Emperor when the latter is financially in need.

Most bad and vicious rulers have had at least the redeeming virtue of personal courage; but the Emperor of Korea is not only bad, but weak and cowardly. Shortly after the murder of the Queen he moved into a palace in the Chongdong quarter of Seoul, where he was surrounded with foreign legations, and where he thought he would have the latter's protection. In this new place of residence he has changed all his habits of life in the hope of escaping danger. Fearing assassination in the hours of darkness, he sits up all night, talking with courtiers, eunuchs, and sorcerers, and goes to bed only when returning daylight gives him a feeling of personal security. He eats his breakfast just before sunset, takes dinner at one o'clock in the morning, and sups when the other residents of the capital are beginning to get up—and this practice he has followed for years. For some weeks after the assassination of the Queen he was so afraid of being poisoned that he would eat no food except that which had been brought in a locked chest from the kitchen of an American missionary. He never ventures outside the walled and strongly guarded inclosure of the palace, and spends most of his time in a room eight or ten feet square, which is situated in the midst of other rooms, and which is so close and damp that, in spite of its floor-covering of oiled paper, it often has to be dried out by artificial heat, even in the sultry dog-days of mid-summer. In this hot, damp cubby-hole the Emperor, surrounded by his attendants, feels comparatively safe; and there he virtually lives from one year's end to another.

Such, in general outline, is the character of the ruler whose "safety and repose" the Japanese Government has promised to "insure," whose "independence," it has "guaranteed," and whose methods it has undertaken to reform by means of benevolent "advice." Reforming such a country, by advising such a ruler, strikes an observer as a more hopeless task than attempting to empty an overflowing cistern with a sieve!

2. The Government. Under this head are comprised (a) the Emperor's Cabinet, consisting of nine ministers; (b) the sorcerers, soothsayers, fortune-tellers, and mudangs or spirit mediums, who influence and often control legislation; (c) the governors of the thirteen provinces; and (d) the magistrates or prefects of the three hundred and forty-four prefectures into which the provinces are divided. All of the official positions in classes (c) and (d) are nominally filled by Imperial appointment, but the selection of appointees is subject to court influence, "pull," or intrigue, and, as a rule, the offices are sold to the highest bidders. Provincial governors pay from ten thousand to forty thousand Korean dollars (1) for their places, and then not only recoup themselves but amass fortunes by robbing the defenceless people whom they are sent to govern. As there are no independent law courts, and as every governor or prefect is a judge as well as an administrator, a Korean who is robbed must seek redress from the robber. If he be a man of resolute character and some means, he may carry his grievance to the Supreme Court in Seoul, but as that court is a component part of the palace ring which appointed the robber, the victim of the injustice is merely appealing from brigand No. 2 to brigand No. 1, and may regard himself as fortunate if No. 1 does not take away from him all that No. 2 has left.

The methods of robbery in the provinces and prefectures are illegal and excessive taxation, "squeezes" on all official business, imprisonment on trumped-up charges, seizure of property without warrant or excuse of any kind, and barefaced extortion on pretexts often so fantastic and preposterous as to be almost incredible. In one case that was reported to me, an ingenious extortioner bribed one of the Emperor's ministers to bestow a decoration upon a well-to-do Korean in a northern province. Taking the decoration in his hand, he went to the prospective victim of the plot and said to him: "I am delighted to be the bearer of good news and a reward of merit. His Majesty the Emperor has graciously deigned to bestow upon you the decoration of the second class of the Order of the Plum Blossom, and to send it to you by my unworthy hand." Then, taking the glittering star out of his pocket and delivering it to the astonished Korean, he added: "The expenses connected with the bestowal of this high honor will be five thousand dollars."

"But," objected the Korean, in dismay, "I have done nothing to deserve such a decoration, and I can't afford to pay for it. Five thousand dollars would cover all the property I have."

"Then you scorn the Imperial gift and insult his Majesty by refusing to accept it, do you?" cried the extortioner, in pretended anger. "We'll see about that!" And, going to the governor of the province, he bribed the latter to throw the recalcitrant Korean into prison on a charge of lese-majesty. There he lay until he was forced at last to spend all that he had in purchasing the second-class cross of the Imperial Order of the Plum Blossom—a decoration that was nominally bestowed upon him as a mark of distinction and a reward of merit. This, perhaps, is an extreme case, so far as the grotesque absurdity of the pretext for extortion is concerned, but, regarded merely as a case of injustice, it is far less flagrant than scores of others that might be cited. Many Korean governors and prefects do not take the trouble to invent a pretext, but simply seize the property of a man who has failed to pay for immunity, and throw him into prison. While I was in Seoul, seventy Korean farmers from Pingyang were there, making a united effort to recover property to the value of 1,500,000 Korean dollars, which had been forcibly taken from them by the late provincial governor, Min-Yong-Ju. This was a plain case of robbery with violence, and the remonstrances of the victims had been temporarily silenced by means of imprisonment and the lash. The "News Calendar" of the Korea Review contains references to dozens, if not scores, of such cases, and of course there are hundreds that never come to the light of publicity.

It must be remembered, moreover, that the Korean people have been accustomed to "squeeze" and illegal exactions for centuries, and that they protest or resist only when robbery passes the extreme limit of endurance. If a governor or a prefect "squeezes" moderately and with discretion, he may do so with impunity—the people will not "kick"—but if he resorts to general violence, or attempts to "squeeze" for his own use ten times or twenty times as much as he collects in legal taxes, there is apt to be trouble. You may rob some of the Koreans all of the time, or all of them some of the time; but if you rob all of them all of the time and without limit, you are finally dragged out of your house and beaten or kicked to death in the streets. This happened, in September last, to Pak-U-Yang, the magistrate of a prefecture only ten miles south of Seoul. In several other recent cases prefects have been mobbed or driven away from their posts, and I presume that this happens in some part of Korea almost every week, inasmuch as lynch law is the only law that affords Korean peasants any protection or redress.

The natural and inevitable result of such a state of affairs is impoverishment and demoralization. When all that a man can earn over and above the bare means of subsistence is taken away from him by corrupt and unscrupulous officials, he loses the incentive to work and sinks almost to the level of an indolent pauper. The financial burden of the people ought not to be heavy. The revenue of the central government last year was only fourteen million Korean dollars, and this sum, divided among twelve million people, would amount to a tax of less than $1.25 per capita. If the Koreans, in proportion to their number, paid as much in taxes as the Japanese pay without difficulty, the revenue of the central government would be fifty-five or sixty million Korean dollars instead of fourteen million. Mr. Homer B. Hulbert, a close student of Korean affairs, estimates that three Japanese yen per annum, or one dollar and fifty cents in American gold, will cover all legal taxes on the average Korean farmer's house and land. Inasmuch as the average farmer probably earns twenty times that amount, and might earn fifty times as much, he ought to be fairly prosperous, and he undoubtedly would be if he were not "squeezed" by a horde of hungry officials and were not compelled to support another horde of "yangbans" and idlers.

The central government at Seoul regards the "squeezing" of the population with indifference, so long as it does not lead to violence and disorder. For this there are two reasons. In the first place, the ministers, sorcerers, and high-placed officials who sell the provincial offices expect, as a matter of course, that the governors and prefects will get back from the people the money that they have paid for their positions; and, in the second place, the palace ring of eunuchs, fortune-tellers, and courtiers is engaged in robbery on its own account. When the Emperor wishes to buy a house—and he has a mania for purchases of that kind—one of his ministers attends to the business for him; and by paying the owner of the property $20,000 and charging the Emperor $60,000, the ministerial agent is able to put $40,000 into his own pocket without trouble or risk. When $50,000 is appropriated for the burial of the Queen Dowager, or $1,000,000, for the funeral expenses of the Crown Princess, every inhabitant of the palace gets a slice of the plum-cake, from the Emperor himself down to the fourth-class eunuchs.

In almost everything connected with the palace there is a "squeeze," a bribe, or a steal.* If this

* An exception must be made in the case of the new palace now in course of construction under the vigilant supervision of Mr. J. McLeavy Brown, chief of customs, and also in the case of the three foreigners—Miss Sonag, Miss Cook, and Mr. Cohen—who are employed respectively to superintend Imperial entertainments, attend to the education of the young prince, and manage the electric light plant. Dr. Morrison, Far Eastern correspondent of the London Times, has described the three employees last named as "foreign parasites," but no metaphor could be more unfair or unjust. They perform faithfully certain duties, and receive a certain reasonable piece contains only two cents' worth of valuable metal, this irregular and unrecorded issue of coin by favored Ministers is a money-making avocation in more senses than one. Even when the five-cent pieces are kept up to the prescribed standard of fineness, there is a quasi legitimate profit of sixty per cent. But why should a ministerial coiner put two cents' worth of nickel into his product when half a cent's worth will do just as well? It would be foolish, and the Bureau of Propriety would condemn it instantly! So he lowers the standard of fineness to ten per cent., and coins money which has little more value than the brass cash.

In this summary review of the methods practiced by Korean officials in robbing the Emperor, the people, and one another, I have failed, perhaps, to cover the whole ground; but I must leave some space for a brief reference, at least, to another aspect of Korean administration. Nothing strikes an investigator more forcibly or impresses him more strangely than the extraordinary contrasts and incongruities presented by modern Korean life, particularly in the sphere of government. Sometimes the same chapter of history contains an account of a ghastly tragedy sandwiched between two scenes from a comic opera; and sometimes the incongruity appears in the shape of an apparently impossible sequence of events, or the bringing together of ideas that would never be naturally associated in any sane mind. After reading the historical record of two thousand years of Korean misrule, bloodshed, treachery, and torture, one is not surprised at the murder of reformers, the public exposure of their heads, and the distribution of fragments of their dismembered bodies throughout the provinces; but when the official murderers get together in the palace, on a pleasant afternoon, and establish a Bureau of Propriety, the contrast between the primitive savagery on one hand and the suggestion of polite conventionality on the other gives one's mental processes a sudden jolt. Modern Korean history is full of such contrasts and incongruities, but I have room for only a few illustrations, taken almost at random, from recent numbers of the Korea Review.

In January of last year the police of Pingyang and the soldiers stationed in that city suddenly took up burglary as an avocation, and began plundering the houses of the inhabitants. When the governor ventured to remonstrate, they became very indignant and threatened to disband and leave the city without police and military protection! (Korea Review January, 1904, p. 30). Korean soldiers are strictly forbidden to sell or pawn their uniforms; but they are allowed to hold a mass-meeting and vote on the question whether or not they should go to a place to which the have been ordered! (Korea Review, January, 1904, p. 176, and May 1904, p. 221). A Korean official may be a robber, a torturer, or a murderer, and still hold his position, but if he goes into mourning for a dead relative he must resign (Korea Review, April, 1905, p. 156). A Korean peasant in Kongju happened to accuse the wrong man of theft, and the prefectural authorities gouged out both of his eyes as a warning to be more careful in identification (Korea Review April, 1905, p. 167). About the same time the local officials in another prefecture prohibited riding in silk-upholstered chairs and the wearing of silken clothes, and directed that no women except professional dancing-girls should be allowed to ride in jinrikishas (Korea Review July, 1905, p. 317). The Emperor issued a proclamation inculcating virtue and urging officials to be more diligent in the performance of their duties; and a little later the Vice-Premier asked his Majesty to punish the Chief of Police and two Vice-Ministers for gambling in the palace (Korea Review January, 1905, p. 38). Some of the facts set forth in this article might seem to justify the conclusion that the Korean people generally have a hard time; but among the inscriptions in Chinese ideographs over the shops of Korean merchants in Seoul I observed and copied the following: "The People Enjoy Peace and Pleasure," "We are Successors to the Work of Shinnu and Save the People," "Heaven and Earth are Comprised in this Residence," "The Spring Light is Clear and Beautiful," "Thousands of Treasures Gather Together in the Morning," "Ten Thousand Pounds of Pure Gold," "Distribute Liberally and Save the People," "The House of Happiness and Virtue," "Benevolence, Righteousness, Courtesy, Wisdom, Fidelity, and Filial Obedience." These inscriptions certainly would lead a newcomer to suppose that in Korea he had found at last a land of virtue, prosperity, and happiness; but the mental jolt that he would get when he came to investigate the palace would probably dislocate all his faculties and reduce him to a state of imbecility!

Imperial privy purse.....	$1,103,359
Imperial "sacrifices".....	186,041
Palace construction.....	300,000
Palace guard.....	179,256
Special palace guard.....	81,978

Total.....$1,751,634

Some of the items of expenditure for the benefit of the Korean people are as follows:

All public schools outside of the capital—schools for the education of ten or twelve millions of people.....	$27,718
Public works.....	424
"Suppressing robbers".....	500

Total.....$28,642

One million seven hundred thousand dollars for the comfort and safety of the ruler, and twenty-eight thousand for education, public works, and the suppression of robbers in provinces inhabited by ten or twelve millions of the ruled, would seem to be glaringly disproportionate even in the Orient; but under the head of "incidentals" the budget provides an "emergency fund" of $1,158,000 which might possibly be used for the benefit of the people if they should suddenly begin to die off in a general epidemic of acute cerebral anæmia, or if common, everyday robbers should threaten to strip them so bare as to leave no plunder whatever for the official robbers.

The largest single appropriation in the budget is $5,180,614 for the army; and the usefulness of that organization, and the state of discipline existing therein, may be inferred from the fact that when the Pingyang regiment was ordered north to the Yalu, last year, its colonel called the men together and asked all those who wished to go to hold up their hands. Six hundred of them decided to make the march, but two hundred even of this resolute fraction deserted before the regiment reached its destination.

Stealing from the treasury by means of "cooked" accounts, however, is not sufficient in itself to meet the requirements of the ministers, courtiers, sorcerers, soothsayers, geomancers, spirit mediums, concubines, eunuchs, and multitudinous attendants who surround the throne; and it often becomes necessary, therefore, to resort to counterfeiting, double sales of the same tract of public land, and the private sale of Government concessions. Counterfeiting is practised by almost everybody. High officials of the Court take up that avocation "on the side," and Cabinet Ministers are allowed to borrow the dies from the Imperial mint and coin nickels for their own use to an indefinite amount. As the genuine nickel five-cent compensation, and, from my point of view, they earn double the amounts that they receive. One of them, to my certain knowledge, saves the Emperor about $60,000 a year.

(1) The five-cent nickel is the principal coin of Korea, and has taken the place, to a great extent, of the old brass baggage-checks known as "cash." As Mr. Hulbert has justly remarked, "It is the ideal coin to counterfeit." A silver piece may easily be tested, but spurious nickels not only pass from hand to hand in paper-wrapped rolls, but are difficult of detection even when examined singly.

The activities and operations of the existing Korean Government may briefly be summed up as follows: It takes from the people, directly and indirectly, everything that they earn over and above a bare subsistence, and gives them in return practically nothing. It affords no adequate protection to life or property; it provides no educational facilities.

ties that deserve notice; it builds no roads; it does not improve its harbours; it does not light its coasts; it pays no attention whatever to street-cleaning or sanitation; it takes no measures to prevent or check epidemics; it does not attempt to foster national trade or industry; it encourages the lowest forms of primitive superstition; and it corrupts and demoralizes its subjects by setting them examples of untidiness, dishonesty, treachery, cruelty, and a cynical brutality in dealing with human rights that is almost without a parallel in modern times.

It may be thought that, in pointing this picture of Korean administration, I have used colors that are too dark; but Americans, Englishmen, and Germans who are far better acquainted with Korea than I can pretend to be use black more freely than I do. In speaking of the Emperor and his officials, the Rev. Dr. James S. Gale, who has spent a large part of his life on the peninsula, says emphatically: "No government ever existed that was more infected with rottenness to the bones." And it is this government through which Japan must work in her attempt to regenerate the Korean people.

My third division of the general subject, the Korean people, will be treated in a separate article.

SIR STAMFORD RAFFLES AND JAPAN.

It is very singular, says the Morning Post, that in the voluminous literature produced about Japan of late years there is not a single reference to the attempt made by Sir Stamford Raffles to establish a regular trade with that country in 1813-15. A brief epitome of what a great Englishman designed half a century before Lord Elgin's mission to Yedo may possess some interest.

When we occupied Java in the summer of 1811 during Lord Minto's term of Government in India, we came into contact with the outlying dependencies and commercial agencies of the Dutch in the Far East. Among the latter was the factory on Desima, which served as the sole means of communication between the Japanese and Europeans. It was the practice of the Dutch to replenish their factory and to carry away whatever the Japanese chose to export by sending two ships once a year from Batavia to Desima; but sometimes, owing to unforeseen causes, the ships missed a season. This happened in 1812 on account of the war, and it was only when the Administration was getting into something like regular order that Raffles discovered all about the factory at Desima. He thereupon fitted out two ships to proceed to Japan, and he entrusted the charge of the mission to Mr. Wardenaar, a Dutch gentleman who had acted for him in several matters of a similar character. With him he also sent an Englishman, Dr. Daniel Ainslie, nominally as surgeon, but really to look after our interests and to make a confidential report on the situation in Japan.

When the ships anchored off Desima in the spring of 1813 nothing was known there of the British occupation of Java, and the factor in charge, Hendrik Doeff, flatly refused to believe what Wardenaar told him. "Who is Raffles?" he said, and when he got his reply he refused to obey any orders except from The Hague. His opposition did not stop here, for having the ear of the Japanese he poisoned their minds against the English, who, he alleged, were "always fighting and conquering." Unfortunately it was the easier to do this on account of an incident that had occurred some years earlier, and rendered the English name unpopular in Japan. In 1808 Captain Pellw in His Majesty's ship Phoenix had visited Nagasaki, and had experienced some difficulty in obtaining water and fresh supplies. He resorted to force, and after his departure the Governor, feeling himself disgraced, had committed "hara-kiri." This incident was recalled against Sir Stamford Raffles, and Dr. Ainslie, who endeavoured to obtain an audience with the Emperor, met with a rebuff. A young elephant, sent by Raffles for the Emperor's acceptance, was also refused. Dr. Ainslie, however, remained in Japan for four months altogether, and only took his departure with the returning ships. In the following year—1814—Raffles sent only one ship, upon which Heer Cassa, a Dutchman, of Batavia, sailed as his commercial agent. The commercial results of the venture were not unpromising, and more might have come of the intercourse, but in 1815 it became generally known that Java would be restored to Holland. The East India Company at the period of which we are speaking was also averse to an adventurous policy in unknown directions. It did not believe that any addition could be made to its revenues through trade with Japan, while it might incur loss from the fitting out of annual expeditions. For these reasons the attempts of Sir Stamford Raffles to open up trade with Japan must be regarded as the energetic efforts of an individual, and not the deliberate policy of his Government.

The refusal of the Japanese, instigated by the prejudiced and stiff-necked Dutchman Hendrik

Doeff, to trade with the English did not bias Sir Stamford's mind against them. Dr. Ainslie, in whom he had implicit confidence, sent him voluminous reports, and on them he formed a judgment most favourable to the Japanese in every respect. Expression was given to these opinions in Sir Stamford's presidential address to the Batavian Society of Arts and Sciences on Sept. 11, 1815. The following extracts are those of the most direct importance: "I need only offer a few notices on the character which they appeared to Dr. Ainslie to display during a residence of four months and as far as he had the opportunity of judging. They are represented to be a nervous, vigorous people, whose bodily and mental powers assimilate much nearer to those of Europe than what is attributed to Asiatics in general. Their features are masculine and perfectly European, with the exception of the small lengthened Tartar eye which almost universally prevails, and is the only feature of resemblance between them and the Chinese. The complexion is perfectly fair and indeed blooming, the women of the higher classes being equally fair with Europeans and having the bloom of health more generally prevalent among them than is usually found in Europe. For a people who have had very few, if any, external aids, the Japanese cannot but rank high in the scale of civilisation. . . . The Chinese have been stationary at least as long as we have known them, but the slightest impulse seems sufficient to give a determination to the Japanese character which would progressively improve until it attained the same height of civilisation with the European. . . ."

These remarks, uttered ninety years ago, show that at least one discerning mind had appreciated all the difference between the Japanese and other Asiatics. It was the apathy of the home authorities that alone prevented the establishment nearly a century ago of an entente cordiale between England and Japan as the consequence of the strenuous effort of Sir Stamford Raffles to promote commercial relations at Nagasaki.

THE SITUATION IN RUSSIA.

London, October 29.

The situation in Russia is getting worse. Telegrams from all parts of the country show that government is paralyzed by wholesale strikes which are spreading among every trade and profession.

Practically there is no railway communication anywhere in the Empire: there are no newspapers, and throughout Russia ordinary life is at a standstill.

All the schools, colleges and universities are closed.

Moscow is practically cut off, and so also is Odessa.

The Bourses are depressed and the issue of the new Russian loan has been postponed.

London, October 30.

Workmen under the leadership of students are erecting barricades in the streets of Odessa. Sharp encounters have taken place between them and the Cossacks.

St. Petersburg is at present quiet.

THE RUSSIAN TROUBLES.

London, October 31.

Telegrams from all parts of Russia are of the gloomiest description, but the day in St. Petersburg passed quietly.

Moscow is isolated. The Governor has issued a despairing appeal to the population to remain unshaken in their fidelity to the Tsar.

THE TSAR AND HIS PEOPLE.

Later.

A manifesto of the Tsar has been issued appointing Count Witte Prime Minister. He is empowered to co-ordinate and unify the branches of the administration, granting specific liberty to the people; extending the legislative power of the Duma; and enlarging the franchise.

There are indications that the strike is weakening for lack of funds.

There has been much bloodshed at Reval and Odessa. Outwardly things are quietening, but the revolt is smouldering.

THE TSAR YIELDS.

RUSSIA GAINS LIBERTY.

GREAT POPULAR REJOICINGS.

END OF THE STRIKES.

London, November 1.

A company of troops has been arrested for firing in the air at Lodz. A similar incident occurred at Warsaw.

The Tsar has issued a manifesto declaring that the prevailing troubles have filled his heart with great trouble; their continuance, he says, may become a menace to the integrity of the empire. Therefore his duty is to exert himself to hasten their cessation; wherefore he recognises that the co-ordination of the powers of the Government is indispensable. Finally he directs the Government to fulfil his will as follows:

1st.—To grant real inviolability of person and freedom of conscience, of speech, of union, and of association.

2nd.—Without deferring the election of the Duma, to enable as far as possible, in view of the shortness of time, the parties now deprived of electoral rights to participate in the Duma, leaving the ultimate settlement of the franchise to a new legislative regime.

3rd.—To establish the indubitable rule that no law can come into force unless it has received the approval of the Duma, which also is to exercise real supervision over the legality of the acts of the authorities.

Later.

The Tsar's manifesto has been placarded all over St. Petersburg. It has created great popular rejoicings. The crowds in the streets cheer for liberty and for the Tsar, and are singing the Russian National anthem instead of the Marseillaise as they were lately doing. The people surround the bewildered Cossacks, tapping the horses and the men, and saying: "You can go home; you are no longer wanted: we have got our liberty."

The strikes are ended in Moscow, in St. Petersburg, Kazan, and in Anichangel.

The railway traffic has been resumed.

FOREIGN TROOPS IN PECHILI.

It is announced in Berlin that Japan has replied to Germany's proposal agreeing to the withdrawal of troops from Pechili, except with regard to the Legation guards.

CHAOS IN RUSSIA.

Later.

The condition of affairs in Russia verges on the chaotic. The revolutionary element appears to await events triumphantly, demanding concessions of every kind, and is indulging in demonstrations which provoke collision with the troops. The latter are bewildered and being without instructions do not know how to deal with the new order of things; hence harmless popular rejoicings in several towns have led to embitterment and bloodshed.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, November 2.

The great intentions of the Tsar with regard to the proposed establishment of a constitutional government are reported to have failed. The revolutionists continue their movements. The extreme radicals are asking the Tsar for concessions which it is entirely impossible for His Majesty to consent to.

It is rumoured that Count de Witte and General Trepoff, ex-Governor-General of St. Petersburg, are at variance in their political views.

It is said that the Tsar intends to cancel his ordinance with reference to the proposed constitutional government and to establish a government drawn from the military classes.

RUINOUS COLONIAL FINANCE.

The arrangement, recently approved by the Parliament of New South Wales, to give a contract for the construction, within the State, of sixty locomotives at an average rate of 71*l*. 13*s*. 11*d*. per ton, has, says Engineering, attracted much attention in England. Tenders were invited in October, 1903, for the manufacture of these locomotives, within New South Wales, the rest of Australia being excluded. The local construction, whether by Government or by a private firm, would, it was expected, involve a considerable outlay of capital for buildings and purchase of machinery, estimated at about 30,000*l*.; but this was evidently not the reason why local competition was not keener. It was the tyranny of trade-union rules, which in Australia seem to be framed with the object of keeping work out of, instead of within, the country. The locomotive engineer of the Government railways emphatically contended that the work could not be done at less than 71*l*. 12*s*. 3*d*. per ton. He also complained of the severity of the trade-union rules, and showed that, as regards the Government shops, at present, eleven proclaimed holidays had to be paid for with no work to show for them; this cost no less than 5500*l*. in 1903. He stated that, taking all these matters into consideration, wages were virtually 2½ times those ruling at home. The Premier, continues Engineering, in answer to one of the numerous deputations on the subject, showed that the difference between the lowest local tender and that from the open market—viz., 73,350*l*.—absolutely put the former out of consideration. He continued:—"No Premier fit to stay in office twenty-four hours would throw away 73,000*l*. of the people's money, even to keep men in the State employed. It would be far better, if that sort of thing is to be done, to face the thing in a fair and square fashion, and distribute the amount to the unemployed direct, and then we should know where we were." He went on to show that for the same money that they would spend in building the engines locally they could import them, and with the balance build thirty carriages, and cut down the gradients of some of the worst portions of the railways; and in this way, as regards numbers, at all events, employ a greater number of men. After much negotiation, the Clyde Engineering Company of New South Wales, who were the original lowest local tenders, brought down their offer from 80l. 10s. 4d. to 71l. 13s. 11d. per ton. The Railway Commissioners, who are charged with the duty of making the railways pay working expenses and the interest on their capital account, can hardly be enthusiastic as to this conclusion, knowing that for the last year the average rates paid, including duties, for imported engines delivered, were 65l. 2s.; that for those now being delivered from the Baldwin Company 57l. 15s. 4d. is being paid, and that had Messrs. Beyer, Peacock, and Co.'s offer for the present requirements been accepted, 63l. 15s. 2d. per ton, including duties, would have been the cost. For the sixty engines, adds Engineering, the New South Wales people are paying an extra amount of nearly 36,000l., solely to keep less than 200 men employed for a few years.

JUDGE R. YASUDA, Chief of the First Civil Section of the Yokohama District Court, has been promoted President of the Yamanashi District Court.

ADMIRAL TOGO paid a visit on the afternoon of Nov. 7th to the German cruiser Hansa, which arrived at Yokohama the previous day from Kobe.

THE steamer Anakusa Maru has been assigned to the Navy as a transport. The Jiji says that she is one of the Russian ships floated at Port Arthur.

ACCORDING to the Boston Herald, the U. S. battleship Oregon has been ordered home for reconstruction after an eventful life of nine years in commission.

ACCORDING to Tokyo papers, Switzerland intends to establish a Legation in Japan and Dr. Paul Ritter, Consul-General in Yokohama will be Minister Plenipotentiary.

THE Emperor of Korea has decorated with the first order of merit Lieut.-General Okihara, Commander of the Fifteenth Division, which will be the garrison in Korea.

CAPTAIN MATSUMOTO, Commander of the Yakumo, has been released in consequence of illness. Captain T. Sato, Chief of Staff of the Third Squadron, has succeeded him.

THE Hochi believes that the ordinary session of the Diet will be convoked on Dec. 23rd. The Imperial edict of convocation will probably be issued before the 11th of this month.

THE Yokosuka Prize Court gave a decision on Nov. 6th as to the American steamers Australia (2,755 tons) and Montara (2,562 tons), captured off Kamchatka confiscating the hulls and cargo.

THE British despatch Alacrity arrived at Nagasaki on Nov. 6th with Lady Noel and her daughter. The British squadron under Admiral Noel arrived there on Nov. 8th, from Sascho. The squadron left on Nov. 10th for Hongkong.

A RELIGIOUS ceremony in honour of policemen of Yokohama who died in the Satsuma rebellion, China-Japan War and Russia-Japan War took place at 8 a.m. on Nov. 4th at the Shinto shrine on Noge Hill. Officials of the Kencho and other local offices were present.

A BRITISH gentleman (whose name is given by a Japanese correspondent as MacDonald), about fifty years of age, attempted to commit suicide at 4.40 a.m., on November 5th in a lavatory of the Osaka Hotel, Nakanoshima, Osaka, where he arrived on November 3rd. He injured himself severely in the throat with a knife, and was in great agony when a servant of the hotel found him. He was immediately removed to St. Barnabas' Hospital. He will recover within two weeks. As to the cause, the Jiji reports that he had a dispute with his wife which made him unhappy and dejected. About four years ago, he left home and came to Japan and has travelled throughout the country, apparently without any definite purpose.

M. NAGAI, an accountant of the Ushigome Post Office, Tokyo, was arrested on Nov. 5th in the Hanai-ro, Yoshiwara. The charge is reported by the Jiji to be that he had stolen several Government bonds of a total face-value of yen 1,359 from registered postal matter and sold them for yen 775 through a sharebroker.

THE Governor of Kagoshima reports that on Nov. 2nd and 4th terrible gales were experienced in the districts of Kawabe and Oshima. Many fishing boats are missing, and damage was caused to cultivated fields and to buildings. An official telegram from Okinawa prefecture (Loochoo islands, says that on Nov. 3rd, a destructive storm raged throughout the islands for about three hours.

A SHIMONOSEKI telegram says that fire broke out on the night of Nov. 5th on board the Amagasaki Steamship Co.'s steamer 2nd Tako Maru, then lying in the Straits, where she had called on her way from Osaka to Chemulpo. A portion of the cargo consisting of flour, tea, and sundry other goods was destroyed. The crew and passengers are safe. The cause is under investigation by the Shimonsaki Harbour Office.

THE P.M. S.S. Co.'s agency have received a cablegram giving the actual time employed in the transit of the shipment of silk—Yokohama to New York—per steamer Siberia as 16 days 21 hours, which is the fastest on record, beating the time made by the silk that the sister ship Korea carried over, by 16 hours. We think with the fast time made by these ships, as well as the connecting railroads, this makes a record that will be hard to beat.

LIEUT.-GENERAL MIYOSHI, Commander of the Second Division in reserve, a portion of the Korean Army, passed Hiranuma by train at 11.50 on November 4th on his way from the front to Tokyo. Officials of the Kencho and other offices, and representatives of the various public bodies were present on the platform. Several baskets with chrysanthemum flowers were presented and banzais were given. At 1.11 p.m., the General reached Shimbashi, where he was welcomed by officers of the Army and Naval Departments, etc. Subsequently he proceeded to the Palace, being escorted by troops of the Imperial Body Guards.

Of the newly promoted officers, the following appointments were made:—Rear-Admirals Yoshimatsu, Matsumoto, Nakada, Nijima and Okubo, Chief of staff of the Sascho Naval Station; Director of the Hydrographic Office, Chief of the Maidzuru Harbour Office, Chief of Staff of the Kure Naval Station, and Commander-in-Chief of the Dairen garrison, respectively. As the result of the foregoing changes, Captains Kajikawa, Commander of the Iki (formerly Nicholai), and Sakamoto were appointed Commanders of the Shikishima and Fuji respectively.

THE TWO ENVOYS.

Marquis Ito left Oiso at 7.53 a.m. on the 5th for Bakan where he will embark in the Sunamori and proceed to Chemulpo escorted by the Juata. He is the bearer of an autograph letter from the Mikado to the Emperor of Korea. Nothing is publicly known as to the contents of the letter or the exact object of the Marquis' journey to Seoul, but there can be little doubt that the purpose is to define and consolidate the position acquired by Japan in the peninsula. Whatever negotiations are required will be carried on by Mr. Hayashi, but the expectation is that Marquis Ito will remain in the Korean capital until everything is arranged so that his stay will probably be for two months.

Marquis Ito and his suite left Oiso at 9.30 a.m. on the 5th inst. The members of his suite left Shimabashi by the 7.20 train the same morning, and joined His Excellency at Oiso. They were Mr. Tsuzuki Keisoku, Chief Secretary of the Privy Council; Major-General Murata, Mr. Inouye Riyochi, Imperial Chamberlain; Mr. Nabeshima, Secretary of the Foreign Office; Captain Murakami, I.J.N.; Mr. Furuya, Private Secretary of the Teishitsu Seido Chosa-kyoku; Baron Takasaki, Member of the House of Peers; and Dr. Koyama, of the Red Cross Hospital. The following distinguished personages proceeded to Oiso to say farewell, namely, Marquis Yamagata, Viscount Yoshikawa, Baron Kioura, Mr. Oura, Baron Mitsui, Baroness Suyematsu, Mr. Matsuda Masahisa, the Governor of Kanagawa, the Korean Minister, etc.

The announcement of Baron Komura's mission to China was made on Monday in the Official Gazette. His Excellency will be accompanied by the same staff that attended him on his mission as Peace Plenipotentiary. Baron Komura will be on familiar ground in Peking. He served there for many years as Japanese Representative and earned signal distinction, being universally counted one of the most skilled diplomatists that had ever visited the Chinese capital. He is therefore acquainted thoroughly with all persons and things in Peking. There is a belief in some quarters that his mission comprehends more than the settlement merely of questions growing directly out of the Portsmouth Treaty, since were the latter object alone in view an envoy of such importance would not be chosen.

Count Katsura is to take charge of the Foreign Office during Baron Komura's absence.

The exact list of those that will accompany Baron Komura to Peking is Mr. Sato, Mr. Yamaza, Mr. Matsukata, Colonel Tachibana, Captain Tanaka (I. J. N.), Mr. Ochiai, Mr. Honda and Mr. Konishi. Mr. H. W. Denison goes as adviser.

Baron Komura and his suite left Shimabashi at 1.20 p.m. on the 6th instant, for Yokosuka to embark on the converted Manchu Maru, being escorted thence by the cruiser Tsushima. They expect to reach Taku on the 12th. It is believed that the Chinese Government will nominate as its Plenipotentiaries for the purpose of the conference Prince Ching, Viceroy Yuan and Mr. Na Tung. A large concourse of people assembled at Shimabashi to see His Excellency off. Among them were:—Count Katsura, Count Inouye, Admiral Yamamoto, Admiral Viscount Ito, Baron Sone, General Nagaoka, the British Ambassador, the Representatives of the United States, of Germany and of Mexico, Mr. Sakutani and many other notables.

The Envoy passed Hirayama station at 2 p.m. Many citizens as well as Government officials were on the platform to say bon voyage. Baron Komura acknowledged the courtesies by raising his hand to his hat, but the train did not stop though it passed through the station at reduced speed. The people outside the station raised hearty bansais.

Commenting on these two missions the Jiji Shimpō, while expressing full appreciation of Marquis Ito's great abilities and ripe experience, opines that the renowned statesman is tired of actual work, whether political or administrative, and that he would be content as well as pleased were his functions limited to those of mere advice. The probability is, therefore, that he will not have any very active duties to perform in Korea, and that whatever troublesome negotiations are contemplated will be entrusted to other hands. As to Baron Komura, the Jiji is constrained to admit that everything indicates him as the proper person to undertake the duty of arranging the final details of the Portsmouth Treaty, but at the same time, our contemporary thinks that if his mission has no larger object than to obtain China's acquiescence in a matter where her consent should go without saying, the work might very well have been entrusted to Mr. Uchida, Japan's Representative in Peking. What is the use of having Representatives abroad, the Jiji asks, in effect, if they can not discharge these simple functions. We gather that the Jiji is preparing materials for a fresh assault against the Cabinet. It is getting ready to cry "Is that all?" when the results of Baron Komura's mission are known.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun takes much the same line as the Jiji with regard to Baron Komura's mission. It thinks that the work might have been left to Mr. Uchida. In reading these views, however, we have to remember that neither of the journals expressing them is favourable to the present Cabinet. The Nichi Nichi gives an interesting resumé of the matters that Baron Komura will probably have to negotiate. In the first place there is China's consent to the terms of the Portsmouth Treaty. In the second, there is the obtaining of concessions for the Changchun-Kirin railway as well as for the line linking the Manchurian and the Korean systems. In the third place, there are the preliminaries for opening Antung, Mukden, Harbin and Kirin to foreign trade; and in the fourth place there is the general question of foreign trade and travel in Manchuria. It appears to us that this is a list quite sufficiently formidable to warrant the appointment of Baron Komura as Plenipotentiary, and so it will appear, we imagine, to our readers. There is, however, no gainsaying the Nichi Nichi's comment that no difficulties should be offered on China's side. What China obtains is out of all proportion to what she is asked to give. She obtains the whole of Manchuria, nothing less, and she is asked to endorse arrangements which will secure her possession of the Three Provinces. If she hesitates to conclude such a bargain she will show extraordinary want of gratitude and perception.

The Asahi Shimbun takes a somewhat novel view. It concludes that the two Missions, Marquis Ito's and Baron Komura's, have for main object to convey to China and Korea a practical and conclusive proof that peace has been restored. Therefore high personages are chosen for the function. As a matter of fact the proper order of things would be observed if the Emperor of Korea came to Tokyo to tender his thanks to the Sovereign of a country which has twice fought for the maintenance of the Korean Throne. Concerning China it is to be noted that not once throughout the whole of a war waged mainly to recover for her the possession of a large section of her empire, not once did she send a message or a messenger of condolence to the Japanese Army or Navy. Somehow, says the Asahi, we feel a sense of dissatisfaction in China's case. However, it may be hoped that both Powers will do the right thing after the visits of Marquis Ito and Baron Komura. Meanwhile the world must not fall into the error of supposing that because the Japanese wrangle about their domestic politics they are not a thoroughly united nation for purposes of foreign policy.

The Chuo Shimbun shrewdly observes that the object of Baron Komura's mission is to put life into the inanimate image constructed at Portsmouth: in other words, to give vital effect to the provisions of the Peace Treaty. The work itself may not be very difficult, but the vis-à-vis is China, and at her back is the ever-intriguing Russia. An able and strong hand is needed to face that combination. The Chuo's list of the objects of the mission is (1) To obtain the reversion of the Liaotung lease; (2) to secure China's endorsement of the transfer of the railway south of Changchun to Japan; (3) to obtain concessions for the construction of branch lines in Manchuria; (4) to obtain concessions for working the mines in southern Manchuria; (5) to negotiate arrangements for preserving peace and good order in southern Manchuria; and (6) to provide for the opening of Manchuria.

The Kokumin Shimbun explains that the object of the mission is not merely to obtain China's endorsement of the terms of the Portsmouth Treaty. Three other aims have to be achieved. First, the consolidation of the position won by Japan in the East; secondly, to strengthen Japan's relations with China; and, thirdly, to render definitely secure the peace of the Far East. It will thus be seen that the Mission has most important work to do and that a man of high position was needed to take charge of it. As to Baron Komura's eligibility for the post, there can be no second opinion; and as to Baron Komura's devotion to duty inasmuch as he consents to resume his arduous travels although he is barely yet convalescent, even his enemies can have no second opinion.

PURCHASERS OF JAPANESE BONDS BY FORIGNERS.

The purchase of Japanese bonds in Tokyo on account of capitalists or investors in Europe and America has been one of the features of recent times. According to investigations said to be official, the value of the securities thus bought reached nearly 150 millions up to the close of last September, and is still going on. The detailed figures are given below, but since it can not be clearly known whether purchases by British subjects may not have been partly intended for other nations, the table is not absolutely trustworthy:—

THE EMPEROR'S BIRTHDAY.

At 11.30 o'clock on the 3rd instant His Majesty gave audience to the Princes of the blood, the Elder Statesmen, the members of the Cabinet, and the Shinnin officials generally. Half an hour later the Emperor proceeded to the Homen-den, attended by the Princes, and there received the Foreign Chiefs de Mission. His Majesty made the following address immediately prior to the banquet:—

"It gives me pleasure to welcome the Representatives of the Powers together with my subjects on this auspicious occasion, and especially do I share with my subjects at home and abroad a feeling of satisfaction that the peace which had been broken is now restored. I avail myself of this occasion to pray for the welfare of the Sovereigns and Presidents of the Powers, and to express the hope that the relations between my country and theirs will grow constantly closer."

Count Toda, Chief Chamberlain, translated the Emperor's Speech into English.

Count Katsura, Minister President, then delivered the following address:—

"On behalf of Your Majesty's subjects I beg respectfully to express our deep gratitude for the honour of being permitted to attend this festival and for the gracious words Your Majesty has addressed to us. In common with the rest of Your Majesty's subjects at home and abroad, I deem it the greatest honour to be present on this auspicious occasion after the restoration of peace. We, Your Majesty's servants, hope to carry out the Imperial purpose by an increased exercise of zeal and diligence. We reverentially tender our congratulations and pray for the perpetual prosperity of the Imperial Family."

Thereafter the Belgian Representative, Baron d'Anethan, as Doyen of the Corps Diplomatique, delivered the following speech, which was subsequently translated into Japanese by Count Toda:—

SIRE:—Le corps diplomatique, profondément reconnaissant de l'honneur que lui fait en ce jour Votre Majesté, a entendu avec bonheur les augustes paroles qu'Elle a daigné lui adresser au sujet du rétablissement de la paix.

Le monde entier a éprouvé une grande joie et un véritable soulagement à la nouvelle de la fin de la guerre et a acclamé la paix qui, inspirée par les sentiments d'humanité les plus élevés, ajoutera une page si belle à l'histoire glorieuse du règne de Votre Majesté.

Les Souverains et Chefs d'Etat que nous avons l'honneur de représenter seront sensibles aux gracieux messages que Leur adresse Votre Majesté et ont comme Elle le vif désir de voir se resserrer encore les rapports d'amitié qui existent si harmonieusement entre nos Etats et nos gouvernements.

Dans cette circonstance mémorable nous nous permettons, Sire, en souhaitant de longues années à Votre Majesté, de Lui exprimer les vœux que nous ne cessons de former pour Son bonheur, celui de Sa Majesté l'Impératrice et de la famille Impériale.

Puisse le Japon, ami aujourd'hui de toutes les Puissances, continuer à jour des biens qui font les nations fortes, prospères et heureuses.

The banquet was entirely in Japanese style and the Emperor withdrew at 12.55 p.m.

Telegraphic messages of congratulation were received from the various Potentates of the world.

There was no Birthday Review, the intention being to hold a grand parade after the return of the troops from the front.

In the evening the Foreign Minister gave a banquet in his official residence to the Foreign Representatives and Ministers of State. It was followed by a reception, to which, almost without exception, the only foreigners invited were the members of the various Legations. Baron Komura assisted by Mrs. Chinda received the guests, among whom were Major-General Daniloff, His Grace Archbishop O'Connell and Sir John See. It was universally remarked with great satisfaction that Baron Komura, though still somewhat emaciated, seemed to have recovered his health completely. Much interest attached to Major-General Daniloff, who has come to Japan for the purpose of taking over the prisoners. The Japanese showed him marked attention. General Terauchi, Minister of War, led him to a seat and welcomed him heartily to Japan, and General Murata asked him to shake hands in token of the restored friendship between Japan and Russia and its vigorous permanency. The Russian General seemed much pleased, and the warmest greetings were exchanged. He explained that in the last war with Turkey he had been wounded in the left arm and still suffered from the effects, and in the battle of the Shaho he had received a Japanese bullet in the left foot. The bullet had not been extracted, but it gave him no pain, and he kept it as a memento of the contest with the brave Japanese. Archbishop O'Connell comes to Japan as the Pope's delegate to express the thanks of His Holiness for the treatment extended by Japan to Roman Catholics during the war. His Grace took occasion during the evening to convey this sentiment to Baron Komura in very warm terms. He said that the Pope highly appreciated the liberty of conscience granted by Japan to followers of the Roman Catholic Faith and the care and consideration shown by the Japanese forces in the field for the persons and properties of Roman Catholics the subjects of other nations. Such acts would redound to the credit of Japan throughout the civilized world. Baron Komura replied that the Constitution of Japan guaranteed freedom of conscience and the Emperor of Japan specially valued this guarantee. The privilege and corresponding protection might be permanently looked for throughout Japan's dominions.

Supper was served at half-past ten in the ball room, and the brilliant party broke up an hour afterwards.

Admiral Togo and Vice-Admirals Kaminura, Kataoka, Dewa and Uriyu were the objects of much attention.

The Emperor presented a sum of 100,000 yen for the purpose of entertaining the Army and Navy on the occasion of the Imperial Birthday.

The Prince Imperial has been promoted to be a Major-General in the Army and a Rear-Admiral in the Navy.

Ten naval officers have been promoted to be Rear-Admirals.

It is expected that Lt.-Generals Oshima, Osako and Tatsumi will be promoted to be full Generals.

YOKOHAMA.

The Emperor's Birthday was duly observed in Yokohama. The large buildings in native town were all under bunting and foreign firms besides closing for the day had also hung out their flags. The men-of-war and most merchant ships dressed in honour of the occasion and at noon the former fired a salute.

VLADIVOSTOCK.

A strange incident is reported. On the 24th of October a Norwegian steamer, the Norma, left Nagasaki for Vladivostok under charter to Messrs. Haraguchi and Company. She had full permission from the Foreign Office in Tokyo. Arriving outside Vlad-vostock on the 27th, she found the entrance blocked, as it had been during the war, but the harbour authorities sent a pilot to take her in. When her people landed, however, they were informed that they could not be permitted to stay, and in answer to their natural inquiry why their ship had been allowed to enter the port if her people might not land, they received the extraordinary reply that although, since peace had been restored, entry to the port was not forbidden to Japanese vessels, the privilege of landing could not be extended to their crews. At the harbour-master's office the still stranger explanation was offered that inasmuch as the Japanese had not allowed Russians to proceed from Dainy to Port Arthur, immediately after the fall of the latter, the Russians, in turn, would not allow Japanese to land at Vladivostok—an explanation which altogether ignored the difference between conditions in time of war and conditions in time of peace. The finale was that the Japanese had to sell their cargo at ruinously low prices to the Chinese, and to quit the port on the 2nd inst. They have a clear claim against Russia, if this be the whole story, for by the Portsmouth Treaty Japanese subjects are entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment in Russia pending the renewal of the commercial convention.

It remains a mystery on what grounds the Russians at Vladivostok refused to allow the landing of Japanese subjects from the S. S. Norma. The matter forms the subject of negotiations between Japan and Russia through the medium of the French Representative in Tokyo. It is suggested that the Vladivostok Authorities may have looked for some consular endorsement on the permits carried by the Japanese, but of course there could be no such endorsement as there is no Russian consul in Nagasaki. At all events the obstruction was not offered in the case of Japanese coming by a later steamer, and thus the fair assumption is that the Russian Authorities erred with regard to the Norma's people. Compensation will doubtless be sought for the loss entailed.

THE OSAKA "DOSHU-KAI."

A section of Osaka politicians maintain their implacable opposition to the Cabinet. The Doshu-kai of that city met on the 6th instant under the presidency of Mr. Mitani. An attempt was made to read an inflammatory declaration, but the police forbade it. Resolutions were then passed in the sense that the Cabinet must be impeached in the next session of the Diet; that the Osaka representatives must be instructed to support the impeachment; that their conduct must be strictly watched, and that any representative showing a weak mood must be rejected by his constituency at the next elections.

The local branch of the Seiyun-kai in Kumamoto has also passed an anti-government resolution and is engaged in active propagandism of its views.

In Tokyo there is evidently some indignation because the Ministry has failed to summon a special session of the Diet. This feeling is very vehemently expressed by certain organs of the Opposition, and various rumours are circulated as to the formation of a new Ministry. But the question seems to have now become purely one of party politics, if we except the writings in the Jiji Shimpō, which journal remains singularly implacable.

THE RETURNING ARMIES.

The last unit of the North-Korea Army reached Ujina on the 30th ultimo, and its commanding officer, Lt.-General Miyoshi, left that place on the 2nd for Tokyo by train. The transport of this Army from the Tumen has been accomplished with great rapidity. Thus the Saghalien and the North-Korea Armies have both been brought back. The transport of the Manchuria Armies is the next business. It commenced on the 4th instant.

In the Jiji Shimpō we find a very strong article urging extreme caution on the part of men entrusted with the navigation of transports carrying home the troops from the front. Every one of these returning soldiers is an object of gratitude to 50 millions of the Japanese people, and nothing could be more lamentable than the loss of even a solitary soldier en route for home after the long and arduous campaign.

Lt.-General Miyoshi and his staff returned to Tokyo at 1.30 p.m. on the 4th instant. The Lieutenant-General commanded the North-Korea Army, which encountered unexampled hardships, being obliged to manoeuvre in a country entirely without roads and of a most precipitous character. The Army consisted mainly of Second Reservists, men much older than the general body of soldiers. The Guards Division in Tokyo despatched a guard of honour and a band to meet the returning officers; a salute was fired in Hibiya Park and the General and his staff proceeded at once to the Palace in carriages sent by the Emperor. Subsequently a banquet was given in Baron Iwasaki's Kudan residence, the officers of the Guards Division officiating as hosts.

Lt.-General Okihara, Commander-in-Chief of the 15th Division, returned to Seoul from Pyongyang on the 1st instant. This officer and Lt.-General Haraguchi are the men of highest military rank in the peninsula. General Okihara is to remain in charge of the Japanese Garrison in Korea.

It is expected that General Baron Kodama will henceforth direct his attention mainly to the administration of Formosa and that his post of Vice-Chief of the Head Quarter Staff will be filled by a Lieut.-General whose name is not yet spoken of. Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama will resume the direction of the Head Quarter Staff on his return to Tokyo.

The War Office reports that the sum hitherto subscribed for the purposes of the war by private individuals amounts to 2,311,398 yen, of which total 2,226,305 yen has already come to hand. It was proposed to announce that no further subscriptions would be accepted as the war is over, but since money has been coming in freely of late this announcement has been suspended. Perhaps we should explain that the money in question is entirely independent of subscriptions made to special funds: it represents simply sums voluntarily sent in to the Treasury to assist the prosecution of the campaign.

The necessity for opening the office of the Kwantung Governor-Generalship having become pressing, the department was established in Liaoyang on the 1st instant. General Oshima, as already announced, is to be the first Governor-General, and it is stated that the office will be practically identical in scope of duties with that of the Governor-General of Formosa. The civil department will be administered for the present by Mr. Ishizuka, now serving at Tairen. General Oshima first came into prominence in the battle of Pyongyang during the China-Japan War. His next distinguished work was the command of the Third Divisions in the battle of Nanshan, and he won final fame in the great fight at Mukden.

A telegram from the Jiji Shimpō says that Major-General Fukushima and Major-General Aramiosky have arranged the terms for the mutual withdrawal of the Russian and Japanese troops from Manchuria. The place of conference was Supingchieh, which is northward of Changtu.

It has been arranged that when the port of Korsakoff is closed by ice communication will be maintained via Morushi Bay which lies on the coast south-west of Korsakoff and at a distance of 5 miles from Cape Kondo (formerly Notoro). A road along the shore from Korsakoff to Morushi Bay has already been constructed. Further provision has been made for wireless telegraphic communication between Kondo and Soya Capes in the event of the submarine cable being interrupted. Two powerful ice-breakers are said to have been provided at Korsakoff. Moreover from Vladimirofska which lies 36 versts north of Korsakoff, a road is now in course of construction to Maula on the west coast. Several hundreds of labourers are at work and it is expected that this road will prove a great convenience.

The Hochi Shinbun says that the gratuities to the Army and Navy are expected to total 150 million yen.

It is said to have been finally decided that Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama, General Baron Kodama and the other members of his staff will return to Tokyo in the middle of December. Doubtless this will be the occasion of a great demonstration. It seems an unjust omission that the celebration should not be addressed to those who worked in Japan as well as to those who toiled abroad. There has always been a sense of some uncertainty as to the head that should wear the chief crown of laurels for Japan's triumphs. In the China-Japan War General Kawakami received the major part of the strategical credit. He it was, according to current rumour, that planned the campaign and directed its prosecution from his office in Tokyo. But those behind the scenes knew that there was another centre of intelligence, Colonel Terauchi, who promised to be at least a worthy successor of General Kawakami. This officer, now Lieut.-General Terauchi, has been at the head of the War Department throughout the whole of the conflict with Russia, and to him must be attributed the supervision and direction of the really wonderful system of transport to which Japan's successes are largely due. Generals Terauchi and Kodama should walk side by side under the triumphal arch at the great celebration and should lead the whole procession of brilliant soldiers. Yet, as things are ordered, General Terauchi will be one of those that cheer and General Kodama will be the recipient of the ovation.

The return of Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama and his staff will be even sooner than was recently stated. He is to leave Mukden on the 27th instant and will embark from Tairen on the 1st of December, reaching Ujina on the 4th of that month. There will apparently be some delay at Ujina, though only for a brief period. The exact date of arrival in Tokyo is not stated but it will be on or shortly after the 10th.

As for the First Army under General Kuroki, it commenced to move homewards on the 7th instant. Already its second reserves (Kobi-hei) are landing in Japan, but its troops with the colours, who of course constitute the great majority, commenced their march out on the 7th. The Twelfth Division (Kokura) and the Guards will get home in the middle of December, and the Second Division (Sendai) in the early part of January.

The Russian troops in North-Eastern Korea have withdrawn completely over the Tumen.

FIELD-MARSHAL MARQUIS OYAMA AND THE ARMY.

On the 24th of October (we quote from the Asahi) Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama invited to a party in Mukden the officers in command of Army Corps, of Divisions and of Brigades, totalling over 200, and in the course of the entertainment addressed them as follows:—"The heavy responsibility of achieving the objects of the Russo-Japanese war has demanded the exercise of all our strength. But the combat is now over and peace is restored. Looking back, we see that we were engaged for nearly two years, during which our Manchurian Armies, braving the bitterest cold and enduring the most ardent heat, vanquished difficulties, overcame hardships, won a hundred victories in a hundred fights, and finally accomplished their duty. Nay more, that I, in spite of my defective ability, have been enabled to avoid any signal failure, must be primarily ascribed to the loyalty and fidelity of the officers and soldiers under my command, for which I honour them and thank them, while at the same time I can not but express my deep pain and grief on account of those that lost their lives in the combat. Now soon the greater part of the Manchurian armies will take their triumphant way homeward. It will then be for all, whether those that remain on garrison duty in Manchuria, or those that return to their ordinary military duties, or those that are disbanded and sent back to their native places, to refrain from glorifying their achievements, to remember well the hardships they endured in the field, to preserve their health and strength, to guard the renown accruing to them from their victories, and thus to leave models to future generations. The experiences we have acquired in this war are many. It is my earnest hope that all branches of the service will consider and profit by those experiences so as to utilize them as material for assisting the progress of the Empire's Army.

"Incidents likely to occur hereafter in the Far East will, I think, attract a constantly increasing share of international attention. That amid these contingencies the glory won in the victories of this war may not be forfeited, that the prestige of the country may be still further enhanced, and that the strength of the Empire may be increased, it is essential that the Imperial Army be kept thoroughly equipped and of full complement. Thus the duties devolving on us become heavier than ever. There is nevertheless room to hope that if we always advance straight and stoutly in the spirit I have indicated, we shall not be unable to achieve a considerable measure of success. Officers and soldiers, I ask you to apply yourselves with greater zeal than ever, each to his respective duties."

THE FLEETS.

The United Fleet dispersed on the 4th instant, the ships being under orders to proceed to their various stations as in time of peace, and, generally, to resume their peace status. The men will now be accorded a season of rest after their arduous labours during the past two years.

Admiral Togo and his staff have been nominated to form a Buko Chosa-in (committee for investigating naval merit), and will therefore remain for the present in Tokyo.

The second naval fête on the 2nd instant at Baron H. Iwasaki's Komagome villa was, if possible, more successful than the first. The weather, though the long spell of cloudless skies which brightened the end of October had come to an end, showed itself unexpectedly propitious and the park again presented an exquisite spectacle with its delicate promise of autumnal glories. Some 5,000 guests attended. The arrangements were as before but perhaps a little better elaborated. Nothing could exceed the evident enjoyment of the officers and blue-jackets. Admiral Togo and the Vice-Admirals were among the guests. A small group of British officers, including Colonel Hume, Captain Jackson and Captain Toke, attracted much of the Japanese blue-jackets' attention, and in the exuberant enthusiasm of their good-will the sailors finally hoisted their "British brothers"—as they called them—shoulder high. Signs were not wanting that the sake-cup and the beer-goblet had circulated very freely, but there was no case of unsightly excess; only an access of good-humour and jollity.

The Directors and officials of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha gave a brilliant entertainment to Admiral Togo, the Vice-Admirals and the principal officers of the United Squadron in the Imperial Hotel on the afternoon of the 4th instant. It appears to have been one of the most successful of the many welcomes accorded to the commanders of the victorious Fleet. Mr. Kondo Rempai presided. He proposed the health of Admiral Togo and the Vice-Admirals in a most felicitous speech, which compared the nation's anxiety on the eve of the battle in the Sea of Japan with the anxiety of a husband when his wife is in travail. He alluded also to the work done by the steamers of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha as transports, and said that whatever success they had achieved was largely due to the assistance of the Navy.

The Varyag (Soya) made her trial trip on the 28th of October, after emergence from her long sojourn on the bottom of the sea. She steamed for some 6 hours, and her performance is said to have proved conclusively that she is able to make voyages unassisted. She was to leave Chemulpo for Kure on the 4th instant.

On the 2nd instant the Admiralty at Kure entertained 1,700 of the officers and blue-jackets of the British Squadron. A thousand men of the Japanese Navy acted as hosts, and from all accounts the fête was most hilarious.

Admiral Noel and the China Squadron arrived at Saseho on the 6th instant. On the same day a reception for given by Vice-Admiral Samejima to the British Admiral and the officers of his squadron, and on the 7th the municipality organized a welcome. All accounts agree that the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The Japanese warrant officers and men of the port invited 700 of their British comrades to a banquet in the Admiralty on that day (7th). It is related that the Diadem anchored quite close to the Mikasa, whose masts and funnels show above water. Admiral Noel expressed the profoundest regret that such a fate should have overtaken a ship so celebrated. The Hochi Shimbun's correspondent says that pumping operations are proceeding vigorously on the sunken ship, but the date of her floating is uncertain.

The Varyag (now the Soya) left Chemulpo on the 5th instant for Saseho and has doubtless arrived ere now. It is just 22 months since she went to the bottom and considering how little hope of her resurrection was at one time entertained, the Japanese are to be congratulated on the result and complimented on their perseverance and skill. It is fresh in everybody's recollection that, however hopeless the Varyag's case seemed, that of the Sungari, which was sunk on the same day, appeared still more hopeless. Yet the Sungari also has been raised and is now a working unit of the Japanese mercantile marine.

The Nitaka left Yokosuka on the 6th instant at 4 p.m. for Shanghai, and is expected to reach that place on the 10th. Her second-in-command is Commander His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi. She will be the first Japanese war-ship that has visited Shanghai since the end of 1903.

The directors of the Nippon Railway Company, the Sanyo Railway Company and the Kwansai Railway Company have decided to carry to and from their native places free of charge all officers and men of the Navy who have returned from the war. The Kwansetsu Railway Company has a similar measure under consideration and so has the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

THE KOREAN CUSTOMS.

It must be a source of satisfaction to Mr. McLeavy Brown to know that in the course of his long career in the East, he has succeeded in securing the goodwill and approval of all the Powers he served. In this case the expression "a long career" may be taken literally. For his name appears in history as far back as the year 1867. Already at that date, now 38 years ago, he had acquired such a knowledge of the Chinese language as to be appointed to the acting Chinese Secretaryship of the British Legation in Peking, and it was from that post, which he happened to be filling alone, in the absence of Mr. Wade—afterwards Sir Thomas Wade—that he passed to assume the duties of Secretary to the much-talked-of Burlingame Mission. Thereafter he entered the Chinese Customs Service which has absorbed so many able men since it passed under the control of its great Inspector-General, Sir Robert Hart. There was a time 18 or 20 years ago, when for some never fully explained reason rumour busied itself persistently with the question of Sir Robert Hart's prospective successor, and Mr. McLeavy Brown was commonly spoken of as an eminently likely candidate, his large abilities being universally recognised equally in foreign and in Chinese circles. Perhaps no better proof could have been furnished of the esteem in which he was held than his selection to organise and inaugurate the Customs establishment in Korea, and certainly he justified that esteem for his career in Korea was very remarkable. He not only administered the Customs with conspicuous talent, but also succeeded in constituting himself custodian of the accruing revenue, which thus remained Korea's uniquely secure source of State income through many years of conspicuous mismanagement and corruption in all other directions. So long as the old regimen continued in Seoul it was in the very best interests of the country that Mr. McLeavy Brown should remain an imperium in imperio, and practical experience must have fully taught him his own value. Yet from the time when Japan stepped in and undertook to set Korea's financial house in order, Mr. McLeavy Brown's clear judgment seems to have convinced him that divided authority must no longer be asserted, and instead of opposing Japan's projects, as a man of less acumen would surely have done, he appreciated their value and assisted to promote them although they involved his own retirement, for it would have been plainly inconceivable that with such a record he should consent to step down and occupy an inferior position. It has been suggested that his resignation was in some degree a matter of bargaining. The best authorities emphatically repudiate any such idea. They allege, on the contrary, that he showed himself absolutely disinterested and proved, in the most practical manner, that he was prepared to make a large sacrifice in the cause of the country he had so ably and faithfully served. It may be hoped that the British Government will recognise his eminent services, for it may truly be said that he has deserved equally well of China, Korea and England.

THE NOBLES KILLED IN THE WAR.

On the 4th instant the representatives of the Nobility now in Tokyo met at the Nobles Club to hold an in memoriam ceremony for those of their order who lost their lives during the War. Prince Tokugawa, President of the Club, read the saimon, and the Minister of the Imperial Household read an address of condolence. After the religious ceremony tea and cake were served to the relatives of the deceased. The names of the nobles on whose account the rite was held are:—

Lieutenant Matsudaira Tsuneyoshi, younger brother of Viscount Matsudaira Bushu.
Major Viscount Nire Kagekazu.
Lieutenant Nogi Shōen, eldest son of General Baron Nogi.
Second-Lieutenant Nogi Hoten, second son of General Baron Nogi.
Lieutenant Kiyooka Tomei, younger brother of Viscount Kiyooka Ryo.
Major Takasaki Motohiko, eldest son of Baron Takasaki Seifu.
Lieutenant Viscount Honda Tadachiko.
Second Lieutenant Nagaoka Gozen, eldest son of Viscount Nagaoka Gobi.
Captain Viscount Kawada Kagenobu.
Second Lieutenant Oseko Sanji, son of Lt.-General Baron Oseko.
Lieutenant Ito Tsunamaru, son of Viscount Ito Sukemaro.
Major Seikanji Narufusa, brother of Count Seikanji Tsunefusa.
Sergeant Honda Yu'aka, brother of Viscount Honda Sadayoshi.
Lieutenant Count Nambu Risho.

The above fourteen all met their deaths in action or died of wounds. In addition there must have been many wounded. According to figures published in September, the number of titled noblemen, their sons and their brothers with the field armies was 192 and in addition there were 42 serving with the fleet, the total thus being 234, composed of 31 members of Kuge families, 50 of old Daimyo families, and 153 of the new nobility. The total number of titled noblemen in Japan at present is 706, and the male members of their families amount to 1,542, the aggregate thus being 2,248. It thus appears that out of these no less than 234, or more than 10 per cent, served in the Army and the Navy.

CHINA.

Considerable importance is attached to the opening of Haichow, partly because of its commercial potentialities, partly because this step is regarded as a deliberate endeavour on China's side to check the excessive growth of German influence in Shantung. The measure has been strongly advocated by Viceroy Chang, in his capacity of Southern Superintendent of Trade, and the Chinese Government has at length recognised its expediency. Our readers doubtless remember that when the Baltic Fleet was approaching Japan some commotion was caused by the appearance of a German gunboat off Haichow, and by the circulation of news that the German flag had been hoisted there. It was subsequently ascertained that the flag-raising incident was merely an exaggerated version of a surveying expedition, but none the less a feeling of uneasiness was created; a feeling which probably contributed to the step now taken by China. All the necessary arrangements in connexion with the opening have been entrusted to Sir Robert Hart.

Telegrams from Shanghai and Hongkong state that two American missionaries, their wives and a child have been assassinated by Chinese at Lienchow in Kwangtung. Later news states that the fatalities in the disturbance at Lienchow-fu were three, namely, Madame Marten and her two daughters. Three of the assaulted missionaries—Mr. Marten and two ladies—escaped in a badly wounded condition. It is not clear whether the sufferers were French, or whether some American citizens also were involved. The origin of the disturbance is said to have been some sneering remarks made by M. Marten with reference to a service in a Chinese temple.

The Yoroku Choho affirms that the Government has determined to entrust the working of the Fushun coal-mines to Mr. Fujita Denzaburo. Our contemporary adds that Mr. Fujita intends to borrow a sum of five million yen on the security of his Osaka Mine, and to employ this fund in working the Fushun field. But nothing is said as to the terms on which the mine is to be worked.

Telegrams from Peking indicate that the Chinese Government is inclined to adopt the policy of recovering all the privileges granted by her to foreigners in Manchuria. On three points she is expected to lay initial importance; namely, shortening of the period for evacuation; abandonment of the system of railway-guards, and restoration of all buildings occupied by the troops of the late belligerents. In all these matters, says the Asahi Shimbun, she will find Japan entirely complaisant. Japan is willing to abbreviate the 18-month's period to 6 months; is willing to dispense with railway-guards and is willing to transfer with the utmost celerity to their rightful owners any buildings now used by her troops. But Japan can not concede what Russia refuses. Russia it is that will make difficulties about these things and if China begins by soliciting the Japanese she will be taking hold of the wrong end of the stick. Further, she is confidently credited with a resolve to negotiate for the recovery of the Liaotung lease and for the railway concessions, and to refuse all concessions for lines not yet built. How she intends to proceed towards these objects it is not clear. If her idea is to buy out Japan and Russia by borrowing money abroad, she will be doing what Count Okuma graphically describes as driving away the wolf from the front gate and admitting the bear from the back. Besides she has to obtain the consent of Japan and Russia, who now are in the position of possessors. She will probably be wiser when the crisis comes, but the mood now attributed to her is disquieting. Count Okuma thinks that she must be forced to swallow the only medicine which will make her whole and keep her whole. But how to apply force?

It is stated that Russia's application for a concession to build the Lanchow-Ili railway has elicited a point-blank refusal from China, who declares that she intends to construct the line herself. Naturally, when a Power with Russia's record asks China for a railway concession in such a region, she virtually asks China for a weapon to be turned against China herself. It would be little short of madness on China's part to grant any such concessions. She must build the lines herself, and she can accomplish that safely by only one process.

The Niji Shimpō has a telegram from Shanghai alleging that the Japanese Government intends to demand from China the cession of the province of Fuhkien, and that the leading inhabitants of the province have addressed a memorial to Peking on the subject. It is scarcely necessary to notice such rumours except to observe that Shanghai is likely to be the provenance of many strange tales during the course of the negotiations between China and Japan. Shanghai is the home of Russian agents, whose liberty of speech and pen was very conspicuously exercised during the war. They will not be idle now. But although some of their past feats suggest that no limit can be safely set to their inventive genius, we can not pay them the very poor compliment of imagining that they started this last canard. For the idea that Japan should commence her avowed policy of maintaining China's integrity by demanding the cession of an important province is beyond all reason ridiculous.

The Niji does not think that the negotiations with China will proceed as easily as the general public imagines. That is tolerably evident from the quality and status of the statesmen she has appointed as her plenipotentiaries. The trouble is that some of the proposals which China will place in the forefront of her negotiations are matters concerning Russia no less than Japan or even more than Japan, namely, the speedy evacuation of Manchuria and the abandonment of the system of railway guards. Japan can get her forces out of the Three Provinces in the course of 6 months, nor does she by any means desire to post railway guards. But she can not possibly agree to either one proposal or the other unless Russia's consent is assured. No one knows, however, what Russia will do. We do not hear of her appointing any plenipotentiaries to negotiate with China. Possibly Japan may give conditional consent to these changes of the Portsmouth Treaty. That would be a very politic step on her part.

As for the railways, China can not reasonably oppose any serious obstacle to the transfer of the Port Arthur-Changchun line to Japan, but she may perhaps refuse to allow the military-railway now joining the Korean and Manchurian systems to be converted into a permanent route and she may refuse a concession for the Kirin-Changchun line. It appears to be uncertain whether the Russians had obtained the latter concession or whether they had merely made some temporary arrangement with the local authorities. Probably the best exit from the railway difficulty would be to transfer all the lines—those in posse as well as those in est—to an Anglo-Japanese-Chinese syndicate.

It is reported that the Russians are making themselves busy in Ili. They are purchasing lands and houses without the consent of the Chinese local authorities, and the Russo-Chinese Bank has established a branch there. Evidently the war has merely given Russia a set-back in one quarter—an immense set-back, it must be confessed, but not a paralysing one. Her expansive energy is irrepressible.

Two officials who were wrongfully arrested as being concerned in the recent bomb outrage at Peking have been compensated for the disgrace by being made a Judge in the Tientsin Police Office and a Police Cadet respectively.

The colloquial newspaper for women recently started at Peking has been suppressed by Viceroy Yuan Shih-kai lest it should divulge secrets.

According to a Peking dispatch news has been received from the Viceroy of the Shen-kan (Shensi-Kansu) provinces to the effect that there is considerable restlessness among the Chinese Mussulmans in these two provinces as well as in Chinese Turkestan to the West. It is believed, says the N. C. Daily News, that the Mullals of these Chinese Mahomedans have been secretly preaching a jihad or holy war against the Buddhists, and this with the disturbances recently started in the region near the Russian frontiers has encouraged the Mahomedans east of the Great Wall, in the Shen-kan provinces, to show discontent with the Government. It is stated that the Governors of Shansi and Honan, which are the provinces nearest the Shen-kan, have received secret orders to send reinforcements to assist in overawing the malcontents.

The autumn regatta of the Shanghai Rowing Club was held on Oct. 21st. The N. C. Daily News says that the extent to which junks interfered with the races, demonstrated the growing unsuitability of the Huangpu for regattas.

The finding of a Court of Inquiry at Shanghai into the loss of the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company's steamship Hsiehho, which was caused by a mine on Sept. 30th while the vessel was bound from Chefoo to Shanghai, exonerates the captain, officers and crew from all blame.

Governor Chao Eih-hsun of Manchuria proposes to introduce the lottery system with the object of raising funds.

Prince Chun has been appointed to inspect the now completed Yellow River bridge.

The newly-appointed Acting Second Secretary of the Waiwupu, H.E. Chu Pao-k'uei, is otherwise known to his many foreign friends in Shanghai and elsewhere as Chu Pao-fay. He left Shanghai for the North last spring at the desire of Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, who lent him to Governor Yang Shih-ling of Shantung to assist the latter in his foreign relations. When the question of sending the High Commissioners abroad came up, the Grand Councillor Hsu Shih-ch'ang (one of the High Commissioners selected to go abroad) being anxious to possess the services and assistance of Taotai Chu Pao-fay, invited him to Peking, when he was at once appointed to the responsible post of Principal Secretary and Adviser to the Mission going abroad. Then came the bomb outrage at the railway station outside Peking, which has temporarily prevented the High Commissioners from prosecuting their journey abroad, and the consequent establishment of the Board, or Ministry of Public Safety (Ching-pu). The Grand Councillor Hsu Shih-ch'ang was then appointed President of the new Ministry and Mr. Chu Pao-fay was selected to assist him in its formation and organisation. But a person of were taotai, or provincial, rank is not of sufficient standing in Peking to give Mr. Chu Pao-fay what may be termed the necessary locus standi, with the result that under the special recommendation of Grand Councillor Hsu Shih-ch'ang, the Throne has used its prerogative to give Mr. Chu Pao-fay an extra high promotion, and by a single stroke of the vermilion pen he has been appointed to a post held usually by a Metropolitan officer of third grade, or the equivalent of a Governor or Treasurer in the provinces, which is a second grade, class B, post.

It is stated that Yuan Shu-hsun, Taotai of Shanghai and Provincial Judge-designate of Kiangsu, has refused to accept the onerous and responsible post of Financial Commissioner of the Canton-Hankow Railway (representing the Hunan side of the shareholders) to which his fellow-provincials the other day elected him. It seems that it has been decided (after repeated conferences, which threatened at one time to be a serious embarrassment to those who had obtained their wish in getting back the line from the foreign concessionaires) by the gentry and merchants of Kuangtung, Hunan, and Hupeh, the three provinces through which the proposed railway is to run, that each province shall build and own the section of the line which passes through its own territory, and to this end it was decided that each of the three provinces should select a Financial Commissioner whose duty will be to raise the funds needed by his particular province for the purpose. Yuan Taotai, it seems, was selected by his fellow Hunanese to represent them on the Financial Commission, which honour he has decided not to accept.

At the annual meeting of the North-China Insurance Co. held on Oct. 25, it was resolved: That a final dividend of 7½ per cent. on the paid-up capital and a bonus of 15 per cent. upon contributory premia be paid; that Tls. 100,000 be placed to a silver reserve fund; that Tls. 50,000 be placed to the exchange and investment fluctuation account, and the balance transferred to the underwriting reserve account.

With reference to the arrest of Mr. Chang, Editor of the Chu Pao at Hankow, the Nanfang-pao says that a preliminary examination was held with Mr. Huang as the presiding magistrate and two deputies appointed by Viceroy Chang Chih-tung as assessors. When asked the object with regard to certain articles admitted to have been written by him, Mr. Chang replied that his idea was simply to impress on the Five Commissioners proceeding abroad the necessity of more seriousness and carefulness, he being afraid that they were not equal to the responsibilities imposed on them. In reply to another question as to what agitation, by the publication of his articles, he wished to create among his readers, he stated he only expressed his own views and did not wish to arouse the feelings of other people. Questioned why at all he wrote the article causing his arrest, he replied that the Press having perfect freedom to discuss any questions, it did not enter his mind, when he wrote it, that it would lead to such consequences. Why he reviled the officials? He said he could produce evidence to prove what he said about them to be true. The magistrates, unable to find any conclusive proof against him, ordered him to be temporarily confined, pending their submission of a report to Viceroy Chang on this case. Since then another examination has been held, but, as before, no satisfactory evidence was found. During trial no torture, except the inflicting of blows on the palm with a square ruler, was applied.

In the course of an article on the present agitation for Chinese control of the railways of the Empire, the Nanfang-pao says:—The British and Chinese Corporation has not violated any of the provisions of the Agreement as in the case of the American-China Development Company, and so it is difficult to take action on this score with a view to restoring the railway concession to the Kiangsu people. The energy of the agitators, therefore, is now directed to the early redemption of the railway. In regard to this, we wish to point out that the Agreement gives China the right to redeem the bonds at 102½ after 12½ years and at par after 25 years. Provided they have the necessary funds—which so far they have no knowledge how to raise, for the railway cannot be expected to pay off itself within so short a time—for the redemption of the bonds and net profits debentures after 12½ years, they can have the control and management of the railway back into their hands without any trouble. We sincerely hope, therefore, that the agitators will study the questions thoroughly and not be simply led by blind patriotism without knowing what they are doing. Wild and eccentric statements or actions can only injure their cause. Striving for the restoration of the railways into their hands is laudable, but it is more important they should at the same time bend their attention to the raising of capital for the continuance and development of the work.

THE DIET.

It is stated that the rescript convening the Diet will be issued on the 12th instant and that the official opening of the Houses will be on the 27th of December. They will then rise at once for the New Year's recess, and their regular business will probably not commence until about the 10th or the 12th of January. It was unfortunate that the Prime Minister gave a promise to convene a special session. Even had Baron Komura been able to return to Japan at once the promise could scarcely have been fulfilled. The illness of the chief plenipotentiary, which naturally could not have been foreseen by Count Katsura, has been spoken of as the principal obstacle to satisfying the desire of party-politicians, but it is plain that no special session could have been summoned pending the ratification of the Treaty by the Tsar or pending the negotiations with China which Baron Komura has just set out to undertake. Had the Prime Minister looked forward more closely, he must have appreciated these obstacles, and understood that to convene a special session prior to the date of the ordinary session would be quite out of the question. It is certain that the utmost possible capital will be made out of his somewhat rash promise.

THE BARLEY CROP.

According to the latest investigations of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the barley crop this season will be 18,706,275 koku, which is 935,967 koku (5 per cent.) less than last year's yield, and 946,577 koku (5.1 per cent.) less than the yield of an average year. At the time of sowing the prospect was excellent, and a crop of over 20 millions of koku was anticipated, but the long continued wet and chilly weather throughout the summer was as fatal to the barley as to the rice. The barley crop for the past nine years has been as follows:—

1896.....	17,340,466
1897.....	18,005,490
1898.....	20,462,053
1899.....	19,335,952
1900.....	20,398,385
1901.....	20,658,217
1902.....	18,425,626
1903.....	13,545,105
1904.....	19,642,242
1905.....	18,706,275
Average.....	19,652,852

In calculation the average the best and the worst years are, as usual, excluded.

The Jiji Shimpō has opened a subscription list for the relief of sufferers by the shortage of the rice crop in the northern prefectures.

THE RED CROSS SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

In consequence of the restoration of peace the Red Cross Society is gradually releasing its bands of nurses (kyugohan). Of these bands, consisting entirely of females, there are 81 throughout the country and 41 of them have already been released. As far as circumstances permit the order of release is in accordance with the order of proceeding to the field; which is also the rule observed in bringing home the troops from the front. Those bands that have already been released are from Tokyo 7, from Nagoya 2, from Sendai 2, from Hiroshima 2, from Kanazawa 3, from Kumamoto 2, from Kure 1, from Osaka 4, from Himeji 2, from Hiroshima 7, from Zentsuji 4, from Matsuyama 2 and from Kokura 3. There are 33 bands of male nurses at the front which will be released soon, but 23 bands which are on board ship and 14 mixed bands will be kept somewhat longer on duty. The Red Cross Society has a remarkable record in this war. It has despatched 4,094 male nurses to the interior and to the front, and by these the number of sick and wounded ministered to up to the end of August last totalled 730,000. Of course many of these were in hospital more than once, and many, having been transferred from hospital to hospital, appear several times in the lists. Yet such a number of patients has never previously been ministered to by any Red Cross Society in the world. Of course there have been casualties—78 all told—in the ranks of the Company's employees. The list includes 3 surgeons, 3 compounders, 2 secretaries, 6 principal nurses (2 women, and 4 men), 54 ordinary nurses (23 women and 31 men) and 10 transport coolies.

LAW COURTS.

Mr. Mayeda, Chief Judge of the Tokyo Local Court, has addressed to the Chamber of Commerce a letter asking for full explanations with reference to any impediments that merchants find in utilizing the law courts. The letter indicates very plainly that, in the writer's belief, such impediments have been found to exist, and have had the effect of deterring recourse to the protection of the law. The Judge does not himself offer any idea as to whether the fault lies with the procedure of the Court or the methods of barristers employed by litigants, but he does very plainly hint that rights possessed by business-men are deliberately forfeited rather than incur the wearisome and often fruitless trouble of asserting them. The proximate cause of his letter is the restoration of peace and the duty devolving upon Japanese subjects to promote with all their strength the development of the Empire's resources in accordance with the expressed will of the Sovereign. Judge Mayeda justly considers that security of property depends largely upon the efficiency and accessibility of laws, and he takes the eminently practical course of inviting merchants to set forth the results of their own practical experiences. The Shogyo Shimpō welcomes this step most heartily, and it deserves to be welcomed. We venture to suggest that the Ministry might address itself to the Chamber of Commerce with great advantage for advice as to the nature of the impediments placed by red-tape in the path of all industrial and commercial development. They are terrible impediments and it seems singular that Japanese acumen should not suffice to remove them.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR.

The appointment of Sir Claude MacDonald to be the first British Ambassador in Japan was officially announced in London on the 4th instant. It is a nomination which will be welcomed alike by British subjects and by Japanese for Sir Claude has achieved the difficult feat of making himself popular among both; and it is also a nomination whose justice will be generally recognised in consideration of the exceptionally prominent and able part the new Ambassador has acted in the Far East during the past seven years.

The general impression is that only five Powers will be represented by ambassadors in Japan, namely, the United States, Germany, France, Russia and England. The others will continue to be represented by Ministers, their interests in the Far East not being sufficiently important to call for the establishment of embassies.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi from London says that the appointment of Sir Claude MacDonald to be the first British Ambassador in Tokyo is universally approved.

The Asahi Shimbun has a very sympathetic article on the subjects. It declares that Sir Claude's record and his character suit him admirably for the post. His name first became widely known in the East when he commanded the Legation garrison during the Boxer outrages, and he acquired special interest in Japanese eyes from the fact that Colonel Shiba served under his orders. During his career in Japan he has shown himself sincerely friendly to this country, and he has also shown that he understands the Japanese people, as witness his celebrated speech at the Naval Club on the eve of the outbreak of war. No British Representative in Tokyo has ever won equal popularity, and the news of his appointment will be received with heartfelt satisfaction. Nor can it be doubted that the Imperial Court will be pleased to see him at the head of the Corps Diplomatique on occasions of ceremony.

We understand that it has been decided to appoint Viscount Hayashi to be Japanese Ambassador in London. His promotion will not be officially announced until the necessary changes in the diplomatic system have been made.

On the afternoon of the 6th instant Sir Claude MacDonald repaired to the Palace and presented his credentials as British Ambassador. The Kokumin Shimbun, writing on the event, speaks in grateful terms of England's open recognition of Japan's admission to the rank of great Powers, and declares that Sir Claude MacDonald is eminently qualified to be the first Ambassador. He made intimate acquaintance with Japanese officers and officials during the siege of the Peking Legation, and he learned to entertain towards them sentiments which inspired him to further the cause of the alliance. He is moreover a persona grata in Japan, where he has rendered himself popular among all classes.

KOREA.

It is stated that the Emperor of Korea is about to issue a proclamation ordering the abolition of the top-knot. This is a measure which was tried once before with very mischievous results. It seems a grandmotherly kind of legislation, likely only to ruffle people's feelings.

The veto upon trade and travel in northeastern Korea has been now removed, in consequence of the complete restoration of peace, and foreigners as well as Koreans are henceforth free to go and come as they please.

It is related in a telegram from Seoul to the Yorozu Choko that twenty-six literati of Korea have for some time been compiling memorials for presentation to the Foreign Representatives in Seoul. Their method has been to prepare one memorial for signature by every pair of literati, and to send each of the 13 documents thus obtained to one of the legations, the idea being that the cumulative effect of so many missives must be considerable. Our contemporary's informant alleges that three of the memorials were refused at the British Legation, and that none of them elicited a reply from any of their recipients. The literati, much incensed, are planning a more substantial protest. It need scarcely be said that their aim is to arouse foreign and domestic sentiment against the loss of independence which, they believe, threatens their country.

No special news comes from Korea. Mr. Hayashi has returned to Seoul and is said to have held with the Cabinet Ministers an interview which furnished much food for thought to these statesmen. There is great activity in political circles, but beyond that vague phase no information is given. The story that M. Pablow was to return as Russian Representative is denied, and rumour adds that Russia is not likely to post a Representative in Seoul for the present at all events. As for M. Pablow the public would not find it strange that his appearance before the Supreme Court in Shanghai proved the last chapter of his official career. That would certainly be the case did he serve any other country than Russia, but one can not always foresee Russia's methods. Assuredly we do not foresee her abstention from posting a Representative in Seoul if other Powers be represented there. Meanwhile Mr. Yuan, leader of the Il Ching-hoi, has issued a proclamation deprecating needless anxiety and urging complete reliance on Japan.

It is stated from Seoul that the intention had been to allot the Tai Won-Kun's former place for the accommodation of Marquis Ito and his staff during their stay in the Korean capital, but, the building being deficient in furniture, the house of Miss Son Tak has been selected for the purpose. The Korean Government has nominated Mr. Kato Masuo and three others to form a committee for receiving Marquis Ito. The Marquis reached Shimomoseki on the 7th and passed the night in the Shumpan-ro where, ten years ago, he held his famous conference with Viceroy Li. He was enthusiastically received at Shimomoseki. The people of Yamaguchi Prefecture are justly proud of their great countrymen.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Resolutions have been introduced in the Federal Parliament of Australia, recognising the title of the Japanese to be no longer discriminated against as Orientals, but to be treated on the footing of equality to which their achievements in war and in peace justly give them a full claim. How these resolutions will fare when they come up for discussion remains to be seen. The labour party consists mainly of men who attach little importance to international questions, their mental vista being entirely occupied by problems of wage-earning and the standard of living. They may remain blind to the palpable anomaly that a British colony should treat Great Britain's Allies as an inferior race to be ostracised and excluded from the ranks of white men. Should a more reasonable frame of mind prevail, it will be a happy thing for Australia, since she cannot find any better assistance than the Japanese will render to re-start her arrested development.

The autumn festival at Kudan commenced on the 5th instant and continued until the 7th. Additional interest was imparted to the festival by the fact that there was exhibited in the Yushu-kwan several of the 15-cent. howitzers taken from the Russians at Nanshan and used by the Japanese with great effect in subsequent engagements up to the battle of Heikautai. Some of the big Port Arthur cannon were also shown, especially a 23-cent. howitzer, originally mounted in the Laolichiu Fort, which gave the Japanese besiegers much trouble. A big Japanese 28-cent. gun was among the exhibits. This is one of the weapons to which Stoessel attributed the fall of Port Arthur.

In spite of conflicting rumours it appears to be believed in Tokyo that Japan is about to borrow a sum of 50 millions sterling abroad for the purpose of redeeming her high-interest debts. This intention is said to have been entertained for some time back, but while Japan deliberated Russia stepped into the breach. Domestic disturbances, however, have necessitated postponement of Russia's financial scheme, and therefore the Japanese loan has come to the immediate front. According to present rumours the lenders will be England, America, Germany and France. The association of the last-named Power is novel, inasmuch as she has hitherto reserved herself to meet Russian requirements, but times have changed somewhat. The terms of the loan are said to be 4 per cent interest, selling price of bonds 90, nett receipt by Japan 87 or 88, time of redemption 20 years and no security. As this money will serve merely to redeem the main part of Japan's foreign debts, it will not perceptibly affect the home market.

On the 6th instant 300 students of the Middle School in Niigata surrounded and attacked the Commercial School. The students of the latter resisted with bayonets and there were many wounded, more or less severely. The police finally quelled the disturbance. Its origin is said to have been an affair of flags, but this part of the story is very obscure.

It has been decided, in deference to the wishes of Major-General Daniloff, that the first batch of Russian prisoners shall be handed over at Kobe instead of at Yokohama as the Japanese Authorities had contemplated. The reason for this change is that the Russians desire to give precedence to the Port Arthur prisoners, these being held to have suffered more than any other section of the Russian Army. The majority of the Port Arthur men, as it happens, are at places in or near Osaka; and thus Kobe becomes the first port of embarkation. Yokohama will follow and Nagasaki will be third. Twenty-six officers were handed over in Kobe on the 7th instant.

Baron and Baroness Mori gave a garden party on the 7th instant at their Takanawa residence in Tokyo. The weather was bright and a very beautiful collection of fine chrysanthemums afforded much pleasure to the guests, of whom there were about 150, including Count Inouye, Baron and Baroness d'Anethan, General Baron Sakuma, Baron Sone, Viscount Inouye (Masaru), General Nagaoka, Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda, Lady MacDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Barclay, Mr. and Mrs. Gubbins, etc. Refreshments were served in two marquees and the party broke up at half past four.

The Rev. Alexander Sutherland, D.D., General Secretary of Missions for the Canadian Methodist Church, will arrive by the Empress of Japan on Monday next. Dr. Sutherland has been for half a century a prominent factor in Canadian life. Though a clergyman by profession he has not confined his activity to religion. His influence has been felt in politics, education, temperance and in every department of the life of the young nation. As a pulpit and platform orator he has few peers. Two years ago he delivered the Fernely Lecture, being the second from the American continent to enjoy this distinction. As Missionary Secretary he has had the direction of the work in Japan from its inception. During that time he has acquired an intimate acquaintance with things Japanese and is an ardent admirer of the country and its people. His efforts on the platform and through the press have done much to give Canadians a just conception of Japan. This was especially so during the late war. He has visited this country officially twice before, but this time is en route to West China to care for the interests of the Church he represents. His visit here will be brief.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"From the Yalu to Port Arthur," by Lieut.-Colonel O. E. Wood, formerly Military Attaché to the United States Legation in Tokyo.

THE idea occurred to Lieut.-Colonel Wood that a useful volume might be compiled by bringing together the Japanese official reports of the campaign in Manchuria and supplementing them with some brief comments and illustrative maps. The result is a small book which will be found very serviceable by any earnest student of the war, though it possesses few attractions for ordinary readers. Good authorities have said that the best information obtainable throughout the war was embodied in the Japanese official reports, but no authority has ever claimed for these reports that drier documents could easily have been compiled. Colonel Wood's book is therefore emphatically dry, but it possesses the great recommendation of being accurate and of presenting in handy form a number of documents which must form the basis of every true history of the campaign. The work covers only the first year of the war, namely, from the battle of the Yalu to the fall of Port Arthur, and it does not deal at all with naval operations. As a plain unvarnished record it will be found eminently serviceable.

"Fujisan Photographed," by H. G. PONTING.

This album contains 25 photographs of Fujiyama, taken by Mr. Herbert G. Ponting, published by Mr. Ogawa and sold by Messrs. Kelly and Walsh. We have never seen such beautiful pictures of the Sacred Mountain. Much of their charm is due, doubtless, to quality of photograph, but much also to selection of place. Mr. Ponting, directed by Murray's Guide Book, to whose authors, Messrs. B. H. Chamberlain and W. B. Mason, he dedicates the album, has had signal success in choosing positions for his camera; such success that his works seem to introduce us to a hitherto unfamiliar Fujisan. All the most exquisite of the entrancing scenes over which the graceful and grand mountain towers may be realized from these photographs well-nigh as vividly as by actually visiting the places of Mr. Ponting's choice. The public will be grateful to Mr. Ponting for this collection of illuminating photographs.

"Cherry Blossoms."

The Nagasaki illustrated monthly, Cherry Blossoms, for November is well worth reading. Continuing his papers on "Nagasaki in Days of Yore," Rev. Henry Stout deals with printing and newspapers, noting that Mr. Black's Nishin Zasshi, begun in 1872, was being printed for some months on wooden type, though metal type could be obtained by sending out for it, a type foundry having been established two years before in the capital on the basis of material and processes brought from Nagasaki. The last-named city, he says, may be called the birth-place of missions in Japan, for it was here that the idea of missions to the Japanese first assumed practical shape; from this place the call for missionaries was sent, and here the first missionaries came. He gives facts in support of these statements. There is also an interesting section on schools. Among the other contents of a good number are illustrations of the Mitsu Bishi floating dock and of the Minnesota in dock at Nagasaki.

"New Map of the Welcome Society."

The Welcome Society of Japan issue a new and revised French and English edition of their folder containing excellent maps of Japan proper, Hokkaido, with various insets giving plans of Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, and a map of Formosa, etc. It is no mere phrase to say that this work has been revised for it has most certainly been brought up to date in many ways. Such railway extensions as have taken place since the publication of the last maps are shown and particularly the network of red lines on the plan of Tokyo indicates very strikingly the great expansion of the tramway system. The same remark applies to Kyoto where tramway extension has been on a large scale. The Welcome Society's Guide Book and the maps may be had from Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, Maruya & Co., Max Nössler & Co., and other booksellers in Yokohama.

TRAINING NOTES.

There is little new to report, the wet weather at the end of last week preventing galloping, but doubtless the enforced rest will be highly beneficial to a number of the horses. Parma Violet's trainer has continued his previous treatment of the mare and has not galloped her more than three furlongs. Hitachi and Kachidoki are both looking well and should win races. Olgon did a good gallop on Monday morning and May-mie is very fit. Daylight is a game mare and may win a race, but as she is forced, by her three wins at the last meeting, into the old horse class she will have to have made great improvement on her griffin form, which appears to be somewhat in doubt. Flash's leg still gives trouble and she may be expected to run once only during the two days' racing. Star has returned to work but has not been galloped. Lola is perhaps not quite as good as she has been, and Dekimasho has been going very short. Susan looks a likely mare for a short distance, and Ruby travels well. Coot is in excellent form and so is the Miller, May-King has improved on his last meeting form and C.O.D. is reported to be going satisfactorily. Of the China Griffins those referred to last week still appear to be the pick of the batch, although Hansel may prove good over a short distance.

With the races taking place next Friday and Saturday trainers are hopley for fine weather in which to give their charges some finishing gallops; and if Friday and Saturday be fine some exciting finishes may be expected and it is anticipated that the alterations made in the Grand Stand and Weighing Room will add to the comfort of visitors and owners. Doubtless the officials who will come in for most censure will be the starter and handicapper, but owners and backers should bear in mind that the starter is often called upon to exercise his discretion about leaving some beast at the post which is an outsider, but he does not like to let the others go without him. So it happens that he lets the horses go when this animal is in a good position and when one or two good horses are not quite ready to start, having got restive under the delay. Jockeys give a lot of trouble in trying to get the best of a start, especially in the short distance races, although in justice to those riding at Negishi it must be admitted that they seldom wilfully spoil a start. It frequently happens that when the flag falls the whole lot are in line, but some being slow to get away and others very quick on their legs there is soon a good distance between the first and last and from the Grand Stand it appears a bad start, when actually it was a very good one.

From the home papers one learns that the Stewards of the Jockey Club have been compelled to issue a warning to owners that they must not complain personally to the handicapper with regard to the weight allotted to their horses, but if they consider they have ground for complaint they are to demand investigation from the Stewards and not to break out into expressions of sarcasm and wrath in the endeavour to bring home to the handicapper a sense of his iniquity.

No set of weights is ever framed that is not regarded as an outrage by some irate owner, but he should bear in mind that if the handicapper had weighted his horse on its worst form it would in all probability start with ten pounds in hand to the disgust of all the other owners who had horses entered. It is much better for an owner who considers his horse unfairly treated to run it and prove to the handicapper that a mistake has been made; of course if his horse wins it is not necessary to give expression to an opinion.

SNOW AND FROST.

Otsu, Nov. 5.—Last night, snow fell in this district to a depth of five inches.

Hakodate, Nov. 5.—Last night, the temperature was very low. On the following morning it snowed here.

Awamori, Nov. 5.—The thermometer read 32 degrees Fahrenheit last night. Snow fell.

Morioka, Nov. 5.—In this district snow has fallen.

According to the Yokohama Observation Station, on the morning of Nov. 6th the thermometer fell to 46.2 degrees Fahrenheit. This is not regarded as extraordinary, such a temperature being experienced before on Nov. 6th, 1903, and again in 1904. On Oct. 31st last year the thermometer fell to 40.8 degrees Fahrenheit.

The Yokohama Observation Office reports that on Tuesday (Nov. 7th) morning frost appeared in the districts of Kwaki and Yachibana, adjoining Yokohama. It is twenty-one days earlier than average years. The thermometer fell to 34.9 degrees Fahrenheit.

YACHTING.

Two races took place on Saturday afternoon, one each for the 21-raters and the Lark class.

The course for the 21-raters was twice round the Mandarin mark-boat and Quarantine Ship, and the first prize was the Edna Cup. Three boats started, Aimee, Edna and Witch, but the breeze a little way out proved too strong for Witch, and she upset before she could reach her moorings. Aimee and Edna were sailed under full canvas and had all they wanted. A very good race resulted in Aimee winning by about two minutes, and taking the Edna Cup.

In the Lark class, for non-winners during the season, only two boats started, Nos. 1 and 13. The latter won.

THE CAMPAIGN IN NORTH-EASTERN KOREA.

IN connexion with the return of the head-quarter staff of the Army in North-Eastern Korea, some information is published which throws hitherto unprocured light on the composition of the forces in that region. It appears that the bulk of the army consisted of the Second Division of the Kobi, that is to say, of men who were supposed to have ceased to be eligible for service outside Japan, but who were rendered eligible by the new system inaugurated last year. This Division was organized in February last—organized, that is to say, as a Division. Already a detachment of these troops had been called out and despatched to garrison Gensan when the Russians, pressing down from the Tumen, threatened that town. When Port Arthur fell at the close of 1904, these Russians in North-Eastern Korea retreated towards the frontier, and the Gensan detachment being pushed forward, occupied Sonchin at the end of February, whence the Japanese residents had been obliged to retire in the summer of 1904. There the detachment was joined by forces coming from Japan, and the whole formed a mixed brigade. At the close of April the brigade of the Second Division of the Kobi, having been fully organized, was transported to Sonchin, where it landed, and thus the Japanese Army in that part of the field became two brigades, one of the Second Division and one mixed. On the 20th of June the van of this force took Kyongsongson and in the middle of July advanced to Susong. Meanwhile in June the remaining brigade of the Second Kobi Division began to cross to Korea and was all landed at Gensan on the 19th of June. The Army of North-Eastern Korea (Hokkan-gun) was now complete. It comprised a Division and a half, mustering probably some 30,000 of all arms. The head-quarters seem to have been at Susong, and thence on July 23rd, the forward movement was resumed. Puko was occupied on was also Muson Pass, and a halt for preparations having been made, the forward movement re-commenced on the 31st of August. Stubborn resistance was made by the enemy at Changtu Pass, but he was driven back, and on the 3rd of September Hoilyong fell into Japanese hands. Just at the time of the occupation of Hoilyong northern Korea was visited by a storm such as had not been witnessed for 60 years. Terrible floods resulted, and these, occurring in a region which may be described as almost wholly without roads, rendered the business of transport inexpressibly difficult. No exertions nor any organization sufficed to keep the men fully supplied with food. During a space of from 14 to 15 days they had to be content with a one-third ration (2 go of rice instead of 6), and sometimes even less. They counted themselves fortunate when the allowance rose to a half-ration. Nevertheless they worked vehemently constructing bridges and laying out roads, to some of which they gave names commemorative of the hardships endured, as Hangen-bashi (half-ration bridge), Nigo-doro (two-go road) and so on. It should be added that the troops who suffered these hardships were all men over thirty years of age who, in the great majority of cases, had left wives and families in Japan. We may take it for granted that an army consisting of only a Division and a half was never intended to invest Vladivostock. The general impression has been that the Japanese plan included a march against Vladivostock and north-eastern Korea. Perhaps it did, but the impression conveyed by the above facts is that General MIYOSHI's forces had no larger object in immediate prospect than to drive back the Russians over the Tumen, and thus prepare for the subsequent advance of a much more formidable army. In a certain sense this north-east Korean campaign furnishes a key to the general strategical situation. Two courses were open to the Japanese Commander-in-Chief. He might either advance against Kirin and Harbin from the Mukden lines; or he might "contain" the Russians in that part of the field while at the same time, he struck at Vladivostock, regulating his advance upon Harbin in accordance with the Russian movements. If, seeing Vladivostock heavily menaced, LINEVITCH transferred a large force from his right to protect the fortress, then the road to Harbin would have been comparatively open. But if, fearing to uncover the Harbin route, he left Vladivostock to its fate, then the attack of the latter might have been pushed forward vigorously. We may assume that the Japanese did not intend to deploy in one direction only. They knew the advantages of the double objective and they would have taken care to profit by them. But it is evident that MIYOSHI's command of three brigades could never have "held up its end" in the Vladivostock district of such a field, and it consequently follows that the Japanese were not in a position to resume the campaign at the time of the Portsmouth conference. They still had large preparations to make—preparations which could not have been completed before the spring of 1906. These things are well worthy of careful consideration by the politicians who undertook to denounce the peace terms. Their hostile criticism has all along been based on the assumption that everything was ready for a rush against Harbin and Vladivostock, and that orders for the rush might have immediately followed rupture of the negotiations. But things were not ready. Several months of preparation would have been required, and in these several months Russia also would have prepared.

CHINA.

A TELEGRAM from Peking announces that in addition to Prince CHING, Viceroy YUAN and Mr. NA TUNG, the Chinese Plenipotentiaries who will meet Baron KOMURA include Messrs. KU HUNG-KI and SHIH CHANG. From this list of names it may be inferred that China regards the pending negotiations with some trepidation, but such a conclusion can not be justly drawn until the exact capacity in which each of the nominees is to act has become known. Thus one telegram speaks of Viceroy YUAN serving merely in a consultative capacity and it may be that similar modifications apply in the case of the others. China has no reason whatever for apprehension in this matter, and still less reason for hesitation or distrust. She is receiving at Japan's hands an immense boon, nothing less than the restoration of an integral part of her Empire, and she has for vis-à-vis not Japan only but also England, both of which Powers have constituted themselves guardians of her territorial integrity. In such circumstances any show of hesitation to accede to Japan's just proposals would be a signal display of ingratitude and short-sighted statesmanship. On the other hand, she is in a manner bound to accept Japan and England's interpretation of the "open door." It is an essential part of their policy in the Far East that territorial aggressions should be checked, not so much by armed force as by the creation of common interests demanding peace and the preservation of the status quo for their development. Experience has clearly showed that the sole route to such a goal is by removing restrictions upon trade, residence and travel, and by breaking down all barriers to free intercourse. China, for her own sake not less than for the sake of peace, must endorse the steps proposed by England and Japan for the attainment of these objects, and must actively assist in whatever collateral arrangements the two Powers may deem essential. For example, if Manchuria is to be opened to foreign trade, it will be absolutely necessary that there should be established and put into active operation machinery much more efficient for the preservation of good order than anything hitherto provided by the Chinese themselves. The Hunghutz must disappear, and so must the pirates who infest the Liao River. China will have to be more in earnest and more perspicacious than she has usually showed herself in the past. She must divest herself of all suspicion towards Japan and England, and unless she can do so her statesmanship will forfeit the first substantial opportunity furnished by her modern history for insuring her own pacific and prosperous development, and for averting the many aggressive perils that now threaten her. Rumour, however, attributes to her an unfortunate mood. We can only trust that rumour is mistaken.

The estimated income of the Formosan Government for 1906—from April 1st, 1906 to March 31st, 1907—is as follows:—

	Yen.
Ordinary	25,464,402
Extraordinary	453,903

The figures show an increase of yen 5,805,135 over that of the previous year.

"ROMAJI."

ANOTHER enterprise has been started with the object of popularizing the Roman script as a substitute for Chinese ideographs and Japanese kana. Several years ago the desirability of such a substitution found many advocates. A Romaji-kai was organized and it published a weekly journal to which several prominent men became contributors. Many must remember with what admirable perseverance this Romaji-sasshi was compiled and printed week after week, though it never brought a sen of profit to its editors. At length, however, it died of inanition, and the public agreed to believe that no place existed for such a periodical. But now, when nothing indicates any renewal of interest in the attempt, another periodical, the Romaji, has made its appearance, and another Society, the Romaji-hirome-kai, has been organized. Among the projectors we find men of such note as Messrs. UEDA MANNEN, WATANABE KUNITAKE, MITSUKURI KOKICHI, NANJO BANYU, BARON KANDA and others of not less prominence in the world of letters. Anything undertaken by such scholars is quite sure to be prosecuted with vigour and ability, but as to success we dare not speak confidently. It has often been urged that since the Japanese language is capable of phonetic use for conversational purposes, it must be capable of phonetic transcription. Such has always been our own conviction. Nevertheless we fully recognise, as every one even partially acquainted with the Japanese language must recognise, that immense difficulties have to be overcome; difficulties which have increased rather than diminished during recent years owing to the extraordinarily rapid development which the language has undergone. It is extremely doubtful, for example, whether an article from one of the leading Tokyo journals, as they are compiled today, would be comprehensible if printed in Romaji, for it would certainly contain words which could not be understood without the aid of ideographs? "Why employ such words?" is the query naturally presenting itself. "Can not articles and essays of all kinds be written in language lending itself to phonetic rendering?" Assuredly they can. The new magazine is itself a proof of the possibility, for its ten pages do not contain so much as one word that needs an ideograph for interpretation. But on the other hand, the magazine proves something else also. It proves that immense sacrifices have had to be made in order to attain this simplicity of diction, sacrifices involving the adoption of a style quite intolerable to literary men. Nor is that the sole objection. Much more cardinal is the fact that had Romaji been substituted 25 years ago for ideographic script, the growth of the Japanese language could never have kept pace with the development of the nation's intellect. Hundreds of new words which have found their way into use through the medium of the ideograph, would have been incomprehensible if written in Romaji, and their incorporation into the vocabulary of educated men must have been long, if not permanently, deferred. Testimony is incidentally borne to this fact by a notice appearing in the last column of the periodical, where we read:—Tadashi, nar-bek Kango (Chinese words) wo suknak site itadakito sonji mas. The editors deprecate the use of all Chinese derivatives and intend themselves to eschew their use. What that means for the language we need not explain: the thing is patent to every student. But this extract invites another comment, namely, a comment on the extraordinary method of transliteration adopted by the editors of the Romaji. Nar-bek is their manner of writing naribeku and site is their rendering of shite. They are not even consistent, for it will be observed that in the same clause they spell tadashi with an h and shite without one. How on earth could any one imagine that nar and bek, two essentially monosyllabic words, are intended to do duty for the dissyllables nar and beku? Observe what this system becomes when it is applied to words like hairu and kiku. They become hair and kik, and cease to bear any resemblance whatever to Japanese sounds. Are the compilers of this periodical ignorant that dissyllables can not be transformed into monosyllables without a radical change of pronunciation? They can not be thus ignorant for they include among their number many eminent scholars. It appears to us that a newspaper which employs such an eccentric system of transliteration will tend to bring romaji into ridicule rather than into favour. Sisi does not spell shishi in any language under the sun, nor could any unsophisticated person imagine that notsi was intended to convey the sound of nochi. It was always to us quite incomprehensible that a group of Monbusho students should have had the unwise temerity to alter an excellent and prescriptively established system of transliteration for an arbitrary, defective and entirely novel one. Since, however, no attempt was made to enforce the new system, and since books—notably readers—transliterated according to the old system, continued to receive the imprimatur of the Educational Department and to be freely used in the schools, we had hoped that the proposed changes might be regarded as a momentary vertigo on the part of some faddists and that they would be suffered to pass quietly into oblivion. Here, however, we have them adopted in a publication intended to popularize the substitution of Roman letters for ideographs, and we have them supplemented by fresh eccentricities which are, if possible, less rational.

FIRES.

An outbreak of fire occurred at 8.30 a.m. on Nov. 7th in a Chinese restaurant, the Yuen-Pa-lung, No. 187, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama. The flames were immediately put out so that damage was limited to the ceiling and the side walls of the kitchen. The cause was negligence. At 10 a.m. on Nov. 5th, fire broke out at Kamakura destroying a building belonging to S. Shimidzu, a wealthy timber dealer. Negligence is also reported to be the cause.

KING'S DAUGHTERS CIRCLE.

A meeting of the above Circle was held on Thursday morning at Clausen's Hotel, Mrs. Manley in the chair. There were also present Mesdames Irving Bell, E. C. Davis, F. M. Tegner, Gibbens, Thompson, Hegt, Wilson and Macbeth, Misses Mendelson, Lloyd Thomas, and K. Hall. After the usual business had been discussed the disposal of funds was considered and the amount of profit at the recent entertainment at the Public Hall was announced, yen 332. The President, making some remarks on the Circle, said she had before her the resignations of three members who, she regretted to say, joined the Circle with the impression that they would not be called upon to do anything whatsoever, and when they were asked to help wrote and desired that their names be withdrawn from the list of members. She had also heard from two or three others that they were given to understand that the Circle was very much in need of money (and this idea she was sorry to find had spread around among quite a number of people) and they joined with the idea that perhaps their yearly subscription would help increase the funds, which no doubt it did to a small extent, but she knew they would all agree with her that as long as the Circle had a fixed deposit in the bank of yen 500 they were not in a stranded condition. It was not at all agreeable for her to have to write or ask members to do certain things for the success of the Circle and then to have them reply, as they had done in one or two cases, that they joined on the understanding that they should not be asked to help. They should live up to their motto and lend a hand. She knew there were some whose time was very much taken up, but if the willingness was there they could manage it somehow. If there were any who allowed their names to be enrolled as members with this understanding (that the Circle only needed their money and not their help) the officers and President would much prefer they would withdraw their names from the membership list, as it would make it much easier to know in appointing committees that every one who was a member was willing to do her share of the work.

CUSTOMS APPEAL.

Baron Sone, Minister for Finance, gave a decision on Oct. 30th in an appeal lodged by Messrs. Delacamp & Co., of Kobe, against the Kobe Customs. The firm imported five thousand casks containing wire-nails in June and paid import duty of yen 2,887.88 for the whole lot. Subsequently, a fire occurred in a shed in the compound of the Customs by which 1,925 casks were damaged. The damaged merchandise was sold at auction, and only yen 3,161.20 was realized as net proceeds. The importers therefore asked the Kobe Customs to make a reduction in the duty already paid for the damaged casks. The director of Customs refused to accede to the request, so an appeal was instituted.

The appeal was dismissed on the ground that there is no provision in the regulations or laws meeting such a case as that presented by Messrs. Delacamp & Co.

Another decision was delivered by Baron Sone, Minister for Finance, in an appeal brought by Messrs. Heller Bros., No. 176, Yokohama, against the Yokohama Customs. The firm imported aventurine glass, on which the Customs imposed 30 per cent. ad valorem duty under No. 470 of the tariff and 10 per cent. ad valorem war tax. The importers contended that imitation precious stones should be dealt with in accordance with No. 469—"all articles, raw or unmanufactured, not herein enumerated"—and the duty should be 10 per cent. The appeal was rejected.

MR. BATCHELOR'S AINU APPEAL.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of the following on behalf of the appeal recently made by Mr. Batchelor in these columns.

THE CAUSE AND MEANING OF THE JAPAN-RUSSIA WAR.

(FROM A LECTURE BY PROFESSOR CLAY MAC-CAULEY, A.M., IN BOSTON, MASS. U.S.A.)

A thousand years ago, during the Dark Ages in Europe, when the fleets of the Saracens were ravaging the islands of the Mediterranean and threatening decadent Christendom with the faith of Islam; when Charlemagne was building his empire upon the ruins of that of Rome; when the marauding Norsemen were raiding the sea-bordering lands and the islands of western Europe, and laying foundations upon which, at length, arose the mighty nations now there; a petty principality was founded among some savage Slavonic tribes at the head of the Gulf of Finland. Some of the adventurous Norsemen had made their way along the Baltic Sea, eastward. One of their chiefs, Rurik, in the Ninth Christian Century had secured acknowledgement as prince, at Novgorod, a Slavonic tribal centre near the site of the present St. Petersburg. Then began there the sovereignty that, in time, became the Russian Empire.

But, on the opposite curve of the earth, a thousand years ago, there was, already highly developed, the Empire of Japan; and there, probably for the fifteen hundred years before, that empire had existed, and had been ruled by one imperial family whose head was revered with the unreserved loyalty of a host of devout subjects.

Japan like Europe, had had early periods of ignorance and savagery. In times long before historic records began, there had been on Asia's coasts adventurers very like the Normans in Europe. There were two groups, at least, of these wanderers, who, originating probably among the ancient tribes of central Asia, had landed in Japan, and, in succession, had conquered Japan's aborigines. The second body of invaders made themselves supreme rulers of the islands. It was they who, even before the days of Alexander and Caesar, founded the Japanese Empire; an empire that, since then, has endured, without a break in its line of imperial descent. A thousand years ago, consequently, the empire of Japan was already old. At that time the imperial residence had been long established in the city of Kyoto, where it remained undisturbed until only thirty-seven years ago. It was then that Japanese literature attained classical excellence. Then, too, personal and social luxury had become the privilege and distinction of a special class among the people. In fact, the empire of Japan, ten hundred years ago, was politically and socially abreast with, and, in some ways was ahead of, any other of the world's nations. Its genius and dominant motive were markedly different from those of any people in Europe, but in its own ways the empire had attained to high degrees of mental power and of social order. It had, in fact, secured as large a measure of popular contentment as was to be found anywhere else in the world.

The motive dominant in the Japanese empire should be considered here, in order that we may the better appreciate the after-career of the people. That motive has its source in a religious principle. This principle is not unique for the Japanese, but it is without its like, probably, in its persistence through the empire's remarkable historic vicissitudes. Every judgment about the Japanese people must be regulated ultimately by this principle,—the belief, namely, that the Imperial family is of divine descent; that in the person of the emperor is the earthly representative of the gods; and that Japan is a land peculiarly under divine care. Where Japanese history fully merges from tradition (as it does in the Sixth Century of our era) it discloses living on Japan's islands many great families, or clans, held together by loyalty and reverence for a common ruler, believed in as divinely born and clothed with the authority of heaven. Whatever there is of any other aboriginal religious faith and worship surviving among the people, has been subordinated to this imperial tradition. Before the Tenth Century, Buddhism was accepted by the Japanese as their popular religious creed. But the faith of the Buddha had not found favor without its first having been harmonized with the imperial tradition. In later centuries Confucianism, too, became a mighty regulative social code. But it, also, did not receive acceptance without being made to support and stimulate the fundamental national faith.

This, then, is the principle peculiarly distinctive of the Japanese empire,—a religious tradition. This principle is to be kept clearly in view whenever we consider Japanese thought and life. It has controlled the past course of the Japanese people throughout; and to-day, whatever the Japanese may know or be, however rationalized and scientific, even so that the literal meaning of the ancient story has disappeared from belief, the motive force of the tradition abides, and is sovereign over body, mind, and soul of the whole people. To them all, at least in idea, the State is embodied and visible in their Emperor. Over all else, therefore, the imperial sanctity is supreme.

During the thousand years that have passed, since Rurik founded the principality that became the Russian empire, and since Japanese imperialism culminated in a unique national civilization, marvellous events have happened for each empire. And recently, impelled by the motive distinctive and dominant for each of them, these empires were forced into a conflict with one another whose issue is not only momentous for themselves, but is sure to affect for good or ill the whole world.

The career of Russia, directed by its own motive force, has been, every one knows, one of almost unceasing effort at territorial expansion, and for absolute domination of the nations lying in its path. At the outset, under their Norman leaders the Slavs began making conquests towards the south of Europe. Near the Black Sea they set up their first important capital. There, missionaries of the Greek church came to them, nine hundred years ago, and they received the name, Christian. But afterwards, without a continuing central political bond for their extending dominions, the invading princes were plunged into bloody and profitless civil wars. Then they became vassals of the mighty Mongol hordes who, under Genghis Khan in the Thirteenth Century, had bound the tribes of northern Asia into one empire, reaching from the Japan Sea to the Baltic waters. The Russian principalities thenceforward, for more than two hundred years, (1224-1462) were compelled to pay tribute to, and to swear fealty to, the Mongol sovereign;—the Khan, who dwelt in the far east of Asia, on the river Amur, near the seat of the war just closed.

In the Fourteenth Century the Mongol empire was disintegrated. Then it was, that Ivan the First, ruling the liberated Russian principalities, founded the actual Russian monarchy. Towards the end of the Fifteenth Century, the third Ivan, "Ivan the Great," through dreadful crimes against human freedom secured the submission of all the Russias to his sceptre. Also, he delivered his dominions from whatever Mongol influence remained in them. Under his sway it was, that modern Russia, the autocratic Russia that is to-day, began and entered upon its course of world-aggrandizement. It was, indeed, a savage emancipation that the Russians wrought for themselves. The two centuries of subjugation to the tyranny of the Mongol Khans had taught them terrible ways; and terribly did they turn upon Asia, the land of their tyrants, and force into it their conquering path.

In the Sixteenth Century, the fourth Ivan, (1533-1584) "Ivan the Terrible," first took the title of Czar. The record of this Ivan's reign was written in blood. It has been described as "an era of mad tyranny" in "seven epochs of massacre." Choosing Asia as his spoil, he employed a brigand chief, Yermak, a Cossack, as his agent. Yermak, at command of the Czar, in 1582 crossed the Ural mountains and took possession of Siberia. The Cossack avengers of Russia's Mongol past rapidly seized all northern Asia. Russian traders were on the Okhotsk Sea, in the Pacific Ocean, in 1639. They were in Kamchatka and on the Amur River twelve years later. But on the Amur their march of conquest was for the time checked. The Manchus, who had just conquered China, successfully withstood the Russians there. In 1688 the Russians released their hold on the Amur River not to resume it again until fifty years ago.

At the time of this first check to Russia's advance in the Far East, the most potent and decisive event, probably, in the history of the dynasty of the Czars occurred. That was the reign of "Peter the Great." Peter the Great it was, who gave definite and positive form to Russia's distinctive policy, and led the nation into the particular series of acts which lie immediately back of the recent war in Manchuria. At the close of the Seventeenth Century (1682-1725), Peter became Russia's sovereign. "A tyrant who," it is said, "devoted tremendous and real patriotism to perfecting a permanent system of despotism." Ambitious, envious of the power and wealth of civilized peoples, he laboured to supplant the prevalent barbarism of his empire with the world's best inventions and arts. He travelled through Germany, Holland, and into England, studying their industries and sciences. His dream of imperial aggrandizement at first pointed westward. He sought especially therefore to develop his country as a naval power. He moved the capital from inland Moscow to St. Petersburg on the sea-coast. He took the title of "Emperor." He made himself absolute autocrat in the government. He also assumed supreme authority in the church. The famous document called "The Testament of Peter the Great," is probably a forgery. It gives directions to Peter's successors concerning what should be done in order to make Russia sovereign over all Europe. Yet, probable forgery though the testament was, its meaning certainly is that which pervaded Peter's policy. And the purpose of the testament has been confirmed by Russia's subsequent history. "Peter the Great" brought his empire into the circle of European politics, so it has been said, turning "Russia's rulers away from home affairs and the regular development of internal institutions, to foreign matters and to the creation of a great military power."

From Peter's reign forward notably the course of the Russian empire has been, more than anything else, one of aggression. Westward, the ancient kingdom of Poland soon fell a prey to the Czar; southward, the empire was extended through the Crimea to the Black Sea and towards the Caspian. But at those limits, Russia's march was successfully resisted. In Europe, a barrier against the Czar's widening autocracy was then raised which, so far, except recently in Finland, has remained unmoved. This check to Russia in Europe, however, seemed to serve chiefly as incitement to renewal of the advance into Asia and the Far East. And with this renewal the movements which bear directly upon, and are involved in, the conflict with Japan were, gradually, developed.

Meanwhile how had it fared with the "Empire of the Rising Sun?" Japan's career was one of direct contrast with that of the "Land of the Czars." During the ten centuries, the course of the Mikado's empire was at the farthest remove from either expansion in territory, or, with one exception, attempt at the conquest of neighboring peoples. Indeed, for more than a fourth of these centuries Japan was a land shut up to itself;—its rulers devoting the energies of the people then to efforts at self-protection, to the development of their country's resources, and to popular culture of the industries and of the arts and the graces of social order. And besides, after the culmination of its civilization in the Eleventh Century, Japan was, for some hundreds of years marked by a pathetic national degeneration.

The record is that during the luxurious refinements to which the imperial court yielded between the Seventh and Eleventh Centuries, leading official families began to appropriate for themselves the administration of state affairs. In the Twelfth Century this usurpation became definitely embodied in an officer who secured for himself, with specific meaning, the title, Shogun, that is the "Generalissimo" who commanded the ancient armies of the Emperor. In this way it happened, that from the year 1192 until only in 1868, though the sacred traditions sanctifying the Emperor remained and were even strengthened in the devout imaginations of the people, the actual ruler of the empire was this Shogun, a usurping subject, who governed the realm in the Emperor's name, and as his plenipotentiary representative. The Emperor, however, had really become then the Shogun's subject. Professedly, the Emperor had only withdrawn from visible direction of the State. But, in fact, the imperial person was thenceforward lost to view in a mysterious seclusion in the Kyoto palaces from which it did not reappear until after the revolution that destroyed the Shogunate within the memory of the generation now living.

With the establishment of the Shogunate, Japan's degeneracy as a State, rapidly increased. Yet, in one direction, the age of the Shoguns was of incalculable worth. The course of its events brought the people under the sway of militarism. It rehabilitated the warrior. In China, the soldier was an object of popular contempt. Under the later reign of the pre-Shogunate emperors of Japan, the warrior class had fallen into a like contempt. But under the Shoguns, so great was the ambition of rival clans to possess the Emperor's person and to rule in his name, that the empire speedily became a camp of warring hosts. For centuries, then, it was so much an arena of battles that the people were made eminently ready for these present days in which they have been compelled to carry on a struggle for self-preservation. But in almost all other ways, Society, State and Church were dragged downwards by the Shogunate domination.

From the Thirteenth Century onward civil wars prevailed. At that time the warrior, more than at any time since the ancient days, became the Empire's lawgiver and master. Still, notwithstanding civil war, the devotion of the Japanese to their country as against foreign enemies remained. For it was while this internecine strife was fiercely raging that the only formidable attempt ever made at armed invasion of the "Island Empire" took place. The invaders were terribly repulsed. The Mongols whose sway at that time covered Northern Asia and European Russia, coveted the possession of the Japanese empire, too. Kublai Khan's mighty fleets twice sailed to Japan's coast towards the close of the Thirteenth Century. Scarcely any of the scores of thousands of these invaders returned to Asia. In this Thirteenth Century, too, even the Buddhist priesthood was turned into an armed host and became a mighty military power. Moreover, at one time in the Fourteenth Century, hostile feudal chiefs went even so far as to divide the imperial house. For sixty years two descendants of the emperors were upheld as rival emperors. The upholders of the Northern Court at last were triumphant. And they monopolized the imperial rule for the next two hundred years. Yet, mainly because the traditional head of the empire was still the puppet of usurpers, the fierce warrior mood remained throughout the nation. The chiefs of many clans continued to be rebellious towards the Shoguns and mutually hostile. In the Fifteenth Century, so it happened, Japan fell into the darkest and most degraded era politically, religiously and socially, in the empire's history. Only that one power of notable excellence, to which I have been calling attention, then flourished; skill in the use of deadly weapons, and in the strategy of battle. In fact, it was largely in that fierce "Dark Age" that the power was gained which now makes the Japanese people, in defending their national life, the wonder of the world.

This national chaos continued until the middle of the Sixteenth Century. Then came deliverance. The founders of a new civil and social order, in which the Japanese were steadily prepared for the era upon which they entered fifty years ago, appeared. Just about the time that the Czar, "Ivan the Terrible," sent the Cossacks across the Ural mountains (1583) to make conquest of Siberia, three great men in Japan were enabled to bring order out of their country's chaos. Nobunaga, a devoted patriot, in 1573, wrested rule over the State from the degenerate Ashikaga Shogunate. He crushed the military Buddhist priesthood, and delivered the capital and the Emperor from their power. Then, Hideyoshi, with Nobunaga's followers, forced the warring clans into a semblance of peace. And then, Iyeyasu, in 1590 instituted, with great wisdom, the Tokugawa Shogunate that lasted until but thirty-seven years ago. It was under this Tokugawa Shogunate, in 1624, that Japan was shut up from intercourse with the rest of the world. The Tokugawas did this, above all else, for the protection of their country. They wished for opportunity in which to unify the discordant nation. They saw that the Portuguese and Spanish priests, who had come to Japan in the century before, were political plotters rather than religious teachers. They felt that under their machinations civil chaos could easily come again. For the sake of self-preservation, therefore, they excluded the Europeans from their country and almost wholly shut up the land from the outer world.

For the two centuries and a half thenceforward, Japan remained practically unknown to the West. But within its borders wonders were being wrought. Civil war ceased absolutely. The profession of arms was still served and it was masterfully encouraged among the hundreds of thousands of remarkable warrior-knights called Samurai. But letters were revived, and the refinements of art were furthered. The science of civil order was highly developed. Before the Nineteenth Century opened, Japan had become again, and more than ever, a compact nation, under wise laws by an unquestioning patriotism. During this period, too, the imperial idea was restored to prominence and reverence. Then it was, that forces were unconsciously set at work by the Shoguns themselves, forces which finally compelled the breaking down of the Shogunate, and the empire. When Commodore Perry went to Japan fifty years ago, he merely hastened a revolution, already preparing there, for the return of the Mikado to a visible throne, and for the concentration about his visible person of the people's devotion; and he opened a way for the maturing of the patriotism that enables the people to-day to consecrate property and life for service to the Imperial House and to their home-land.

So, during the past ten hundred years, it is evident, that the careers of the two empires lately at war have been over ways almost wholly unlike. Russia, except for its temporary subjection to the Mongols, has from its founding followed a path of almost unstoppered national aggrandizement, and has fixed for itself a policy of world-conquest. Japan, on the contrary, has had to undergo a pathetic struggle for existence; first in suffering from the ambitious feuds of its own clans seeking to hold the imperial power for themselves; and then in resisting frequent attempted encroachments upon it by adventurers and nations of the Far West. History thus presents these two empires in two sharply contrasting attitudes—that of oppression on the one side and that of self-defence on the other.

In these two attitudes we discover the whole cause and meaning of their late war.

At the close of the Seventeenth Century, as we have noted, Russia's eastward advance was stopped at the Amur River. But the Czar's subjects were never at rest under this restraint. They could not leave the near-by "Island Empire" to itself. More than a hundred years ago, a Japanese scholar warned his countrymen that the Russians would sometime endanger their northern coasts. He advised preparation to resist the invaders. His book was seized by the Shogun's government, as dangerous to the public peace; the author himself was imprisoned. Only a few months afterwards, a Russian ship entered one of Japan's northern ports. Then, within twenty years, in spite of the entreaties of the Japanese, Russian ships six times entered their ports; their commanders pretending to return Japanese sailors, whom, however, they had kidnapped elsewhere. Also, frequently they encroached upon Japan's northernmost islands. Indeed, had it not been for the wars of Napoleon then raging in Europe and endangering the Czar's Government, probably even then, Russia would have sought to lay conquering hands upon Japanese territory. As it happened, however, there was no threatening contact with Russia until the Russian advance in Asia was again resumed in 1854. Then, the Amur region was once more seized; and then Vladivostok was founded, directly opposite Japan's island of Yezo.

Thirty years afterward a really portentous alarm over Russian cupidity was sounded. The island of Saghalien was practically forced away from Japan under the guise of an exchange for the farther Kurile Islands which already were Japan's property. These islands, however had been arbitrarily occupied by the Cossacks when they first crossed Siberia two hundred years before and were claimed as Russian territory. The Japanese empire was helpless before this spoliation, having then just begun its modern era, and being, as yet, without the arms or military drill of Europe. Moreover, from that time onward, the Japanese were constantly confronted by the intrigues and advances of Russia in near-by nations. At the courts of China and of Korea the plottings of the Czar's emissaries repeatedly became evident. In China, Russia did much to increase the Chinese dislike of Japan, arising because of Japan's acceptance of Occidental civilization. In Korea, which faces Japan across a narrow strait, the Russians sought continually to gain favor for themselves and to increase the people's hostility to Japan because of her new national development.

At last the irritating friction between the Island Empire and her neighbours culminated. It took shape as the "China-Japan War" of 1895. China, largely instigated by Russia, had been induced to become the aggressor in Korea, violating there her own long existing compact with Japan. In that war the Japanese were victors. The Japanese thereby, for future self-protection, took possession of Port Arthur and the southern peninsula of Manchuria. Russia then, as is known to all the world, under plea of maintaining peace in the Far-East formed a coalition with France and Germany and demanded from Japan the restoration to China of Port Arthur, and the Liaotung peninsula. Again, too weak to resist Russia's injustice, Japan submitted. Within three years afterwards Russia herself laid hold of Port Arthur; began to draw Manchuria under her domination, and even to set in motion plans for the absorption into her dominions of Korea, too. With these aggressions the Japanese were confronted with the fact that, at last, the momentous crisis, foreseen and dreaded for many years, had come. They saw clearly that a life and death struggle must be accepted; a struggle whose issues involved the very existence of their own nationality. At once, consequently, they began to prepare for the conflict that measured them against the "Military Colossus of the World."

Those who have followed the diplomatic history of the Far East during the last four years, know how earnestly Japan sought to avoid the impending struggle. Yet, the Mikado's government could not ignore the increasing Russian army in Siberia; the enlarging Russian navy; the political and commercial aggression manifest in Manchuria, and the steady encroachments of Russian adventurers in Korea.

Finally, the fatal day could no longer be deferred. So, in July, 1903, the Mikado's government addressed a note to the Czar of Russia asking for an agreement by which the questions disturbing the relations of the two empires might be settled. Japan sought above all for assurances, which should be mutual, that the independence and integrity of China and Korea should be respected; and that both their governments should maintain equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in those countries.

For six months a tiresome diplomatic correspondence followed:—Russia acceding and promising, then evading her promises and raising new issues; Japan keeping steadily to the main question. As long as there was reason for hope that Russia would carry out her engagement with China concerning the military evacuation of Manchuria, Japan waited. But Russia steadily continued to fasten her hold on Manchuria. Also she made new demands on China and increase her interference in Korea. Then in February 1904, when Russia was fully unmasked and the Japanese were practically told that the question concerning Manchuria did not concern Japan at all; that even the Korean question was therefore to be an open one, the Mikado declared war.

"We have made it our constant aim," the Emperor announced to the world, "to promote the pacific progress of our empire in civilization."

THE LAW COURTS.

GIELEN V. CHAO WEI LI.

The action in which Mr. H. V. Gielen petitioned against Chao Wei Li, a Chinese merchant, for affirmation of the purchase of property from the defendant, came up again on the 2nd in the Yokohama District Court. Judge Yasuda delivered judgment in favour of the plaintiff.

THE BITE OF A DOG.

Judgment was given on Nov. 6th in the case filed in the Local Court by K. Nishikawa, a jirikisha coolie, against Mr. W. N. Wright, No. 40, claiming yen 46.50 for damages caused by a dog bite. Judge Kawama ordered defendant to pay yen 18.70 to the plaintiff.

CLAIM ON SHORT DELIVERY OF CARGO.

In the Yokohama District Court, the hearing of a case in which Messrs. Mendelson Bros., No. 273, sue the Ocean Steamship Co. and the China Mutual Steam Navigation Co., claiming yen 1,200, was resumed on Nov. 6th before Judge Nakanishi.

Mr. S. Yoneda, vice manager of the Yokohama branch of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, was summoned as an expert witness. Being shown two bills of lading with regard to two lots of tin-plates brought by the Kaisow and Diomed in June and July respectively, he deposed that the clause, "weight, measurement, contents and value are unknown," is merely inserted for the purpose of estimating the freight and it has no other special meaning. It is the usual clause inserted in any bills of lading. The usage of commercial circles is that any dispute arising as to damage caused to cargo is always relegated to the decision of Lloyd's surveyor. After his opinion is given the dispute is amicably settled. Referring to another clause, "not liable for condition or correct delivery of tin-plates in boxes, unless iron-hooped and tin-lined," witness stated that tin-plates must be packed as stipulated, otherwise the shipper or consignee of the cargo has no right to lodge a claim against the ship's owner in case of damage—the breaking of boxes, etc.—with the exception of taking delivery of the contents. However, claims may be lodged for short delivery, if any. Referring again to the clause "good order and condition," witness said that it had no connection with damage. If the right number of cases are delivered to the consignee, the ship's owner is not bound by the clause though there may be damage owing to the packing. For instance, a lot of a hundred boxes showed the counterfoil numbers from one to a hundred. In this case, if all the boxes bearing the numbers were delivered, even though there was damage, the clause "good order and condition" is applicable to the transaction. Being cross-examined by Plaintiff's Counsel, witness repeated that tin-plates must be packed in cases tin-lined and iron-hooped as the material is very heavy; and that even though the packing of the goods is torn, the shipper or consignee could not bring a case if the whole quantity of the contents are delivered.

K. Yamaguchi, an employee of Messrs. Siber, Wolff & Co., stated that he attended to the landing of 249 boxes of tin-plates brought by the Kaisow and a portion of 257 boxes by the Diomed while in the employment of Capt. A. Weston. The tin-plates were not packed with iron-hoops, but were in tin-lined boxes. Some boxes were broken and these are kept in the Central Ware-house Midori-cho, belonging to the Custom Office. The tin-plates were contained in boxes bearing the marks "M.B.K." and were 20 by 28 inches each in size, while those marked "M.B." were 14 by 20 inches. By the Diomed, over ten thousand boxes were brought being consigned to several firms.

Mariyama, a Japanese employee of Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, deposed that he attended to the landing of a portion of the tin-plate imported by the Diomed. Some boxes of the same merchandise brought by the Kaisow which Messrs. Mendelson Bros. refused to take delivery of because of damage caused through packing, were kept in the Central Warehouse and other damaged boxes by the Diomed were in No. 2 godown belonging to the Customs.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court to examine the damaged goods at the warehouses mentioned by the two witnesses and to appoint an expert to obtain the market price of tin-plate, at the time when the goods in dispute were imported. The Court rejected the request and adjourned the hearing till Nov. 27th.

THE "KINJO MARU" DISASTER CASE.

In connexion with the sinking of the transport Kinjo Maru by collision with the British steamer Barralong on Aug. 22nd, off Himejima, Bungo province, Judge Nagamura of the Yokohama Local Court and Mr. Hirata, a lawyer of Tokyo, representing the Bucknall Bros. Steamship Co., London, made an examination on Nov. 5th, on board the British steamer Goldmouth, now at Yokohama. The examination was for the preserving of evidence as to the accident, as this ship passed the scene of collision and saved some of the passengers. Mr. C. T. Ladder, third quartermaster of the Goldmouth, was examined as a witness.

Judge Nagamura of the Yokohama Local Court proceeded on the 5th on board the British steamer Goldmouth in order to preserve evidence regarding the collision between the Japanese transport Kinjo Maru and the British steamer Barralong in the Inland Sea on August 22nd. Mr. Ladder, third officer of the Goldmouth, was examined with reference to the collision.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A telegram reports that two fresh cases of bubonic plague appeared on Nov. 5th in Osaka. The patients are young men.

A case of plague is reported from Kita Hori-cho, Osaka. The patient, who is the daughter, four years old, of a cotton goods dealer, died on November 4th.

Admiral Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy, and Admiral Ito, Chief of the Naval Staff Office, paid a visit at noon on Nov. 7th to Admiral Togo on board the Shikishima which is still at Yokohama. The visitors returned to Tokyo by the 3.15 p.m. train.

It is believed in Kabul that the Russians are bridging the Oxus at a point between Klarki and Khwaja Salar, on the Afghan border, which is well within Russian territory. The bridge may possibly not be intended for railway purposes, as the branch line from Samarkand to the Oxus has been aligned so as to have its terminus at Termez, on the Pata Kesar ferry, due north of Mozar-i-Sharif.

The directors of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha met on Nov. 7th to discuss the proposal to raise a foreign loan, for which purpose Mr. Nakahashi, the president, was recently conducting negotiations in Tokyo with the representative of a foreign syndicate.

The training ships Matsushima, Isukushima and Hashidate will leave Edajima at the beginning of January with cadets who graduate at the Naval College on November 25th. The commander of the squadron is believed to be Rear-Admiral Togo.

The Hongkong Telegraph is very angry with the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Co., Ltd., for losing the job of docking and repairing the Russian battleship Czarevitch, now at Tsingtao, through stipulating that she should lighten herself by landing her guns and stores at Tsingtao.

Li Pak-hoi, the pirate, who was extradited from Hongkong, was executed at Canton on the 23rd October. His last speech was that it was very unjust to be executed for such a small crime, and had he known that he would be executed, he would have continued to be a robber captain, and would never have surrendered.

News had been received with great regret of the death at home on the 17th ult. of Mr. Atwell Coxon, for many years a most prominent resident of Hongkong. Mr. Coxon's life in the East began in the Chartered Mercantile Bank in Bombay about 1853. After a short stay in India, he came to Hongkong and remained for some time in the Bank, afterwards establishing himself as a bill-broker, retiring from Hongkong in 1898. He took up most things in Hongkong, and was a leader in them all.

A Thanksgiving Service for the harvest was held on Sunday forenoon in Union Church. The church was very prettily decorated with sheaves of grain and other produce of the soil. Rev. B. Chappell, of Tokyo, conducted the service. The usual hymns for the season were sung and two anthems were given, one in the ordinary place and the other during the offertory. In the course of the first a short solo was rendered by Mr. S. H. Somerton. These were the first and last choruses of "The Rolling Seasons." Mr. W. K. Vincent officiated at the organ with his usual skill, and the music was very good.

The following table gives a comparison in tea transactions during the period from the first crop to Oct. 31st in 1904 and 1905:—

	1904. Kin.	1905. Kin.
Brought from inland	18,124,200	11,239,000
Sold to foreign countries	17,992,600	11,113,300
Stock on Oct. 31st.....	131,600	128,700

The Jiji remarks that owing to the unfavourable weather this year, the first, second and third crops of tea all proved worse than those of the previous year. On the other hand, the demand from America greatly decreased as the stocks in that country from the previous year were large.

According to the China Times, the High Commissioners appointed by the Chinese Government to visit foreign countries have been so far intimidated by the recent bomb outrage at Peking, that serious doubt exists whether they will start at all. Our contemporary says that they "entertain a strong desire to stay at home and cultivate a career tending towards a ripe old age, rather than allow the gods to show their love for them by taking them away early. To the Western mind it seems very extraordinary that with personages of so exalted a rank as that of the High Commissioners, personal considerations should outweigh patriotism, and that so important a mission as that to which they were appointed should be delayed, and perhaps frustrated—if the information we have be correct—by so undignified and unpatriotic a feeling as what we English in homely talk call 'funt.'"

VAN SCHAICK HALL BAZAAR.

On Friday and Saturday last Van Schaick Hall, on the Bluff, was opened to the public for the purposes of a Bazaar, which was held by the pupils of the Ferris Seminary in aid of the funds for the recent enlargement and improvement of the building. The hall was prettily decorated with festoons of tiny flags and draped bunting and the centre occupied by the principal stall for the sale of an immense variety of knick-knacks, useful and ornamental, for the most part the product of the nimble fingers and lively fancy of the pupils themselves. Amongst these were some very pretty and natural looking artificial flowers and other articles of paper, fancy needle work of all kinds, dolls galore in foreign and native costume, paintings on paper and wood shavings, work bags, purses, scraps, and other ornamental adjuncts of the Japanese maiden's attire; and a host of other things. At one corner of the room was the Fish Pond, where for the modest charge of 5 sen the visitor could angle until he caught a whale—or a minnow, and side stalls were devoted to the sale of home made sweets and other confections. In one of the new side rooms aerated waters were dispensed and in another boxes of Japanese rice confections. In the commodious room to the left of the entrance on the ground floor tea was served in foreign style on numerous little round tables. Mr. and Mrs. Booth and the ladies of the Seminary courteously received their numerous guests and the girl stallholders entered with spirit and gusto pleasant to see into the business in hand. The latter had, we understood, been working day and night to supply the stalls with their freight of fancy wares, and are to be warmly congratulated on the satisfactory results of their labours.

LADIES OF YOKOHAMA v. Y. C. & A. C.

Rain fell heavily during Thursday night and Friday morning so that it seemed as if the deferred cricket match between ladies and members could not be brought off. A start was made, however, and the event was successfully carried through. The ladies went in first and were all out before tiffin—their score being 68. After tiffin the gentlemen, who played left handed with sticks instead of bats, went in and scored 89. In their second innings the ladies made 48, but, as the gentlemen scored 30 in their second innings, lost the match.

The ladies' team consisted as follows:

Mrs. Dinsdale (Captain), Miss Wilson, Miss Page, Miss Merriman, Miss Kilby, Miss Dinsdale, Miss Playfair, Miss C. Merriman, Miss Moss, Miss D. Page, and Miss Waddilove. The highest scorers were Miss Merriman 34, and Miss Kilby 20.

The Y. C. & A. C. team consisted of Dr. Moon, Dr. Emerson, Messrs. E. W. Maitland, J. M. Mollison, J. T. Dixon, W. S. Moss, B. C. Foster, A. E. Cooper, F. J. Abbott, O. Strome, and H. W. Kilby.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Mr. Unwin will publish this autumn, says the Athenaeum, a volume likely to have considerable importance as an historical document. It contains the memoirs of the late Dr. Thomas W. Evans, Court Dentist to Napoleon III. Dr. Evans enjoyed intimate relations with the Emperor, and the impressions which he gives of his character—an estimate very different from the conventional one—is based upon close observation during many years and in very varied circumstances. Several chapters of this work relate how the Empress Eugénie, on her flight from the Tuileries, after Sedan, sought refuge in Dr. Evans's house, and how her secret flight to England was made in his charge. The volume has been edited by Dr. Evans's friend, Dr. Edward A. Crane.

A recently issued list of additions made to the Printed Book Department of the British Museum specifies amongst others a copy of the New Testament with these words written on the flyleaf in the autograph of late Queen Victoria: "1 Cor. xiii. 4 and 8. 'Love suffereth long, and is kind, . . . 'Love faileth not.'—V.R.I., 1891."

The Testament has been presented to the Museum by Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, F.S.A., whose account of the origin of the inscription is given in these words:

During the month of August 1901 I was laid up for three weeks in the Luisen Hospital at Aachen, after undergoing an operation which necessitated perfect quiet. Just before coming into the hospital I sent off to Lorne [Marquis of Lorne, now Duke of Argyll] a little pocket-Bible that I had had by me some time, and asked him to beg the Queen to write in it her favourite text (I knew the Queen's favourite hymn was "Lead, Kindly Light," and was curious to know what her favourite text or chapter might be). In a short time I got the little book back with a letter from Lorne, dated Osborne, August 2; in it he wrote: "I asked the Queen before chapel to put something in your book, and she said what she liked best was the text about Charity, or Love; this was just as we were walking towards the church. The Bishop of Ripon, Boyd Carpenter, preached, and lo and behold! the text was exactly that of which the Queen had just spoken. The coincidence was very odd, and she was much struck by it." So that the Queen's writing on the flyleaf of this little Bible must have been written on the afternoon of August 2, my birthday. The Queen's alteration of "Love" for "Charity" is decidedly a better rendering of the sense of these beautiful texts.

A very interesting little addition to the annals concerning her late Majesty.

The correspondence of Taine, just published, shows that in the presence of much hero worship the eminent critic could retain his independence of judgment. While all France and much of Europe was almost idolising Victor Hugo, Taine held him in poor esteem. "Except for a couple of hundred verses," he says, "the 'Contemplations' and the 'Legend of the Ages' are a mixture of folly and parade. Nothing," he adds, "displeases me more than your mystic charlatan." This judgment is expressed in a letter written by Taine to M. Georg Brandes, on July 25, 1873.

"Wooden Swords and Straw Muskets," the book of singular title in which a retired infantry officer, M. Hult, conveys his reminiscences and criticisms of French garrison life, seems likely to involve him in duels, not only with every officer of his old battalion, but with nearly every officer in the garrison. Even the garrison commandant, Gen. Salabrier, has been swept into the fighting line, and has just requested "major and a captain of the 78th Foot to take his challenge to M. Hult."

In a recent magazine is recounted the embarrassing position of a well-known philosophical writer—an admirable talker on most occasions—who, on being introduced to a lady, found himself absolutely at a loss for anything to say. The lady expressed the anxiety she had long felt to meet him; he thought of one possible remark after another, rejected each as inane, and the lady was finally led away without his having said anything at all. Probably everyone has felt this difficulty of opening a conversation with an absolute stranger, whose tastes, history, and prejudices are unknown. It is said that a distinguished British general, who is habitually at a loss for small talk, repeats the first seven numerals in a mumble incomprehensible to anybody when first introduced; thus gaining time to think or to force upon the introducee the onus of discovering some subject favourable for investigation. Mark Twain tells of his first presentation, as quite a youth, to a President of the United States, when, after an embarrassed pause, his irresistible sense of humour asserted itself, and he observed, "I feel embarrassed, Mr. President—do you?" Perhaps the best possible advice is that given by a famous conversationalist—discover as soon as possible the subject best known to the person you are introduced to, and speak about that; this will make him talk, and he will think you clever and interesting in consequence.

Edited by Mr. F. T. Jane, and published for the Naval Syndicate by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., is the eighth annual issue of "Fighting Ships," 1905-1906, consisting of three parts. The first portion of the book deals with the "Navies of the World," in order of strength, and with "Coast Defence Navies" in geographical order.

This, the chief section of the book, is fully illustrated as usual with excellent photographs, maps, silhouettes, &c. In the second portion are articles on recent naval progress, with a special paper on warship engineering by Mr. Charles le Grave Sells, M.Inst.C.E. Finally, there are articles on the war in the Far East by combatants, with special photographs, revised rules of the Jane War Game (naval), and a silhouette "index of warships."

On the question of public libraries and reading the Saturday Review says:—

The circulating libraries are no doubt necessary, but we are sure that they encourage a slovenly and slap-dash skimming of the books "which everybody is talking about," while they eliminate books worth reading to replace them by trivialities. We have grave doubts whether they encourage appreciably the reading of good books. We are sure that they, and they alone, make possible the appalling outcrop of bad books, dishonest books, on topics of the moment. How many of the recent books on the condition of Russia would have found their way into print had there been no Mudie and no Smith? The nation may be as preponderantly foolish as Carlyle thought, but there would not have been enough consummate fools to buy largely some of these collections of bogus "revelations."

"But everybody gets them from the library."

It is said that Australia, at the present time, produces more writers of sort than any other country on earth.

A copy of the original pamphlet by William Harvey on the discovery of the circulation of the blood, published in 1623, has just been sold for £30.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will shortly commence the publication of a new important work, which has been in preparation for many years, entitled "The Living Races of Mankind," to be issued in twenty-four fortnightly parts, at 7d. net each. The work comprises a popular account of the customs, habits, pursuits, feasts, and ceremonies of the races of mankind throughout the world, and contains over 800 photographic illustrations from life, also twenty-five coloured plates and maps. The text of the book has been written by eminent travellers and specialists, including Sir Harry Johnston, G.C.M.G.; R. Lydekker, F.R.S.; Professor Keane, Professor Longford, and Dr. R. W. Shufeldt, and it will be printed throughout on English art paper.

Among the commemorations of "Nelson's year," probably one of the most striking from the point of view of historical novelty will be a very thorough reinvestigation of the life drama of Emma, Lady Hamilton, by Mr. Walter Sichel. Her early history will be retold from new and authentic material; the service which she claimed to have rendered to the British fleet in June, 1798, will be presented in a light much more favourable than ever before; and the precise character of her influence upon Nelson reconsidered in the light of newly discovered letters and MSS. of importance. The "Life," which will be issued by Messrs. Constable, will be illustrated from a hitherto unknown oil-sketch by Romney, and by other portraits, all of which will be reproduced now for the first time.

A portly volume of 500 pages bears the title "International Law as interpreted during the Russo-Japanese War." The authors are F. E. Smith, M.A., B.C.L., and N. W. Sibley, B.A. The book is in three parts, the first dealing with the normal relations of Russia, Japan, China, and Turkey; the second with the law governing States in the relation of war; and the third governing States in the relation of neutrality. Mr. Unwin is the publisher.

The differences of critical opinion in regard to "Fagan," the winner of the $5,000 prize in the short-story competition instituted by Collier's Weekly, leads another American contemporary to the conclusion that "there is no standard of excellence for short stories, and there never will be." While three of the judges in the competition gave "Fagan" preference over all others, Senator Lodge gave it "zero" out of a possible one hundred!

CORRESPONDENCE.

SMART POLICE WORK.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

Dear Sir,—There have been numerous instances of the skill of the Japanese Police in catching thieves and recovering stolen goods; but the following almost beats the record for smartness.—

On Oct. 22, my watch and chain were picked from my pocket, either in the crowd near Shimbashi, (on the occasion of Admiral Togo's arrival) or in the tramcar going to Shinagawa, I was uncertain which, but I did not miss it until I had been for some time in the tramcar.

I gave notice of the theft at the Police Box at Shinagawa, and later I gave a more careful description of the stolen goods (a silver watch with a calendar in the back, and a gold chain) to the Hongo Police Station.

Yesterday, Nov. 1, I received a notice to call at the Police Station at Shiba to identify a watch supposed to be mine; accordingly I went there, and received back my watch and chain complete, none the worse for having been temporarily in the possession of a "dorobo."

The Police Inspector told me that the watch had been stolen in the tramcar, but he only smiled when I asked him how they caught the thief.

I may add that I could not get the Police to accept any remuneration at all for their successful labours in the matter.

Yours truly,

C. D. W.

THE AINU APPEAL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

Sir,—Please accept our heartiest thanks for the very kind way in which you met us by so promptly and generously allowing space in your Journal for our appeal on behalf of the poor suffering Chikahumi Ainu. And may I trespass still further by asking you now to be so good as to allow us here-with to express our thanks—our best thanks—by the same means to those Friends—especially the little Britishers—who so cordially helped with their means as soon as they heard of our need. We thank them all; and so do those Ainu who are being fed by their kindness.

Among the sufferers there is an old blind couple who are being fed by us. I learn that those in authority at Asahigawa have so far woken up to a sense of their responsibility and to the fitness and justice of things that they are likely to provide rations for these. They have been talking about it, but up to the 26th of October had not actually given them any rice. One wonders how these poor blind creatures would have fared had we done nothing for them. As soon as the Authorities commence feeding these we shall of course drop them. So far our help is extended to six families. But these must be added to soon; and, if more help is not given us nothing remains but to bring them down to Sapporo and feed them here, for starve they shall not so long as we have a crust to offer.

Private Japanese friends are, we are most thankful to say, gradually waking up to their responsibilities, and we have already received a donation of 10 yen from one gentleman. Moreover, a letter has just come to hand from Mrs. Pierson, who is right on the spot, in which she writes:—"A soldier who read in the papers of the help we are trying to give these people brought us 40 sen—his pay for ten days—to buy rice for the Ainu"! Would there were more of this kind of good-hearted person among both us and them! So far about 60 yen have been given us for this work. Will not some others kindly help in it? It would be a real boon if they could and would. Once again thanking you, Sir, for your kindness.

I remain, Yours very truly,

JNO. BATCHELOR.

Sapporo, November 4th, 1905.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ORIENTAL HOTEL COMPANY.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Oriental Hotel Ltd., was held at the hotel, Kobe, on Tuesday says the Kobe Herald. The Chairman of the Company, Mr. A. H. Groom, presided, and the Directors, Messrs. Reynell, Woolley and Th. de Berigny, were also present. The following report was submitted:—

"The Directors have pleasure to lay before the Shareholders a statement of the Company's Accounts for the year ending 31 Aug. 1905. The total net earnings in Working Account amount to yen 55,604.34 and after writing off yen 6,668.51 for depreciation and deducting Interim Dividend of yen 3,725.00, paid on the 15 April, 1905, and making the usual transfers to Profit and Loss, there remains to be dealt with a sum of yen 18,376.74 and the Directors propose to treat this amount as follows:—

Final Dividend yen 3.56 on Ordinary Shares.....	Yen 5,215.00
Final Dividend 8 per cent in Preference Shares.....	3,600.00
Dividend Yen 37.00 on 76 Founders.....	2,812.00
Carried to Reserve Account.....	7,349.74

18,376.74

"The continued Russo-Japanese war affected the Company's business in many ways. The Directors trust, however, that peace having been re-established, a new era of prosperity is at hand. The Company's property has been efficiently maintained. Work on the new building on the Bund has been greatly retarded by the abnormally large rainfall of the Spring and Summer, but is now progressing satisfactorily, and there is every reason to believe that before the close of next year the Hotel business will have been established there. In accordance with Article 90 of the Articles of Association, Messrs. A. H. Groom and Th. de Berigny retire from office and offer themselves for re-election. In accordance with Article 129 of the Articles of Association, the present Auditor, Mr. W. D. S. Edwards, now retires from office, but is eligible for re-election."

In submitting the above report and the accounts, the Chairman stated that the Company's business was entirely satisfactory and that there had been an improvement as compared with the previous twelve months. About the middle of next year yen 50,000 of 8 per cent. preference shares would be allotted at par. Shareholders who desired to take up some of these should communicate with the Secretary. Mr. Groom concluded by moving the adoption of the report and this was agreed to, Mr. Melhuish seconding the motion. Messrs. Groom and Berigny, the retiring Directors, were then re-elected, together with Mr. W. D. S. Edwards, the Auditor. In reply to a vote of thanks to the Staff, the Secretary Mr. G. A. Adam, as an instance of the excellent way in which the staff worked together, said that twenty-six of the Hotel's employees had been at the Hotel for over five years, and thirteen of them for more than ten. The meeting ended with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

At a banquet in honour of Lord Lansdowne and in recognition of the conclusion of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty, Viscount Hayashi was present and Lord Ashbourne was President.

Lord Ashbourne toasted the Mikado eulogistically.

Lord Lansdowne said that in these days, when all the nations were grouping themselves and arming to the teeth, no nation could venture to stand entirely alone. He eulogised England's Ally's prowess, patriotism, patience, self-restraint and straightforward diplomacy. He said that he had no better recollection during his stay at the Foreign Office than his intercourse with Viscount Hayashi, who was about to be made Ambassador. He went on to say: We have gained an Ally of whom we are proud. The Alliance is not to be considered as against others. There are no unavowed motives and no secret clauses. There is nothing behind the published documents. He then alluded to the entente between Great Britain and France, which, he said, also greatly strengthened the position of both. He deplored the assumption that these understandings necessarily involve the estrangement of other Powers. If any of the latter desire similar understandings we are willing to enter into them, provided nothing is done hereafter to impair our friendship with Japan and France.

KOREA.

Saturday, Nov. 11th.

We read in the Kokumin Shinbun that the Korean Government has modified the sumptuary regulations issued on the 25th of October. These regulations interdicted the use of white clothing and prescribed that garments must be of blue, indigo, black or purple colour. The people were enjoined to effect this change by the new year, and it was laid down that anyone failing to comply would be liable to fine. Such arbitrary legislation being obviously indefensible, the Court has been induced to alter it from an order into a recommendation. Nevertheless the expectation is that a considerable effect will be produced, as is much to be hoped, for although the wearing of white garments can not be the main cause of the extreme indolence displayed by the male sex in Korea, it is certainly one of the causes. There will doubtless be many invidious suggestions as to the motive of the Korean Government in introducing this reform since Japanese merchants will be the chief gainers in a commercial sense. The stuff used by the Koreans for their white robes is imported almost entirely from China, whereas the adoption of colours such as those indicated would open a large market for Japanese meisan-tsumugi, Yonazawa ito-ori and such products. It is stated that the issue of the original order led to large speculative purchases of Japanese materials by importers, and that the Chemulpo Chamber of Commerce is agitating to have the regulation restored in its drastic form. That is probably a canard.

Marquis Ito and his suite reached Seoul on the afternoon of the 9th instant. A large crowd assembled at the station to meet the Ambassador.

Mr. Megata has published an accurate statement of Korean finance during the past twelve months. This, it is presumed, inaugurates a habit which will be steadily followed in the future. The public will thus be enabled to gather clear information about Korea's financial condition and a signal check will be imposed on the irregular practices said to have hitherto prevailed.

Rumours having been circulated that assassins threatened the lives of Chi-yong, Minister of the Interior; Li Keun-thaik, Minister of War; and Li Hwa-yong, Minister of Justice, the Japanese have placed guards over the residences of these dignitaries.

Great distress is said to prevail among the merchants of Seoul. Thirty of the principal men of commerce have gone bankrupt and it is expected that others will follow. No reason is assigned but presumably the cause is to be sought in the nickel question. Measures of relief are being concerted.

Monday, Nov. 12th.

Marquis Ito was received in audience by the Emperor of Korea on the 10th instant. His Majesty seems to have treated the Ambassador with much graciousness and hospitality. A banquet was subsequently given in the Palace. In the evening the Marquis and his suite dined at the Japanese Legation. In two or three days the section of the old Palace devoted to the use of the Marquis will be ready for his occupation.

The Nationalists, of which party most of the Ministers are said to be members, have declared their opposition to the Il Ching-hoi who advocate submission to Japan.

It is stated that the Pyong-yang-Wiju railway will be opened for general traffic from the 1st of December.

The Emperor of Korea has sent the Minister of War to call upon General Hasegawa and convey to the latter His Majesty's kindly sentiments on the occasion of the visit of Japanese troops to Korea en route for Japan. Mr. Li Kon-thak was also the bearer of presents, namely 45 oxen, 58 dozen of champagne, 78 tubs of Japanese sake and a quantity of cigarettes. We fail to comprehend the Imperial message. It would seem to imply that the Yalu Army is to pass through Korea on its return journey to Japan, but no such intention has hitherto been attributed to the Authorities, and we do not find any trace of it in General Hasegawa's reply to the Minister of War. The General alluded solely to the troops that are to garrison Korea and said nothing whatever of forces making a half-way house of the peninsula.

This morning (Sunday) Seoul sends news of interchanges of visits, banquets and various ceremonials in connexion with the advent of Marquis Ito. These things may be summed up in the statement that the distinguished statesman has been fitly received in the Korean capital.

The Iwate and the Suma have arrived at Chemulpo, where they are to lie during Marquis Ito's stay in Seoul. These vessels had escorted the Marquis to his landing place, Fusan, whence they steamed round to Chemulpo.

Tuesday, Nov. 14th.

Marquis Ito was to have had his second audience of the Emperor of Korea on the 11th instant, but for some unexplained reason there was a postponement. This has given rise to a rumour that some friction has arisen in Court circles, but the bulk of information goes to represent the Koreans in a much more placable frame of mind towards Japan that they were before the coming of Marquis Ito. It is said that whereas they had then entertained grave fears for the continued existence of their country as an independent empire and had determined that their only hope lay in seeking aid from England and America, they have now recognised Japan's sincerity towards them and are prepared to fall in with any suggestions she may offer. We are inclined to question the complete accuracy of this latter analysis, however. It is almost certain that the Korean Government has sent foreigners westward to start an agitation in the press and from the platform against Japanese preponderance in the peninsula.

Mr. Hayashi is to give a ball at the Japanese Legation on the 11th instant. It is expected to be an affair of unprecedented magnitude in the Korean capital, and the occasion is said to be partly the presence of Marquis Ito, and partly to say farewell to Sir John Jordan, the British Representative, who is to leave Seoul on the 20th.

Wednesday, Nov. 15th.

It is stated that a great "purification" of the Korean Court has taken place. The bands of necromancers, fortune-tellers and parasites who made the place a seed-plot of corruption and intrigue have been cleared out, and an era of cleanliness has been inaugurated. How long will it last? Not long unless Japan's influence be more resolutely exercised than has been the case in the past.

The Emperor is unwell. His Majesty has developed a sore throat and has consequently been obliged to postpone his return visit to Marquis Ito, which was to have taken place on the 10th instant.

The Kokumin Shinbun's Seoul correspondent describes the object of Marquis Ito's visit to be chiefly one of friendly reassurance. His Excellency is sent by his Sovereign to the nation which shared with Japan the troubles and the triumphs of the war, his purpose being to announce the restoration of peace, to thank Korea for the part she took, and to convey an expression of Japan's best wishes. Among the Koreans, however, it is believed that while the distinguished statesman's visit is unquestionably inspired by these purposes, he is also charged with the duty of effecting some arrangement which will place the relations of the two empires on a firmer and more clearly defined footing. A prominent Korean official is stated to have informed the Kokumin's correspondent that the better classes in Korea are convinced of the expediency of being guided by Marquis Ito's advice, and that they entirely disapprove of the course taken by a few agitators who are addressing to the Ambassador letters couched in an angry tone.

With regard to the rumours current some time ago that the Foreign Representatives would be withdrawn from Seoul so soon as the status of the country vis-a-vis Japan was clearly defined, the Jiji Shimpō's correspondent speaks in doubtful terms. It gathers that there is much uncertainty as to the possibility of having treaty engagements duly carried out in the absence of a Minister. Thus even the British Representative, though there have been signs of his withdrawing, will not do so until his locum tenens arrives, and the United States Representative, in spite of the recently prevalent belief that he intends to leave, is having extensive repairs made at his legation. Hence the Jiji's correspondent infers that this talk of the withdrawal of Foreign Representatives is, at all events, premature and that a considerable interval must elapse before anything like a thoroughly satisfactory settlement can be achieved.

Thursday, Nov. 16th.

News from Seoul is contradictory. Some accounts say that the Emperor's illness—to which a note of interrogation is appended—will constitute an indefinitely prolonged obstacle to his meeting with Marquis Ito, and that Prince Wi will be deputed to act in his Majesty's stead. But others treat the Sovereign's indisposition as a merely temporary affair. The latest accounts are to the effect that Marquis Ito is to have audience on the 15th and that very interesting developments are expected.

The Korean Cabinet is said to have prepared a proclamation denouncing the manifesto of the Il Ching-hoi as containing views unbecoming to Korean subjects and calculated to disturb the people's minds. It will be remembered that the manifesto declared the advisability of relying on Japan as the only course leading to international safety for Korea. Evidently had the Cabinet been suffered to issue a proclamation in the above sense, the nation would have been confronted with a definite official declaration that to rely on Japan is an unwise and unpatriotic programme for Korea. This aspect of the affair made itself patent to certain members of the Government prior to the issue of the proclamation, so that some hesitation resulted, and finally the Japanese Authorities stepped in and interdicted the promulgation of the Cabinet's views as calculated to disturb the relations between Japan and Korea. These statements are made by the correspondent of the Asahi.

It is alleged on apparently good authority that although the inhabitants of northeastern Korea were unable to cultivate their farms on account of the war and are consequently without crops, they gained so much money during the sojourn of the troops in their region that if rice be purchasable they will not suffer any inconvenience.

Friday, November 17.

Marquis Ito was received by the Emperor of Korea in private audience at 3 p.m. on the 15th instant. The Ambassador did not take with him any suite except an interpreter, his communication to the Sovereign being of an entirely private character. This interchange of views is believed to prelude important events.

The two parties to the pending controversy are assuming definite outlines. On the one side are the Daihan Club (Great Korea Club) and the Popular Party; on the other, the Il Chinhui. These appear to be agitating vigorously.

The Masan Railway—a branch of the Seoul-Fusan line—which is already open to traffic, is to undergo improvements which, including the building of an iron bridge over the Nakdong, will cost 1,300,000 yen. The contract has been given and the work is to be completed in 15 months.

The manifesto of the Il Chinhui has been much talked of lately. Our readers know that Il Chinhui is the title adopted by a band of Koreans who profess to be, and regard themselves as, ardent patriots. In that character they have published a manifesto which is said to have produced a sensation in Korea, and to have provoked a rejoinder of a very denunciatory character from a section of the Government—a rejoinder, however, of which the Japanese authorities prohibited the publication. The manifesto is a very lengthy document, but its gist may be given in comparatively few words. It sets out by postulating that when men are competent to act, then they may speak, but if not thus competent, their best plan is to keep silence and to nurture their strength. Japan, who stands at the head of Eastern progress, has laboured to the utmost during the past ten years for the purpose of securing the peace of the Orient. Her war with China and her war with Russia were dictated by that noble purpose. But the Portsmouth Treaty and the Anglo-Japanese alliance have inspired all kinds of alarmist rumours, and the Il Chinhui feel it their duty to speak. The notion of re-placing the relations between Japan and Korea on their ancient footing is like attempting to resurrect the dead. If it be desired to sever intercourse with Foreign States and to stand independent, then the resolve must be proclaimed and the Koreans must be prepared to fight to the death, for death will be their portion. But if that impracticable course be not contemplated, then there is nothing for it but to rely on a friendly Power for aid to maintain the country. Nothing but loss of her friend's assistance and ruin for herself will be Korea's fate if, without either the courage to fight or the sense to seek succour, she relies on the prattle of a number of imbeciles and on the devices of deception. What may be the relation between Japan and Korea ultimately no one can predict, but it is very plain that the recall of Korea's Ministers abroad and the withdrawal of foreign Ministers from Seoul is a step which will soon enter the domain of practical politics. Certain publicists see in this course an evidence that Korea's independence is about to be forfeited but they fail to see that a Convention already pledges Korea to accept a Japanese adviser in foreign affairs and to follow his advice. Under such circumstances, is it not idle to gird at entrusting to Japan the charge of the country's foreign affairs? The thing is already accomplished in fact and the critics cry out against the form merely. Still more evident is it that for Korea to maintain Ministers in foreign countries is only idle show. There is nothing for it but to entrust the management of these matters to a friendly Power and to rely on its aid. Who is there that does not wish to avoid alien interference and to preserve his country's independence? But if there be neither competence to order one's domestic affairs nor competence to resent foreign contempt, what remains but to seek aid and to cultivate ability? The world knows the magnanimity and the virtues of the Sovereign of Japan. All countries recognise the humanity and justice of the Japanese people. If Korea frankly trusts such a monarch and such a nation, need she apprehend any injury? Already there has been too much hesitation, too much distrust, too much reliance on countries that do not deserve to be relied on, too much indifference to the dictates of gratitude and friendship. A little more of such procedure and ruin will be inevitable. When war broke out between Japan and Russia, Korea allied herself with Japan and declared Russia her enemy. Yet the Korean Government had not the wisdom to send out a single soldier to fight for its friend. To Korea's shame be it related. Alone the Il Chinhui laboured to assist the Japanese army and to discharge the duty their country owed to her ally. Yet the public misjudged them, and called them traitors. Could there be a greater perversion of the truth?

The manifesto ends with a declaration of the Il Chinhui's sincerity and patriotism.

THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE COPYRIGHT CONVENTION.

It is stated, notably by the Nippon, that the convention just concluded with regard to the protection of American copyright in Japan is a very one-sided affair. The Nippon, while writing in a guarded tone, states very clearly that several attempts had previously been made to obtain Japan's signature to this convention, but she invariably refused in view of the injury her interests would suffer. Now, however, the relations between the two countries are such that refusal on Japan's part becomes scarcely possible and Mr. Griscom is to take home the convention as a farewell gift. Our contemporary speaks of the injury suffered by English authors during a long course of years owing to the United States' indifference to the wholesale reproduction of English books in America, and observes that whereas the Washington Government has never given adequate protection to the rights of British authors, it has now, after much insistence, induced Japan to do for American authors what America refuses to do for English. This is described as inconsistent. Naturally the Japanese do not ask for permission to reprint American books without let or hindrance. That was done on an extensive scale some years ago, especially in the case of American school-books. What they ask is that they should be free to translate American books into Japanese without incurring any obligation to the authors. Apparently their contention is that there can be no practical reciprocity in this matter. American citizens are not at all likely to translate Japanese books and publish them in the States. Thus it follows that a mutual restriction imposed by treaty would be very sensibly operative against one side but would have no sensible effect on the other. If the matter be considered from the standpoint of strict justice, authors should be protected in defiance of such considerations as those here set down, but there is no country in this modern world that conducts its international relations on a basis of strict justice, and in view of the unsympathetic attitude maintained by America towards Europe in this matter for so many years, the pressure she has brought on the Japanese on account of her own authors may well seem inconsistent in the eyes of Japanese publicists. The Asahi, we observe, treats the matter in much the same tone as the Nippon does.

The Chuo Shimbun supports the Government's action in agreeing to a copyright convention with the United States. Dealing with the allegation that America, who refuses protection to English authors, is so earnest in seeking protection for her own authors in Japan, the Chuo notes that this comparison is not quite just, for although English authors cannot obtain protection in the United States by direct process, English publishers can and do establish branches in America, and by these means are enabled to procure American copyright for English books. At any rate, even though Japan suffered something by concluding such a convention with the United States, she is under a certain moral obligation in these matters and must not pay sole attention to her own selfish interests. What the Chuo regrets is that the translation of American books into Japanese should be interdicted by the convention. Such a veto is not in the interest of authors themselves. People who read translations would not, under ordinary circumstances, purchase the originals, but the mere fact of reading a translation may compel reference to originals, and at any rate the translation of a work into a foreign language constitutes a sort of reclame without in any way injuring the sale of the original book.

THE DIET.

It is announced in the Official Gazette that on the 12th instant the Emperor sanctioned the issue of an Ordinance summoning the Diet. Thus the official opening of the two Houses will take place on Dec. 28th. Rumour is not busying itself very actively with the probable course of events after the Diet comes together, but, on the whole, the most commonly held opinion seems to be that the Lower House will take some step involving dissolution and that the Katsura Cabinet will then resign, handing over the reins of administration to the Seiyun-kai leaders, in other words to Marquis Ito's followers. Some represent Marquis Saionji's position as very difficult, inasmuch as he is pledged not to adopt any strongly hostile course in view of the understanding that the Ministry will resign in favour of the Seiyun-kai, whereas the bulk of the latter are pressing for stalwart measures. The Marquis is thus placed, in a manner, between the devil and the deep blue sea. But it is impossible to discern how much of this forecast may be mere conjecture and how much may be truth. At any rate the Diet cannot commence its work during the current year. If the Houses are officially opened on the 28th their immediate business will be to vote the reply to the Speech from the Throne, and they will then adjourn for the New Year's recess, meeting again on the 10th of January at soonest. Evidently the Budget will not be placed in their hands until next year.

CHINA.

Saturday, November 11.

The Chinese plenipotentiaries who are to meet Baron Komura and Mr. Uchida to conference are now definitely nominated. They are Prince Ching, Viceroy Yuan and Mr. Ku Fung-ki (written also Chu Fung-chi). It may be inferred from these nominations that Peking regards the consultation as something very much more than a mere formality. Rumour attributes an entirely placable attitude to the members of the Wai-wu-pu, but says that in other quarters there is a strong agitation in favour of seizing this occasion to recover the concessions made by China to Russia and transferred by the latter to Japan. Should this policy prevail it will certainly go down to all time as a monument of ingratitude. Had not Japan driven Russia from southern Manchuria the Liaotung Peninsula, the whole of the railway, the mines and the control of all the Three Provinces would now be in the hands of the great Northern Power, and Manchuria would be as completely lost to China as though she had explicitly ceded it. Yet we are to suppose that when Japan, after immense expenditure of blood and treasure, restores the Three Provinces to the Chinese Empire, the latter's statesmen hesitate to leave her in the enjoyment of concessions which do not effect the Empire's integrity and which Japan, by her compact with England, is bound not to abuse. No one can imagine that Japan will consent to be thus treated, nor will any one readily imagine that Chinese statesmen contemplate exposing her to such treatment. China is now at the parting of the ways. She has to decide whether she will throw in her lot with Japan and therefore with England, or whether she will attempt to resume the attitude of isolation which has hitherto exposed her to disintegrating shocks from all quarters. Telegrams represent Viceroy Yuan himself as being much perturbed at learning of Baron Komura's coming, but to Viceroy Yuan the Japanese Minister's mission is not news at all, and we quite fail to see why the event should inspire any alarm. The impression conveyed by many of the rumours now circulating is that they emanate from tainted sources, and that a deliberate attempt is on foot to create trouble between Japan and China. When we consider whose game such a result would play, it becomes easy to imagine the provenance of these tales.

Telegrams to the Kokumin Shinbun say that Baron Komura is expected to reach Taku on the 12th, and that Viceroy Yuan has made arrangements to go to meet him on board the Manchu Maru. The Baron is to be the guest of the Chinese nation during his stay in Peking.

There are as yet no appearances of Russia sending an ambassador to China for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Portsmouth Treaty. Russia is pledged equally with Japan in this matter, but it would seem that she intends to proceed in a much more leisurely manner. Possibly she thinks that an embassy from one side is enough, and that the terms of the Portsmouth Treaty furnish sufficient evidence of her own intentions.

The Chinese Government is taking much trouble to inform itself of the state of affairs in Manchuria. Representatives of the mercantile, manufacturing and agricultural interests have been summoned thence to Peking and a commission has been sent thither from the capital. The Viceroys and Governors throughout the Empire have also been invited to give an opinion as to the best manner of dealing with the affairs of the Three Provinces.

H. E. Chou Erh-hsun, Governor-General of Manchuria, contemplates, it is said, the establishment of a salt monopoly for the purpose of defraying administrative expenses. He is sending men to Formosa to study Japanese methods of managing this gabelle. But a salt monopoly is a familiar institution in China. When Dr. Wells Williams wrote his history, he stated that at that time the administration of the monopoly cost as much as its receipts, but things have altered greatly since then. Another telegram represents Mr. Chou as having applied to Viceroy Yuan for assistance in obtaining a Japanese financial adviser to serve in Manchuria.

A telegram to the Foreign Office announces that, there being no fresh cases of pest at Newchwang and no patients under treatment, the embargo has been removed.

Monday, November 13.

Mr. Tang Shao-yi and several others have been nominated to assist in the negotiations with Baron Komura and Mr. Uchida. Tang is the official to whom China entrusted the management of the Tibetan affair. In view of these numerous nominations there can be no doubt as to the importance attached by China to the Komura embassy.

Mr. Wang and some other censors have addressed a memorial to the Throne with reference to the Manchurian problem. They advise that (1) the lease of the Liaotung Peninsula should be made unquestionably revocable at the termination of the period for which it was originally written, and that as the problems of Weihaiwei and Kiaochow bear a close relation to that of Liaotung, this question can not be too carefully treated. (2) That although the Changchun-Port Arthur railway may be ceded to Japan, the common rights of China should be recognised, and the line should be protected by Chinese guards. (3) That the salt monopoly at Kinchow, Haichow and Fuchow in the Liaotung Peninsula should remain in China's possession, and that the Japanese should not be permitted to exploit any mines in the Peninsula without the sanction of the Chinese Government. (4) That since it is of the utmost importance to maintain Chinese sovereignty in Manchuria, the recently inaugurated Japanese system of allowing taxes to be paid with war notes must be discontinued.

The memorial concludes by urging that since Japan has treated China with great humanity throughout this crisis, the negotiations must be conducted in a most friendly and pacific spirit.

The Tsarevitch left Kiaochow on the morning of the 16th for Saigon, and the Askold left Shanghai on the same day for Vladivostok.

The upper reaches of the Liao river have frozen over.

The Russians in Manchuria are proceeding very slowly with the process of evacuation. Their advanced line has not been withdrawn more than two or three miles, which would mean that they have merely called in their outposts. At this rate it will take all the allotted period of 18 months to get their troops out of the field.

Tuesday, Nov. 14.

Baron Komura was to reach Peking on the evening of the 12th.

Viceroy Yuan, when received in audience by the Emperor on the 11th instant, is said to have urged that after the Manchurian question had been settled, China should conclude a treaty with Japan having for its objects the preservation of East Asia and the maintenance of peace. To this the Empress Dowager is reported to have replied that the safety of the Three Provinces depended upon the steps now taken and that the Viceroy was directed to confer with other Chinese statesmen so as to effect a satisfactory settlement.

China is represented as directing much attention to the state of affairs in Hsinking, Ili and Mongolia. Many reforms are said to be contemplated, and it is reported that a considerable sum of money has been placed in Prince Ching's hands for the purpose. The evident impression in Peking is that Russia, having been checked and forced back in Manchuria, will now direct her attention to the districts on the northern frontier of the Middle Kingdom.

Wednesday, November 15.

Baron Komura arrived at Taku on the 11th and was received with much ceremony. The Japanese Representative went down from Peking to meet him, as did also Mr. Ijuin, Consul-General, Major-General Kamio, Colonel Aoki and the Taotai of Tientsin. Viceroy Yuan was not present—the report on this subject is now shown to have been false—but His Excellency sent two steamers to receive the Ambassador and his suite. We gather that, the Manchu Maru having anchored outside the bar at Taku, Baron Komura and his suite transferred themselves to the shallow-draught vessels sent by the Viceroy and were then carried to Tongku, where they rested for a time in the premises of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and finally took special train for Tientsin at 3 p.m. At Tientsin all the Japanese residents as well as many foreigners, including a notable number of Russians, assembled to welcome the embassy so that the railway platform and the bridge were thickly packed with spectators. The Baron seems to have proceeded at once to Peking, arriving there at 7.30 p.m. A guard of honour furnished by the Japanese garrison and a body of Chinese infantry and cavalry were drawn up at the station, where also had assembled all the Japanese residents carrying red lanterns, as well as Mr. Na Tung, Mr. Wu Ting-fang and a number of Chinese officials. It is stated that nothing could have been more enthusiastic than the reception given to the Baron and his suite, and that he moved through the streets to the sound of cheering crowds and bands of music. At Chefoo, at Tongku, at Tientsin and at Peking this enthusiasm was uniformly conspicuous. In the Chinese capital he is the guest of the State. On the 16th he is to present his credentials to the Emperor. It is added that among those who greeted the Baron at the station were the Representatives of America, Germany and Italy, but we suspect that his old friend Sir Ernest Satow was not missing. Major-General Fukushima has been appointed a member of Baron Komura's suite.

Thursday, November 16.

It is stated that Baron Komura is to be received in audience by the Emperor of China on the 16th instant and that the negotiations will commence at once after that event.

The Hochi Shinbun has a telegram from Peking which attributes to the French Minister the performance vulgarly known as putting a spoke in Japan's wheel. M. Dubail is said to have informed Prince Ching that Baron Komura's embassy must be interpreted, in the sense of a design on Japan's part to secure for herself not merely nominal but also practical privileges of a dominant nature in Manchuria. He warned the Prince that in the event of China consenting to such an arrangement the other Powers would certainly demand equal treatment, which might be exceedingly inconvenient for China.

Mr. Chou is said to have suggested to Prince Ching that as the Hungluts are sure to show unpleasant activity in Manchuria after the withdrawal of the restraints imposed by the presence of the Japanese troops, and as no force to hold these bandits in check is available at present in the Three Provinces, it would be advisable to retain the services of a section of the Japanese troops for the present. What view Prince Ching took of this proposal we do not learn, but it did not commend itself at all to the astute Viceroy Yuan. He decided that much the better plan would be to place a part of the Chinese Northern Army at the disposal of Governor Chou for police purposes, and having submitted this programme to the Throne, he at once obtained imperial sanction. Governor Chou's idea does not commend itself as either very practical or very wise.

Friday, November 17.

It is stated that Viceroy Yuan, when received in audience on the 14th instant, was applauded from the Throne on account of the success of the recent military manoeuvres and also on account of the efficiency of the police and gendarmes in Tientsin. He is further said to have been instructed that any concessions previously made to Russia in Manchuria may be transferred to Japan, but that care must be taken to avoid any other infringement of China's sovereignty. Prince Ching's instructions to those charged with the conduct of the negotiations are reported to be that the sovereignty and interests of China must be guarded, and that, if possible, the general question of East Asia must be definitely disposed of.

Baron Komura is said to be in excellent health. On the 16th he was to be received by the Emperor. The Plenipotentiaries of the two Empires are to submit their credentials on the 18th instant. It is stated that the credentials of the Chinese Plenipotentiaries will be couched in exactly the same language as those of the Japanese.

Tokyo newspapers state that, the Japanese Government having applied to the Chinese to relax the prohibition on the export of salt inasmuch as Japan is suffering from scarcity of this staple owing to the inclement weather of last summer, the Chinese Government has decided that in consideration of neighbourly relations, it will hand over 20 million catties of salt free of charge. This is a valuable present. Salt is selling to-day at 10 sen per sho (about 1 1/2 catties).

Sir Robert Hart is making arrangements to extend the Chinese postal system to Manchuria. As each of the Japanese post offices, established during the war, is withdrawn, its place is to be taken by a Chinese substitute.

The extra-mural districts of Mukden were thrown open to general residence and trade on the 21st of October, and immediately there flocked thither from Liaoyang a multitude of petty tradesmen and others, so that the suburbs of the city have become very gay, though the city itself continues to be closed to all but officers and persons having permits. Tieling also is reported to be flourishing. The Japanese troops collect there and remain some two days before extraining for Tairen, thus the place is crowded and a roaring trade is done by all classes of small store-keepers and trucksters. Meanwhile winter has definitely set in. The Liao is completely frozen and all traffic by boat is suspended.

It may here be mentioned that the troops expected to return to Japan before the end of the present year are the four newly raised Divisions, the Kobi and the First Army.

THE PROGRESSISTS' PROGRAMME OF FINANCE.

Very great interest attaches to a document just issued by the Political Investigation Committee of the Progressist Party, showing the Committee's ideas of the financial situation. Unfortunately the calculations err very seriously owing to a blunder which we shall presently explain, but as an exposé of the views entertained on the general problem by this great political party, the programme remains worthy of study. It begins by asserting the sound principle that outlays should be regulated by income and it then sets forth the income of the Treasury during the past seven years:—

STATE INCOME.	Yen.
1899	254,254,516
1900	295,854,861
1901	274,359,043
1902	297,341,415
1903	259,990,254
1904	349,672,223
1905	304,363,988
Average	290,833,759

The question is, what will be the income in 1906? The Committee set it down thus:—

INCOME FOR 1906.	Yen.
Estimated Income for 1905	304,363,988
Extraordinary Special Taxes	160,794,517
Total	465,158,505

It is here that the committee perpetrate an error by counting the same item twice over. In the sum of 160 3/4 million yen shown under the heading of "extraordinary special taxes," there is included the war tax imposed in 1905 as well as the increased produce of State Monopolies; a total of 70 million yen, approximately. But this sum is already included in the income for 1905—namely 304 3/4 million yen—and consequently the Progressists' figure for 1906 is 70 millions too large; they ought to have shown a gross income of 395 millions instead of 465.

Turning now to their statement of Expenditures we have the following:—

STATE EXPENDITURE.	Yen.
1899	254,165,453 Settled Account.
1900	292,749,961 do
1901	266,856,727 do
1902	289,326,637 do
1903	249,596,034 do
1904	390,674,413 Estimate.
Average	279,259,086

Since this average includes the two altogether exceptional years 1904 and 1905, it can not properly be taken as a basis for calculating the outlays in 1906 when the country will no longer be engaged in a great war. The committee therefore select the expenditure of 1903 as a basis and obtain thus the following estimate of the outlays and income in 1906:—

OUTLAYS AND INCOME IN 1906.	Yen.
Outlays (as per 1903 account)	249,866,034
Income	465,158,515
Surplus	215,562,481

This surplus, if we apply the correction indicated above, should be, not 215 1/2 millions but 145 1/2 millions.

The Committee then compile a first list of post-bellum undertakings, namely, those that may be counted unavoidable:—

FIRST LIST OF "POST-BELLUM" UNDERTAKINGS (ORDINARY).	Yen.
Interest and Sinking fund of National Debt	420,000,000
Pensions to Officers and Soldiers	20,000,000
Cost of Naval Increment	7,000,000
Cost of adding 4 Divisions to the Army	12,000,000
Expenses in connexion with Port Arthur, Korea and Saghalien	2,000,000
Total	161,000,000

Taking the erroneous figure 215 1/2 million yen as representing the income, the Committee conclude that there will be a surplus of 54 3/4 millions, but if the correction of 70 millions be applied, there is really a deficit of 15 1/2 millions.

With regard to the second list of post-bellum undertakings, the Committee's figures are:—

SECOND LIST OF POST-BELLUM UNDERTAKINGS (Extraordinary.)	Yen.
Increase of Warships and Repairs	35,000,000
Army Increment (equipment, etc.)	14,000,000
Repairs, rolling stock, etc., of East-Chinese Railway	10,000,000
Railways to link the Manchurian and Korean systems	23,000,000
Fortifications and Docks at Port Arthur, Mines in Manchuria and Harbour-construction	15,000,000
Total	97,000,000

There would consequently be an excess of expenditures over revenue to the extent of 42 1/2 million yen according to the Progressists' Committee, but in reality an excess of 112 1/2 millions. Apart from the error—which has naturally brought much ridicule on the Progressists, though they explain that the above statement of accounts was merely tentative and had not received the Party's endorsement,—apart from this the interesting feature is that the Progressists, judging by their manner of compiling the account, would seem to have adopted a positive policy and to be in favour of undertakings which, if any inference might be drawn from Count Okuma's tone, they were supposed to condemn.

THE EMPEROR AND MARQUIS OYAMA.

On the evening of the 8th instant the Emperor addressed the following message to Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama:—

"You have long been abroad in the execution of important duties and at the head of a great army. I desire to see you at once and to receive your report of the protracted operations in the field. Return therefore forthwith, accompanied by your staff, and present your report."

It will be remembered that the Field-Marshal's desire was to remain in the field until the end or the middle of January as he was unwilling to leave the army at an earlier date. Rumour then predicted his return before the end of the year; subsequently the middle of December was spoken of; afterwards the 1st of December was assigned as the date of embarkation at Tairen, and now, in view of the above message, it is not unlikely that the Commander-in-chief will reach Tokyo about the 20th of this month.

In reply to the Emperor's mandate requiring his speedy return to report the course of the campaign in Manchuria, Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama expresses profound thankfulness for the Sovereign's gracious commendation of the manner in which he (Marquis Oyama) discharged the duties of an office all too heavy for his capacity, and announces that he will set out on his return journey on the 25th instant.

Original from

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY.

Four Japanese journals published leading articles on the 9th instant—namely, the Asahi, the Kokumin, the Fiji and the Chuo. The Asahi gave a photograph of Sir Claude MacDonald and the Chuo a picture of the King. The Asahi says that although the sound of Japan's bansais can not reach England, the hearts of the two peoples speak to each other audibly. Confucius well said toku wa ko narazu kanarazu tonari aru (virtue is not isolated; it certainly has neighbours). Great Britain and Japan have come together because their pacific and just purposes formed a natural bond. When sentiments are one, distance is annihilated. The people of Tokyo now place over their doors the crossed flags of the Union Jack and the Rising Sun, and know assuredly that peace has come to dwell under them. The Kokumin says that Great Britain's Indian Empire is secured; that Japan's position in Korea is assured; and that the peoples of the two island empires have joined hands to maintain China's integrity and the open door. It is commonly said that constitutional countries are founded on laws. But a constitution can not have any practical reality without a worthy Sovereign. The King of England has shown himself to be a monarch possessed of dignity, ability and foresight. Since he ascended the Throne his Empire's relations with foreign Powers have felt the influence of his noble purpose. England is an old country but her activity is that of perennial youth, and her fortunes are constantly expanding. The Fiji Shimpō, like its colleagues, attributes to England the merit of having prevented the recent conflagration from spreading to the whole of Asia if not to the whole world. And now, by forming the new alliance, Great Britain has guaranteed peace to hundreds of millions of Asiatics. It is often said in praise of England's truly constitutional system that her Sovereign rules but does not govern. It must now be admitted, however, that the present Sovereign of England is a true pilot of her foreign affairs and has steered her into the haven of tranquillity and prosperity. The evidences of respect shown by England towards Japan in sending a Royal Prince to carry her highest Order to the Mikado and in establishing an Embassy in Tokyo are not lost upon the Japanese. They know how to be grateful. The Chuo Shimbun says that peace is the true aim of the British Monarch. To secure it he has not hesitated to lead his country out of the splendid isolation of centuries. Before the world had recognised Japan's powers King Edward's sagacious foresight recognised it and induced him to make the alliance which has now grown into an instrument for guaranteeing Asiatic tranquillity. Japan owes it to England that the countries of the world now place her among first-class Powers.

SIR CLAUDE MACDONALD'S RECEPTION.

Chief Chamberlain Count Toda was specially despatched by the Emperor to convey to the British Embassy on the 9th instant His Majesty's congratulations on King Edward's birthday. This is a step not previously taken, and it is understood that the procedure thus inaugurated will be followed in the case of all countries having embassies in Japan. The King of England set the example on the 3rd instant by despatching a Chief Chamberlain to the Japanese Embassy in London.

YOKOHAMA.

Owing to the fact that Great Britain was not represented at Yokohama by any warship, no salutes were fired at noon in honour of the birthday of King Edward the Seventh, but various men-of-war and other vessels dressed ship. As the occasion was not observed as a bank holiday there was no general closing of premises, but British houses in many cases put up their shutters and displayed their flags. In the Japanese town there was a very extensive show of bunting—consisting for the most part of crossed British and Japanese national flags. Governor Sufu and Mr. Ichihara, Mayor of Yokohama, paid a ceremonial visit to the British Consulate in the forenoon, but apart from these—for the reception to Admiral Togo and his officers at the Yokohama United Club had only an accidental connexion with the celebration of the anniversary—there were no special demonstrations in Yokohama. A large number of residents proceeded to Tokyo in the forenoon and called at the British Embassy for the double purpose of observing the King's Birthday and of offering their congratulations to Sir Claude MacDonald on his elevation to the rank of Ambassador.

NAGASAKI.

The British Squadron happened to be in Nagasaki on the 9th instant. Admiral and Lady Noel entertained the Governor and Mrs. Arakawa together with other Japanese on board the flagship in the afternoon and gave a banquet to the Governor in the evening. The students of the Shihan-gakko repaired to the flag-ship and sang the song composed by the Empress. On the previous evening the Governor gave a dinner to Admiral Noel and several of his officers, and in the evening a ball took place under the auspices of the Bankers Club.

ARCHBISHOP O'CONNELL.

His Grace Archbishop O'Connell was received in audience by the Emperor on the 10th instant. No particulars are published but the Japanese press seems to be now satisfied that the Archbishop's mission has no deeper purpose than to convey to the Mikado the Pope's thanks for the consideration and kindly protection extended by the Japanese forces in Manchuria to Roman Catholics and their property.

We read in the Kokumin that the Emperor used the following words in replying to Archbishop O'Connell's address:—Chin wa shiken no oyobi kagiri naigwai wo towasu kyoto wo hogo subeshi kokoro wo yasunzen koto wo nosomu (You may rest assured that I shall protect followers of religion, whatever their nationality, to the fullest extent of my Sovereign power).

On the 11th instant, by command of the Emperor, the Minister of the Imperial Household entertained the Archbishop in the Shiba Detached Palace at luncheon.

The Fiji Shimpō sent a representative to interview the Archbishop but his Grace said little beyond assuring his visitor that nothing could have been more satisfactory than his reception at the Palace or than the gracious words addressed to him by the Mikado. The Fiji advises that some steps be taken to give the prelate a public entertainment. Japan has recently been visited by representatives of learning, of politics and of naval prowess. She has welcomed them all publicly and hospitably, and she ought now to welcome the representative of religion.

The Nippon has an article on the subject of the Archbishop's coming, an article which leaves nothing to be desired in point of frankness. It says that the Roman Catholics have the largest number of converts of any foreign faith in Japan, namely, sixty thousand, but it adds that where the propagandism is going on and what the propagandists are doing, no one knows. In fact the whole thing produces scarcely a bubble on the surface of the nation's life. The Roman Catholic teachers think that the Japanese, being poorly clad and living, for the most part, humble lives, must be semi-barbarous folks, and they accordingly preach a faith which relies wholly on superstition and makes no appeal to reason. But the Japanese are rich in the reasoning faculty. Such teaching does not appeal to them. They see that their own educated men are superior in intelligence to these preachers of a strange creed and they decline to be converted. Japan, her affinities being with Anglo-Saxondom, inclines rather to the Protestant faith, which also attracts her as the religion of freedom of conscience. But the Protestant propagandists too leave much to be desired in respect of ability and personal magnetism. There is, in fact, no great teacher of a foreign faith now in Japan. The Greek Church made some semblance of success at one time, but it has now come to be associated with a policy of aggression, and until Russia purges herself completely of her evil reputation, the Church she obeys will remain discredited. The Nippon is nothing if not outspoken, but when its utterances have been fully discounted for that reason, there is still a residuum worthy of attention.

DESTRUCTION OF THE TOKUGAWA MANSION AT SHIZUOKA.

The mansion of the ex-Shogun Prince Tokugawa Keiki was destroyed by fire on the night of the 7th inst. After the fall of the Bakufu Government and the abdication of the Shogunate, its last representative retired from public life and built for himself a residence on his Shizuoka estate, adopting as his heir, and therefore as head of the Tokugawa Family, Tayasu Kamenosuke, then head of one of the Gosankyō. The latter is now President of the House of Peers. Subsequently the Emperor, by a special exercise of grace, conferred the title of Prince on Keiki also, thus creating another family of Tokugawa princes. The recipient of the new title then abandoned his comparatively reclusive life at Shizuoka and took up his abode in the Sugamo suburb of Tokyo, handing over his Shizuoka mansion and its surrounding grounds to the people of the district. Thereafter the mansion—a building so spacious that rumour commonly assigned six maid-servants for its service—was converted into an inn—the Aoi Hotel—but it did not prosper in that capacity, and when the question of finding quarters for the Russian prisoners became urgent, the people were glad to see the building utilized for that purpose. A fire broke out there in August last but was quelled after it had consumed the billiard-room. The conflagration on the 7th instant proved intractable, however, and the whole edifice was destroyed.

It is stated that the burning of the building was due to incendiarism. The flames broke out in a store-house where no reason whatever existed for the presence of fire. There was no insurance. The owner was Mrs. Yasuike and the edifice had been let to the War Office for a rent of 250 yen monthly.

THE RETURNING TROOPS.

The citizens of Tokyo are giving a very cordial welcome to the returning troops. There have not yet been, and there could not have been, any organized demonstrations on a large scale, but each ward seems to be sending out its own band of citizens with "flaunting banners and flaring trumpets" to meet the home-coming heroes as they arrive by detachments from the front. One marvels how so many things called "bands" can be mustered in the capital. Sometimes the musical instruments consist of nothing more dignified than tin whistles and concertinas, but there is always a big drum, and what is wanting in harmony is made up in vigour of blowing and beating. There is of necessity a close resemblance between the manner of welcoming the troops home and the manner adopted at the time of sending them off—in each case alike a cheering crowd, a forest of fluttering pennants and a musical din are the cardinal features. But the hearty gaiety of the people who flock to Shimbashi to meet the incoming trains is plainly a sentiment of different quality from the artificial enthusiasm of the original leave-takings. There was a time in 1904 when every soldier ordered to re-inforce the investing army at Port Arthur believed himself to be going down to death, and the groups of friends and relatives who followed him to the railway station could not for all their stoicism hide every trace of sorrow and apprehension. There is no mark of any such sentiment now. The citizens are simply brimming over with happiness, and the soldiers as they arrive see their triumphs reflected in the faces of their fellow countrymen. As for the soldiers themselves, they are not without traces of the hardships they have endured.

It has been suggested in some quarters that inasmuch as the Portsmouth Treaty allows a term of 18 months for the complete evacuation of Manchuria, and inasmuch as Russia will probably be unable to accomplish the performance at an earlier date, some kind of obligation or expediency would compel Japan to keep a body of troops there for a corresponding time. There is not, we are persuaded, any value in such a forecast. Japan will consult her own convenience entirely. Indeed one may infer as much from the language of the convention arranged between Major-Generals Fukushima and Wolnofsky, which document has now reached Tokyo. It provides that while 18 months is to be the maximum period, either of the contracting parties is at liberty to remove its whole army at any time during that period. Meanwhile the Japanese troops are returning rapidly. We read of arrivals which have already taken place or are immediately imminent at Nagoya, at Awomori, at Shinagawa, at Ujina, at Tadotsu and elsewhere.

Among the head-quarter staffs of Army Corps the first to return will be that of General Baron Kuroki, whose forces first took the field. The General has issued an eloquent instruction to the troops under his command. He does not hesitate, as indeed he should not, to tell them that they have nobly performed their task as soldiers, but he reminds them earnestly that their duty to their country requires them to be models in peace as well as in war, and that on their return to their native places, it will be for them, while cherishing the memory of their experiences, to refrain from everything in the nature of boastfulness. General Kuroki speaks in feeling terms of the brave and beloved comrades whose corpses the Army leaves behind in Manchurian graves and of those who have become cripples in their country's service. It may be assumed that General Kuroki's return to Tokyo will be immediately subsequent to that of Marshal Oyama.

There has been much curiosity as to the question how the troops of Russia and Japan would be withdrawn from Manchuria so that neither side might precede or follow the other. In all probability this particular phase of the question caused little concern to the two Governments, since no importance whatever attaches to a point of precedence in such a matter. The main object with each would naturally be to get their troops home as soon as possible, that being their obvious duty to the men in the field as well as to the tax-payers at home. The public is now placed in possession of the details by the Asahi Shimbun's correspondent, who describes the arrangements embodied in a convention between Major-Generals Fukushima and Wolnofsky. It appears that on the 30th of October the second meeting between these two plenipotentiaries took place at Supingchieh. General Fukushima's party proceeded thither in the morning, and were met mid-way by a squadron of Russian cavalry which escorted them to the rendezvous. The conference lasted until 6.30 p.m., after which the Japanese and Russians dined together and the former remained for the night in the latter's quarters. On the 31st the convention, done into Japanese and Russian, was signed, but apparently not until late in the evening for the Japanese returned after nightfall, declining, on that account, the cavalry escort which the Russians would have sent with them. The following is the order of evacuation as set forth in the document:—

1. By the 31st of December, 1905, the Japanese troops are to withdraw from their advanced posts within the lines of Fakumun, Kinkiatun, Changtu, Wei-yuan-paun and Fushun. The Russians, by the same date, are to withdraw within the lines of Itungchow, Yeholing, Weitszkau, Pamienching and Shanchingtsz.

2. By the 1st of June, 1906, the Japanese will withdraw from Fakumun, Tielhing, Fushun and the regions immediately south of them; and the Russians will withdraw from Shanchingtsz, Kunchuling station, Itungchow and the regions immediately north of them.

3. By the 1st of August, 1906, the Japanese will retire from Hsinmintun, Mukden, Fushun and the districts immediately south of them; and the Russians, from Sankiatun, Changchun, Palipau and the regions immediately north of them.

Proceeding in the above order, the two armies will withdraw so as not to leave more than 250,000 men each in Manchuria after the 15th of April, 1906, and not more than 75,000 men each after the 15th of October, 1906; and the high contracting parties agree that by the 15th of April, 1907, each shall have withdrawn the whole of its forces. But it is provided that, as laid down in the Portsmouth Treaty, 15 men per kilometer may be retained as railway guards.

With regard to the transfer of the railway, the arrangements are as follows:—

On the 15th of May, 1906, a committee of 3 shall be sent out by both sides and the transfer shall commence. By June 1st, 1906, the line south of Kunchuling station shall be handed over, and by the 1st of August the section northward of that place shall be placed in Japanese possession. This order of transfer has been agreed to inasmuch as Russia has to withdraw her forces by rail within the regions occupied by them. We do not discover, however, that this agreement decides who shall be the owner of Changchun (Kwanchingtsz) station. Apparently both sides claimed it, and, being unable to arrive at a decision, agreed to leave the matter for diplomatic adjustment. We read in the same correspondence that the Russians, according to Chinese reports, have taken up all the rails between Shwang-miaotsz and Changchun and carried them away. A great quantity of rails are stacked at Changchun, but throughout a length of many miles south of that place, the road is said to be denuded. The Asahi's correspondent, while pointing out that this story comes primarily from the Chinese, says that he has other information which tends to confirm it.

It will be observed that while the convention determines the latest dates for the completion of withdrawal from the various sectors, it imposes no limits as to speedier retirement. In short, each side may be as expeditious as it pleases, but it must not show more than a certain measure of tardiness.

THE RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

It is now stated that 4000 Russian prisoners hitherto confined in the Hamadera prison near Osaka will be handed over at Kobe on the 12th and 13th instant, and 2,000 men confined at Narashino in Shimosa will be handed over at Yokohama on the 13th. These are all Port Arthur men, and they are to be carried to Vladivostok. The idea is that one half of the total number of Russian prisoners will go to the northern fortress and the remainder to Odessa. Presumably the Vladivostok men will have to remain there for something like a year, as the capacity of the railway will be fully taxed to carry the troops at the front. It may be, however, that the transfer to Vladivostok is merely a temporary measure pending the provision of sufficient shipping facilities.

On the 15th instant twenty-six Russian officers will be handed over in Kobe. Among the number are Admirals Rojestvensky and Wiren.

The return of the Russian prisoners commenced simultaneously in Kobe and Yokohama on the 12th instant. During four days beginning with that date the first batch will be handed over, namely, in Kobe 113 officers and 5,000 men; in Yokohama, 11 officers and 2,000 men. General Daniloff has proceeded to Kobe where he will superintend the arrangements. He will have his office on board the Yaku. Lieut.-Colonel Wesselofsky will officiate in a similar capacity at Yokohama. The Japanese will be represented by Colonel Harada at Yokohama and by Colonel Asagawa at Kobe.

Admiral Rojestvensky and 25 officers forming his staff will be handed over at Kobe on the 15th. The Admiral is to travel home at his own convenience. It is reported that 12,800 among the Russian prisoners have asked permission to become naturalized in Japan.

Lt.-General Daniloff, accompanied by the members of his staff and introduced by the French Representative, repaired to the Palace on the 10th instant and was received by the Emperor in audience.

Colonel Melchonsky and ten other Russian officers, from Shidzuoka, and 676 non-commissioned officers and men from Shidzuoka and Narashino arrived in Yokohama at 5.55 a.m. and 676 men from Shidzuoka and Narashino at 6 p.m. on Nov. 13th. They were at once sent on board the Russian volunteer ship Yaroslavl (Capt. Oranofsky), which had arrived at Yokohama the previous day. A third batch consisting of 637 men from Shidzuoka and Narashino were to arrive in Yokohama at 5.50 a.m. to-day, Nov. 14th. The Yaroslavl (which has brought the Russian flag into the harbour for the first time since the war) leaves at once for Vladivostock. The Oda-waraya, Fujiya and other hotels were assigned for the accommodation of the Russians. The early arrival of the Yaroslavl, proves a great convenience for the Japanese authorities as well as for the Russians.

On Nov. 13th, 1,442 Russians from Hamadera left Kobe for Vladivostock.

A telegram from Nagasaki says that although Vladivostock is supposed to have barracks capable of housing 6,000 prisoners, it can not in reality accommodate more than one half of that number, and that the Russian Government will be indisposed to send many of the prisoners to Odessa in the present disturbed state of that port. We regard these statements as mere alarmist rumours. What may be taken for granted is that the Russian authorities will not ship prisoners to Vladivostock unless there is ample accommodation for them there, and as for the condition of Odessa, either order will have been fully restored before any of the prisoners can arrive, or such disorder will reign that the Russian Government's mandates will have ceased to run and the presence or absence of a few thousands of unarmed troops will make no difference. But it must be admitted that the despatch of any of the prisoners to Vladivostock seems an uneconomical course, unless the men going thither are to be retained for service in East Asia. Meanwhile Shanghai circulates alleged telegrams from Vladivostock saying that an insurrection has broken out there, that the place is in a state of commotion, that conflagrations have occurred in several quarters and that the lives and properties of foreign residents are in much danger. It is added that war-ships have been despatched thither. This news has reached both the Fiji Shimpō and the Asahi Shimbun. We may mention in this context a London telegram to the Hochi Shimbun alleging that among the prisoners at Hamadera and Himeji, there are some thirty thousand who have openly expressed their sympathy with the revolutionists in the home country. In the meanwhile the prisoners are rapidly leaving Japan. On the 11th Admiral Rojestvensky and ten members of his staff arrived in Kyoto and left almost immediately for Kobe. These officers are proceeding home independently. Two carriages were sent from the Prefectural Office to carry the Admiral and the principal members of his suite to the hatoba. They leave Kobe on the morning of the 15th.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun from Shanghai alleges that the losses incurred by Chinese merchants in connection with the disturbances in Vladivostock amount to about ten million yen. That is probably an exaggeration, but considering this telegram in the context of the messages preceding it, we can not escape the conviction that the Chinese have suffered badly. Will they receive any redress? It is very doubtful.

The North-China Daily News issued on the 15th instant an extra which has been telegraphed to the Fiji Shimpō. It contains a telegram sent from Vladivostock on the 14th instant, to the effect that an insurrection had broken out there, that some 800 people were killed and wounded, that the business quarter had been almost completely destroyed by fire and that, although the actual disturbance was subsiding, the revolutionary spirit remained rampant.

Russia is certainly passing through the fire. This Vladivostock affair, happening as it does on the distant confines of her empire, has no very portentous significance at first sight, but it assumes a different complexion when we remember that a large number of the prisoners are about to be shipped from Japanese to Vladivostock and that some of them are already on their way thither. These men may constitute another element of disturbance on their arrival at Vladivostock, and at any rate all the arrangements for their reception and control must be more or less dislocated. Thus the storm cloud appears to be settling down over the Far East as it has done over Russia in Europe.

In this context a telephonic message received by the Fiji Shimpō from Kobe has great interest. It conveys a somewhat complicated story. The Russian prisoners at Kumamoto, we read, being strongly disaffected, their condition has been reported—presumably from Russian sources—to St. Petersburg and has elicited from the latter place a promise of severe punishment. Thereupon one of the disaffected officers telegraphed to the Kobe Daily News inquiring whether any information could be furnished as to the nature of the contemplated punishment. This question caused some excitement in the Kobe journal's office, and after consultation with the editor of the Russian paper issued from the same office, Mr. Terajima, the Manager, repaired to the Oriental Hotel and showed the telegram to General Daniloff. The latter replied that such matters did not fall within his province. His next in rank pressed Mr. Terajima to disclose the name of the officer who had sent the telegram, but this was of course refused. Finally an answer was sent from the newspaper office to the effect that any punishment inflicted in Japan would have to be in accord with the laws of Japan. The Fiji Shimpō's correspondent supplements this message by saying that it is an open secret that great disaffection exists among the prisoners; many have expressed a desire to go to America instead of returning to Russia, and some thousands have petitioned for leave to become Japanese subjects. These aspirations, however, need not be interpreted as indicating revolutionary sentiments. The prisoners doubtless look forward with extreme apprehension to the return journey, and many of them may possibly shrink from going home to face the conditions now existing in their own country.

The Fiji itself quotes an anonymous authority who alleges that whereas Russia originally intended to transport the bulk of the prisoners over sea to Odessa, sending only a small number to Vladivostock, and had made arrangements in that sense with the North German Lloyds S. S. Company, she has now changed her plan and will send nearly the whole of the 70,000 to Vladivostock. The Fiji's informant points out that, if this alteration of programme be correct, one of two inferences is suggested, namely, that Russia does not really contemplate any rapid withdrawal of her troops from Manchuria since she does not hesitate to impose this heavy additional burden on the railway; or that she intends to mass a heavy force along the Chinese frontier.

RELIGION IN JAPAN.

A French journal, quoted by the Independent, gives a list of the faiths professed by certain prominent Japanese, but it appears to us that the compiler of the list has been misled in some cases. Thus he describes Marquis Oyama as "a devoted Protestant." That is to us a revelation. We have never heard that the Commander-in-chief in Manchuria professes any kind of Christianity. Count Itagaki and Okuma also are set down as "servent Protestants." That is certainly incorrect. It is true that Counts Okuma and Itagaki are liberal in their attitude towards religion, but to call them "servent Protestants" is quite misleading. Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Mayor of Tokyo, and Mr. Shimada Saburo stand in the same list, though no epithet such as "servent" or "devoted" is applied to their faith. It is well indeed that such epithets should be left out. We should hesitate to describe Mr. Ozaki as an adherent of any form of Christianity and we do not believe that he himself would have any hesitation in disowning all forms, while Mr. Shimada Saburo, though commonly spoken of as a Christian, would be more faithfully depicted as an avowed believer in the "Unknown Being" who constitutes Herbert Spencer's God. Then again the French journal is altogether mistaken when it speaks of Vice-Admiral Viscount Ito being a Catholic and his wife French. It is Rear-Admiral Ito, not Vice-Admiral Viscount Ito—Yalu Ito—who married a French lady, and we have never heard that he embraced Christianity. Finally, it is our conviction that Viscount Aoki would be much surprised if he heard himself spoken of as "a follower of the Roman Catholic religion." It will thus be seen that this contribution of a religious analysis to a French journal is very deficient in facts.

THE NIIGATA SCHOOL TROUBLE.

This unhappy affair is not yet at an end. It appears that the trouble had its origin in an insulting act on the part of the lads of the Commercial School, who in their procession on the 3rd instant paraded a flag won from the Middle School in a recent boat-race. This flag ought not to have been shown outside the precincts of the School, and the boys of the Middle School regarded its appearance at the head of the procession as a direct challenge. They at once organized an attack, but it did not attain large dimensions, being checked successfully by the police. Thereafter the lads grew more and more excited, and ultimately the teachers at the Middle School, finding their control ineffective, sent warning to the Commercial School. Presently some 50 students of the former marched to the Commercial School. Their sole object being to recover the flag which had been put to an improper use, they went without any weapons in their hands. But the lads of the Commercial School armed themselves with bayonets, and even made provision of chemicals to throw in the faces of their assailants. The result was that 50 students of the Middle School were wounded and thirty of the Commercial School before the combatants could be separated. Both schools have had to suspend work. It is stated that the youths of the Middle School were about to renew their attack, this time with bayonets, when one of the teachers, Mr. Kodama, threw himself before them and declared that they must stab him to death before he suffered them to pass. The affair is still causing much uneasiness.

THE EMPEROR AT ISE.

His Majesty left Shimbashi on Tuesday by train at 9.30 a.m. In view of the very special character of the occasion all the prominent personages in the capital may be said to have assembled at the station, and the streets from the Palace to Shimbashi were literally packed with spectators. An interesting figure among those who came to see His Majesty off was the Empress-mother, Madame Nakayama, who is now some 80 years of age.

His Majesty passed Kanagawa at 11.10 a.m. and Hiranuma at 11.15 a.m. The Takachiho, Naniwa, the Hansa and various merchant-men, including the Russian volunteer ship Yaroslav now at Yokohama, were fully dressed in honour of the occasion. When the horen (carriage of the Emperor) was passing Kanagawa, the Japanese and German warships saluted with twenty-one guns each. The Kanagawa Railway Station was crowded with people and flags bearing the names of various public bodies were displayed. A band played the national anthem while the train was passing. The train ran through at usual speed.

The Hiranuma Railway Station was also crowded, there being present children from various schools. On the platform, high officials of the Kencho, District Court, Customs, City Office, Silk Conditioning House, and other offices, the presidents of the Prefectural Assembly, City Assembly, and Chamber of Commerce, the representatives of the Yokohama branch of the Ladies Patriotic Society, and the Yokohama Shohai Gikwai, etc. were present to see His Majesty pass. Some day fire-works were sent up. When the train approached a band played the Kimigayo, and bugles were blown by school boys outside the station. The train also passed this point at the usual speed. It consisted of the following:

1st.—Locomotive dressed with evergreen leaves and two Rising Sun flags.

and carriage.—Officials of Railway Bureau.

3rd.—Petty officials of the Imperial Household and officers of the Imperial Body Guards.

4th.—A double carriage, one portion of which was occupied by the chamberlains, officials of the Imperial kitchen, attendants, pharmacists, and luggage of the Emperor; and the other by Count Katsura, Premier; Viscount Tanaka, Minister of the Imperial Household; Marquis Takatsuka, Viscounts Hojo, and Ayanokoji, Barons Yoneda, and Sawa, Drs. Oka, Morinaga, and Nagama, and other chamberlains, aides-de-camp, masters of ceremonies, etc.

5th.—The Horen, or Imperial carriage, which is in three compartments, the first a dining room and the second and third saloons. His Majesty was in the second saloon in company with Marquis Tokudaiji, Grand Chamberlain, and Baron Okazawa, Chief Aide-de-Camp.

6.—Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff Office, Major-General Nagaoka, Vice-Chief; Baron Ito, Chief of the Naval Staff Office, and Rear-Admiral Ijuin, Vice Chief; Baron Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy, General Terauchi, Minister for War; and secretaries of the Imperial Household.

7.—Subordinate officers of the Imperial Household and the Home Office.

8.—Officials of the Railway Bureau, etc., and luggage of the Imperial party.

The train passed Kodzu at 12.30 p.m., when speed was reduced and His Majesty took tiffin. At 3.45 p.m. the train arrived at Shidzuoka where the Emperor passed the night in the Detached Palace. The citizens had erected a large triumphal arch in front of the railway station to welcome His Majesty. Ote-machi, Sakai-cho and other streets which he passed en route to the Detached Palace were handsomely decorated with bunting, etc.

In connection with the Emperor's visit to the Shrines of Ise, the Third Squadron, under Vice-Admiral Uriu, which had been stationed in Shinagawa Bay, weighed anchor on the 13th and proceeded to Ise Bay. This squadron consists of the Asahi, Chitose and Otowa.

In one of the many charming letters which the late Major-General Palmer, R.F., sent to The Times is an account of a visit he once paid to the Shrines of Ise, and from it we take the following extracts, referring our readers to his book, "Letters from the Land of the Rising Sun" for the complete letter:

In Yamada and its neighbourhood you come face to face with the two most famous and hallowed shrines of one of the oldest religious systems in the world. There are, it is true, a few other more ancient seats of worship elsewhere in Japan. But these "two great divine palaces" as they are called, have been for ages the centre and stronghold of the early Shinto faith, and their history runs far back into the mists of time. On the border of the town is the Geku, or outer palace, dating from the year 478 of our era. The Naiku, or inner palace, three miles beyond was established no fewer than 1892 years ago, and within it is hidden the original sacred mirror, said to have been bestowed by the Sun-Goddess herself on her adopted grandson, the founder of the Japanese Imperial dynasty. Thus, year after year for nearly 19 centuries, Yamada has been visited by unnumbered hosts of the faithful and devout. Chief of all holy places in the Empire, the Ise shrines are to the Shinto believers of this realm what Mecca is to the Moslems or Jerusalem to the Christian Greeks.

Simple and unadorned as the Shinto faith itself and exhalation like odour of antiquity, are the "two great divine palaces" of Ise. He who may think to see in them any repetition of the architectural and decorative glories which distinguish the famed Buddhist temples at Nikko and Shiba will assuredly be disappointed. At the Geku and Naiku you will find no such splendour—no wealth of colour, ornaments, or carving, no elaborate gateways or gorgeous altars, no pompous ceremonials, no images or objects exposed for veneration, no grandeur of form or cunning workmanship, no sacrifices, hardly any symbols. On the contrary, there reigns supreme in every detail the rigid, almost rude simplicity of the purest and humblest Shinto style. Except that the main posts are supported on hewn-stone blocks instead of entering the ground, that the floors are raised, and that wooden walls have taken the place of mats, the buildings approximate in form and structure to the primeval Japanese hut. Wood and thatch form the materials; brass, bronze, and iron, scantily used, the sole ornaments; plain fences of posts, rails, and palisades the outer and inner Cathedral enclosures. There is no patch of paint or scrap of gilding, no colour but the browns and drabs of thatch and weatherworn woodwork. For gateways there are merely open Arri, constructed of bare round logs, in the form with which the world is now familiar; for gates nought but hanging screens of thin white silk, for sacrifices daily offerings of water, rice, fish, salt and other simple products of land and sea. The very lamps for the service of the temple are of coarse white paper, decorated only, in black, with the chrysanthemum flower, the crest of the Son of Heaven. And in place of the long ranks of costly and beautiful toro in stone and bronze, which line the approaches to more pretentious shrines, the few of such objects that are to be seen here are of common forms, common wood, and insignificant value. As for emblems, they too are of the same simple and unaffected type. Rice-straw ropes and wisps, sprigs and wands of the rare and sacred sakaki (cleome japonica), hanging slips of notched white paper—each symbolical of some incident in the well-known legend of the Sun-Goddess's enticement out of the cave to which she retired, in wrath and pain, from the Moon-god's violence—that is all. Though the sacred mirror and its copies are there too, they are never now seen by human eyes. For each there is a spruce-wood box, shrouded in a wrapper of plain white silk and covered by a wooden cage, which again is completely hidden under a voluminous silken mantle. Within the box reposes the mirror; in a sack of brocade, or rather in a succession of sacks, for, as soon as one begins to perish from age, a new one is added without removing it. Of public ritual at these Shrines there is virtually none, except on occasional feast-days; and even then it is of the most unpretending kind.

As for the neatness and cleanliness of the temples and their surroundings, these are beyond reproach. Seen as I saw them but a little while ago, the roofs of the buildings at first seemed almost to wear the appearance of neglect. The thatch had a seedy and withered look, or showed grasses and infant bushes springing up from its surface. But you soon learn that this apparent neglect is studied. Heat and cold, sun and rain, moss, lichen and natural decay are purposely allowed to work their own will on the buildings and fences. Beyond that, all is scrupulously cared for by tender and reverent hands. Not a thing is out of place; not a weed disfigures the wide walks and gravelled spaces; not a scrap of dirt of any kind is where dirt ought not to be. Let it not be supposed, however, that the buildings themselves are of great age, or even as old as they often look. Those now standing were erected no longer ago than 1869. But in this damp and highly variable climate a single decade goes far to impair rude thatch and unpainted cedar. And, as a matter of fact, the entire structure of each temple is, and has been from time immemorial, renewed every 20th year. Not by pulling down one set and building another in its place, but by the expedient of two precisely similar sites, contiguous to one another and alternately occupied, so that the old set is not demolished until the new one is ready. The great point is the care that is taken to preserve the ancient style most faithfully in every detail. Each successive structure is an exact copy of the last—exact to Oriental fidelity—and you know that in looking on any one of them you are beholding a genuine type of the identical buildings that prevailed in Japan before the birth of Christ.

Nothing could better heighten the impression produced upon all beholders by the Shrines themselves than the solemn magnificence of the forest groves and aisles by which they are surrounded and approached. Evidently they were planted for the purpose—who shall say how many centuries ago. Splendid at all events, in form and dimensions, are the dense ranks of Japanese cedar and spruce, elm and other trees who now rear their dark masses to heights so great that the firmament is almost shut out from view. The Naiku grove is especially enchanting, and its trees—the finest without doubt in Japan—are a rare and goodly spectacle. Here the sombre stillness is pleasantly broken by the sight and sound of the clear waters of the Isuzu-gawa, spanned by rustic bridges and rushing gaily out to sea. And, as you thread the grand and lonely glades approaching the old-world shrine of the Sun-Goddess, you feel you have before you a temple within a temple, and that the outer of these, reared by the architect of Nature, is a very meet and noble tabernacle for the time-hallowed Sanctuary within.

DOCTORS AND NURSES.

Among the entertainments given in Tokyo in connexion with the war, the physicians and nurses have not been forgotten. Surgeon-General Baron Takagi gave on the 11th instant a garden party at the Tokyo Charity Hospital which may be called his creation, in honour of the nurses whom that institution had sent out to the field. Several of the Imperial Princesses were present and it was evident from the tone of the addresses delivered and from the spirit animating the affair that the great services rendered by the nurses and the sacrifices made by them were fully appreciated. On the 13th instant General Terauchi, Minister of War, entertained at the Koraku Park the principal surgeons and physicians who had assisted in organizing and manning the various medical corps in the campaign. His Excellency, in welcoming the guests, alluded in justly emphatic terms to the fine record achieved by this branch of the service and to the debt which the country owed to the medical profession. He mentioned incidentally that the Red Cross Hospital had sent out 144 bands of nurses and 2 hospital ships; as well as to the fact that 239 private physicians had given their services for the sake of the troops. The war had been of unprecedented magnitude. Over a million of men had been engaged; there had been seventy thousand deaths; a hundred and twenty thousand wounded had been carried back to Japan, and during the twenty months of war the wounded and sick had totalled three hundred and ten thousand. Out of this great number those that had died of wounds after coming under treatment had totalled only 9,800 and those that had died of sickness 15,000. Counting up the troops under arms at home and beyond the sea, there had been 1,200,000 at one time, and the fact that out of this great aggregate so few had perished from disease or wounds, spoke eloquently of the high competence of the medical service. The healing art had long been known in the East as the "humane art," and it must be not less satisfactory to its able exponents, whom the Minister had now the honour of addressing, that efforts in the cause of humanity had been crowned with such signal success, than it was to the Army, on whose behalf he now tendered his sincere thanks, to know that so many of the lives of their brave comrades had been saved by medical skill.

The numbers of sick and wounded now under treatment in Japan are shown in the following table:—

	In Hospital.	At health resorts.	Total.
Tokyo	4,522	505	5,027

THE LAW OF SIEGE.

The journalists of Tokyo met in the Newspaper Club within the precincts of the House of Representatives on the 12th inst. Their object was to take steps for procuring the abolition of the law of siege in Tokyo as well as the special regulations for the control of the press. It is reported that the measures they intend to adopt are to despatch delegates to wait upon the Elder Statesmen, the Ministers of the Crown and the most prominent members of the Diet in order to enlist their sympathies. All the journals throughout the empire will also be invited to join, not excluding the foreign papers. It is impossible not to sympathise with this movement. More than two months have passed since the extraordinary legislation in question was put into operation and the respectable residents of Tokyo must naturally feel much humiliated by the continued application of such a system. On the other hand, it is equally certain that the Administrative Authorities are not less anxious to revert to the normal state of affairs, and that they will rescind the obnoxious measures as soon as ever they judge it safe to do so. We have heard it stated by men in very high positions that the evidence in the hands of the Government does not yet justify reversion to the usual system, and of course it must be taken for granted that the Government has access to sources of information beyond the reach of ordinary individuals. Proof of that fact is furnished incidentally by the arrest of Mr. Kono Hironaka and his friends. These arrests took place on the very eve of the inception of journalistic measures to abolish the operation of the Law of Siege, and though it may not be an altogether reasonable inference that the arrests could not have been effected had the city been under the usual administrative system, it is at all events evident that the journalists, when they convened the meeting which forms the theme of these remarks had no suspicion that such an event was pending. In short, private citizens are not in a position to pass final judgment in this matter. If Mr. Kono Hironaka and his five companions, now lying in jail, are guilty of the crime of having incited the sashi and the coolie classes to the acts of violence which disgraced Tokyo and discredited the Japanese nation on the 5th and 6th of September, then it follows that so long as they remained at large and within reach of such instruments of disturbance, the peace of the city could not be preserved by normal methods. These things should be carefully kept in mind by any one joining an agitation for suspending the operation of the law of siege. The Government, it may be observed en passant, has taken a large responsibility by making these arrests, for if it can be proved that the accused politicians were not guilty of the crime laid to their charge, the bona fide character of the rioting on the 5th and 6th September will be established, and the capacity of the police will again be called in question. In short, the incident is one of great moment, and its results may be far-reaching.

The Kokumin and the Chuo have declined to join the journalistic movement in favour of the immediate abandonment of the law of siege and the special press regulations. At the head of the movement stand the Jiji, the Nichi Nichi, the Asahi, the Hochi and the Yoruzu Choho. It is alleged by the chief promoters of the movement that although the Cabinet Ministers profess to be anxious to abandon this abnormal administration, their real intention is to maintain it until the end of the Diet's session. The present expectation is that the House of Representatives will be dissolved and in view of that probability the Ministry are supposed to be desirous of keeping Tokyo under martial law until after the extraordinary general elections which will ensue.

CASUALTIES IN THE NAVY.

In the Nichi Nichi Shimbun we find a statement, doubtless based on good authority, as to the number of killed and wounded in the Navy throughout the war. The figures are these:—

Officers killed and wounded.....	307
Persons having relative rank of officers, killed and wounded	93
Warrant officers, killed and wounded.....	891
Bluejackets " "	2,333
Others " "	65
Total.....	3,689

The exact details are thus given:—

	Killed.	Died of wounds.	Wounded.
Officers	159	14	194
Persons ranking as officers	51	4	55
Warrant Officers	511	27	538
Bluejackets	1,139	68	1,207
Others	32	4	36
Total	1,892	117	1,880
Cured and returned to duty.	132	—	2
Officers	132	—	2
Persons ranking as officers	37	1	—
Warrant Officers	317	27	344
Bluejackets	1,005	73	1,078
Others	28	—	1
Total	1,519	101	1,620

These figures convey the impression that naval warfare, even in modern days of tremendously powerful ordnance, is not remarkably fatal. Two years of fighting and blockading produced less than 4,000 casualties. But if the Russian record be examined the aspect of affairs changes. In the battle of the Sea of Japan alone the Russians had nearly twice as many killed and wounded as the Japanese had throughout the whole war. All expert forecasts of the character of fights between twentieth-century battle-ships indicated that cruel slaughter must result. Twelve-inch shell and torpedoes were regarded as engines of destruction such as the men of former days never conceived. But on the whole experience has not justified these predictions. Victories at sea can evidently be won now with comparatively little cost to the victors. If the Japanese lives lost and number of men wounded in the blocking operations at Port Arthur and in the vessels sunk by mines be deducted from the above total, it will be found that the remaining casualties are wonderfully small. On the other hand the ratio of deaths to wounds is very high. No less than 1,892 were killed on the spot against 1,797 wounded, and if we take into account those that died from wounds, the number of lives lost becomes 2,011 and the number of wounded is only 1,680. In military operations the number wounded is generally four times that of the killed.

LEPROSY IN JAPAN.

Miss Riddell's visit to Tokyo to obtain assistance for the Kumamoto Leper Hospital has attracted great attention. Kumamoto is a centre of attraction to lepers on account of the Nichiren temple, Honmyo-ji, which is supposed to exercise a healing effect. Japan is said to have 30,000 lepers, being thus more afflicted than any country in the world except India, where the terrible disease claims 110,000 victims. There are no proper arrangements for segregating lepers in this country. They are allowed to wander about the country, begging alms and visiting shrines. The custom is that when a man is unquestionably attacked by leprosy, he secretly leaves his home at night, never more to return thither, and thereafter enrolling himself in the Nichiren Sect, goes about beating a drum and begging. There are only four leper hospitals in Japan and all have been founded by foreigners. This fact is naturally regarded with shame by the press, and an agitation is now on foot to procure funds for establishing a great institution where lepers may be completely segregated and duly cared for. Miss Riddell is to be sincerely congratulated on the excellent results that seem likely to attend her charitable propagandism.

THE ARRESTS IN TOKYO.

The arrests of Messrs. Kono Hironaka, Otake Kanichi, Yamada Kinoshige, Ogawa Heikichi, Hosono Jiro and Sakurai Kumataro will not greatly surprise the public. These four men, above all Mr. Kono Hironaka, were prominent throughout the anti-peace treaty demonstration, and rumour persisted in alleging that the agitation must have derived impulse and support from some source other than popular indignation. We ourselves were informed, on evidence of a nature scarcely admitting doubt, that the destruction of the police-boxes in Tokyo was an organized affair, directed by a leader who made free use of money. This man was observed by several citizens. He rode in a jinrikisha and carried a flute which he blew by way of signal. The method was that he would proceed to the neighbourhood of a police-box and there sound his flute, whereupon a body of rioters would assemble in obedience to the notes and attack the object of destruction. So soon as the box had been pulled out into the middle of the street and set on fire, the man with the flute would scatter handfuls of yen among the rioters and then move on to some other box. Evidently he worked in accordance with a previously arranged programme, and a section, at all events, of the rioters obeyed his directions and had come out prepared to obey them. If these facts be credible, it is hard to avoid the conviction that the trouble had its origin in party politics, and that the disturbance which did so much to discredit Japan in the eyes of the world was deliberately planned. Of the six men now arrested four are members of the Diet, Mr. Sakurai is a barrister and Mr. Hosono is—or was—a member of the Asahi's staff. The arrests were made early on the morning of the 11th, and the police seem to have performed the unpleasant duty with all consideration. Mr. Kono Hironaka is well acquainted with prison life. His connexion with the Fukushima affair in 1882 led to nine years in jail, and he emerged only because of the amnesty granted at the time of the promulgation of the Constitution. It will probably sound strange in foreign ears that a man with such a record should have been at once elected a member of the House of Representatives and should have actually held the position of President for a brief period, but his countrymen regard Mr. Kono as the victim of his own impetuous patriotism and not at all as a common malefactor. Mr. Hosono was apprehended in Wakayama, where he was travelling. When the fact of the arrests became known several of the leading barristers of Tokyo repaired to the office of the Chief Procurator and suggested that as the suspects were all public men whose reputation discriminated them from the rank of common felons and as there was not the least fear of their absconding, they should not be kept at the house of detention but should be merely obliged to remain in their own homes. The Procurator promised to comply as far as possible with this request, but explained that no definite step could be taken pending fuller examination.

The arrests in connexion with the emette of September 5th and 6th now total eleven, and eight warrants are said to have been issued for the apprehension of other suspects. In accordance, however, with the rules of Japanese judicial procedure, the exact nature of the offense charged against these men is not stated. Meanwhile it is alleged that some thirty-six men have come to Tokyo from provincial districts to discuss the best method of dealing with the incident. Some journals interpret the arrival of these provincials as a kind of anti-Government demonstration, but others depict them as moved by mere anxiety on behalf of the prisoners. Of course the Kokumin Club, of which Mr. Kono Hironaka is a prominent member, has begun to move actively in his behalf. The Tokyo Bar also, since several of the incriminated persons belong to it, is doing everything legitimately in its power to assist them.

The preliminary examination of the men arrested in connexion with the riot in Yokohama on the 12th of September has been concluded, and the result is that 37 have been discharged owing to insufficient evidence, 14 have been remanded for trial on penal charges and 42 have been remanded on charges of minor offences. Looking at the names of the 14, we find that the persons gravely implicated were without exception of the lowest classes, men who can not be supposed to have understood anything about the serious aspects of the international problem, and who, in all probability, were excited to riot by the unreasoning and intemperate utterances of newspapers. The latter, however, escape scot-free, though against them in reality lies the accusation of having assembled revolutionary mobs.

THE CENTRAL UNIVERSITY.

This institution celebrated its twentieth anniversary on the 11th instant. For the sake of identification it may be well to state that the Central University was originally the English Law School, after which it became the Hogaku-in (Law College) and ultimately the Chuo Daigaku (Central University). Mr. Masujima was largely influential in starting the School of English Law, and his influence has, we believe, been actively engaged in promoting it ever since. Professor Baron Kikuchi is now the President. At the meeting on the 11th there were present a number of distinguished persons, including the British Ambassador, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, Professors Hozumi and Eigi, the Minister of Home Affairs, etc. Several short addresses of congratulations having been read, the British Ambassador delivered the following speech:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN,—It is with feelings of the greatest diffidence, amounting indeed to trepidation, that I rise to say a few words on this most interesting occasion. That I, in the presence of such a distinguished company of Statesmen, Cabinet Ministers, and last but by no means least, in the presence of the most brilliant and gifted exponents of the law in this country—that I, a mere soldier-diplomat, should dare to stand up and discourse about the law, savours of an audacity verging on the sublime and undoubtedly classifies me with those unfortunate persons who “rush in where angels fear to tread.” My excuse for trying to outdo the angels on this occasion, is that the “greatness” of my present position is not of my own “achieving” but has been, as Shakespeare says, “thrust upon me” by the kind and flattering importunity of some of my legal friends; therefore, gentlemen, I crave your great indulgence and trust that the very few words I have to say, though they may not be good law may nevertheless be not devoid of interest and common sense. By the kindness of the legal friends I have mentioned I have been supplied with a few notes regarding the object of the founding of the Central University whose 20th anniversary we are now celebrating; also the “aim of its instruction” and lastly its “belief and aspirations.” The object of its founding was, I am told, “the diffusion of the knowledge and spirit of the English common law or body of laws worked out by common sense.” Secondly the “aim of its instruction” is the “practical application of law in inculcating the idea that the law is the necessary rule of real life, and not a collection of abstract principles,” and lastly its “belief and aspirations,” which are that “men trained in the above way would be fitted to understand and work out the law in the right direction.” With regard to the first, the diffusion of the English common law, this law has, I understand in common with the law of other States as its origin and substratum, the Roman Law. But England in so far as jurisprudence is concerned is isolated. She has solved her legal problems for herself, and while English law is thus historically independent of Roman Law, it is in all respects worthy of being associated with it on its own merits, and for several reasons. In the first place on account of the intellectual qualities which have gone to its formation, and the rigid logic, and above all the reasonableness and common sense of the generations of lawyers and judges who have built it up. Further on account of catholicity, for it must be remembered that in the United States of America, in India, through England's vast Colonial Empire, the common law of England constitutes most of the legal system in actual use, or is gradually being superimposed upon it. Again, and this will appeal to all and especially to laymen, we have it on the authority of one of the most erudite of English lawyers, Sir Edward Coke, who was a contemporary of the great Shogun Iyeyasu, that “reason is the life of the law, nay the common law itself is nothing else but reason.” Furthermore it has been said, though doubtless many here may not agree with me, that “English law of indigenous growth, and Roman law between them govern the legal relations of the whole world.” I venture therefore to think that the object of the founders of the School, namely, the diffusion of the knowledge and spirit of the English common law is very sound, and that the instruction which is aimed at by the teaching in this School, namely, that the practical application of the law should inculcate the idea that the law is the necessary rule of real life, and not a collection of abstract principles, is a very wise and proper teaching, and I am convinced that the hopes and aspirations of the school will be successful, and that men trained in its principles will be “fitted to understand and work out the law in the right direction” and will become most worthy exponents of what the poet describes as

The Sovereign law, the State's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elated
Sits Empress, crowning good, repressing ill.

But while the common law of England and indeed of most states is based on common sense and reason, I think the present company will agree with me in principle, though the financial results of a too rigid adherence to this principle would be disastrous to many of them, that a very excellent maxim and one replete with common sense is: “Never go to law if you can help it.” There are times when the law may come to us in the shape of the local junta, but that is another question, and one which I hope may never affect us. And now, gentlemen, in conclusion, one little word more of reason and common sense. Not very long ago I was a personal witness of a people who up till that time had shown qualities of patriotism, of devotion to right, of reason, and of common sense, which had placed them in the front rank of the nations of the earth, who, or at any rate a great majority of them, seemed for a brief space to have lost their reason and their common sense. Now I should like to tell them in this public manner how sincerely and deeply gratified are all true friends of Japan, that this weakness has been only very temporary and that reason and common sense have returned to them, and that they are settling down to carry out that high ideal of advancement and civilization which they owe to their country's glorious past. In this connection I am tempted to quote the lines of an American poet, composed relative to his own beloved country, but at the present time so applicable to Japan—

Sail on, Oh Ship of State!
Sail on, Oh union strong and great,
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hope of future years,
Hangs breathless on thy fate!—

Breathless, gentlemen—but confident. (Loud Applause.)

Professor Eigi then gave a learned lecture on the postponement of the operation of the Civil Code and on defects in the Code, after which Professor Hijikata briefly thanked the guests for their presence. The proceedings concluded with handing certificates to graduates.

In connexion with the criminal charge against Y. Kubota of having forged a number of shares of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, says the Jiji, Mr. J. Hoshino, ex-member of the Lower House, was arrested on Nov. 15th in Matsue.

NAVAL ITEMS.

Admiral Togo changes his flag from the Shikishima to the Asahi, and Rear-Admiral Togo transfers his pennant from the Suma to the Izumi. We observe also, —which is more interesting— that the Iki (formerly the Nicholai I.) is to be the flagship of Vice-Admiral Dewa, and that the Okinoshima (formerly the Apraxin) is to fly the flag of Rear-Admiral Nakao, who has hitherto been in command of the Chinyen. From this it may be inferred that the Nicholai I. and the Apraxin are in good sea-going trim.

Admiral Rojestvensky has sent his chief of staff to express to the Minister of the Japanese Navy his profound appreciation of the kind treatment extended to him while in Japan and of the courteous inquiries of which he was the constant object while in hospital.

The following documents have been published:—

His Excellency BARON KOMURA,
Sec., Sec., &c.,

H.L.J.M. Minister for Foreign Affairs,
Tokyo.

British Legation, Tokyo,
October 31, 1905.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE.—In a letter addressed to me by Admiral Sir G. H. Noel, Commander in Chief of the British Squadron in Far Eastern waters, a copy of which I have the honour to enclose, His Excellency asks me to convey to the Government of His Imperial Majesty through Your Excellency the intense appreciation and gratitude felt by officers and men alike for the enthusiastic reception given to them in Japan. In this letter Admiral Noel refers very specially to the distinguished honours which His Majesty the Emperor was pleased to bestow upon himself and several of his officers, and to the gracious kindness of Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Arisugawa, and records his very grateful appreciation of the generous hospitality accorded to himself and the officers and men of the squadron by Ministers of State and others in high positions, and of the cordial welcome extended to the Fleet by all classes of the nation.

I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to add my own thanks to those of Admiral Noel, and to express my deep sense of the hearty manner in which the officials and people of Japan have co-operated in giving to the British fleet what has been a truly national welcome.

I avail myself of this opportunity, Monsieur le Ministre, to renew to Your Excellency the assurance of my highest consideration.

CLAUDE M. MACDONALD,
H.B.M. Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

His Excellency

SIR CLAUDE MACDONALD, G.C.M.G., K.C.B.,
H.B.M. Minister at Tokyo.

H.M. Ship "Alacrity" at Osaka,
October 27th, 1905.

SIR.—I have the honor to request that Your Excellency will be good enough to convey to the Government of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Japan the intense appreciation and gratitude felt by officers and men alike for the enthusiastic reception of the Squadron under my command during its visit to Japan.

In the first place, I and my staff and the senior officers of the Squadron were treated with much distinction by, and were the recipients of high honors at the hands of His Imperial Majesty himself, for which we shall ever feel the deepest gratitude to His Majesty.

We have also been honored by Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Arisugawa and other members of His Imperial Majesty's Court, and their gracious kindness will never be forgotten.

His Majesty's Minister and other members of the Government have also received and entertained us in a most cordial and generous manner.

The officers and men of His Majesty's navy, headed by His Excellency the Minister of Marine, vied with each other in showing their sincere friendship for us. We have seen much of them, considering the short stay of the Squadron, and have learnt to appreciate the exceptional professional qualities of the Naval personnel of this country. We should feel it a great honor to work in co-operation with them on active service, should the need unfortunately arise.

We also feel deeply the reception accorded by the Municipal Authorities and residents of all classes.

The spontaneous and lavish welcome bestowed upon us wherever we went will always remain vividly in our memories.

Finally, I would add how much honored we feel to have been chosen as the recipients of this extraordinary outburst of affectionate and kindred feeling on the part of the whole Japanese Nation to ours; and if any means could be devised of making our appreciation generally known, we should be very glad.

I have, etc.,
(Signed)

G. H. NOEL, Admiral.

On the 11th instant the British Squadron left Nagasaki for Wei-hai-wei. The ships were lustily cheered, as they got under way, and the officers and men doubtless carried away with them a lasting memory of such a round of hospitalities as has never previously fallen to the lot of a fleet in a foreign country.

The following promotions are gazetted:—

To be Admirals of the Fleet.

Vice-Admirals Shibayama and Samejima.

To be Vice-Admirals:—

Rear-Admiral Togo.

" Hashimoto.

" Y. Inouye.

" Yamanouchi.

" Sakamoto.

" Y. Ito.

" Mukoyama.

" Uchida.

" S. Kamimura.

RADICAL VIEWS OF THE ALLIANCE.

Reference was recently made in these columns to the views of Mr. W. T. Stead on the subject of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Mr. Stead does not like it. It inspires him with a kind of Dr. Fell antipathy, and he does not attempt to explain the reasons of the unbelief that is in him. Curiously enough Mr. Justin McCarthy seems to be of precisely the same mind as the author of the Modern Babylon. Speaking in the Independent of "England since the Making of Peace" this home-ruler, incidentally to an almost fulsome panegyric on President Roosevelt's action with regard to the restoration of peace, writes thus:—

There is not by any means the same general concurrence of opinion in England with regard to the alliance between the British Government and the Government of Japan. The news was suddenly sprung upon us that the treaty of alliance with Japan had just been extended to something much beyond its original limits. At first the treaty merely provided that if any other state besides Russia should make war against Japan, England would be pledged to come to Japan's rescue by force of arms. Now, however, it is made known that a new treaty of alliance has been entered into between England and Japan, and the agreement it contains engages that England shall come to the rescue of Japan in the same decided and vigorous manner if even any one power should hereafter make war upon the Japanese. The British public, the British constituencies, and the Imperial Parliament have had no more to do with the making of this treaty than have the American reader of the Independent and we may safely anticipate that at the earliest moment during the next Parliamentary session the Conservative Government will be called upon to propound their justification for their sudden and unauthenticated entrance into such an agreement. I have heard many Englishmen declare that under all these conditions the only statesman who comes out of the whole peace arrangements with entire credit and honor to himself and his country is President Roosevelt.

The most striking feature of his comment is that Mr. Justin McCarthy takes an absolutely one-sided view of the alliance. The agreement "engages that England shall come to the rescue of Japan * * * if even any one Power should hereafter make war upon the Japanese." One would infer, one could only infer, from such writing that while England confers an immense boon on Japan by the terms of the Alliance, Japan gives no quid pro quo whatever. We should have been disposed to expect some such display of partizanship from Mr. W. T. Stead, but our estimate of Mr. Justin McCarthy's political morality was much higher. It seems, however, that in his case also nothing done by a Conservative Cabinet can possibly be judged fairly on its merits. To that extent do party politics even in England obscure reasonable men's reason.

"THE TIMES" ON THE ALLIANCE.

The Times, in a leading article dealing with the Alliance, makes the following comment, after giving an epitome of the conditions:—

Such in substance are the terms, and the whole terms, of this great international instrument. It marks what is undoubtedly a grave departure, but, in our judgment, a most wise and statesmanlike departure, from what has been for many years the traditional policy of Great Britain. Since the close of the great war the situation in Europe has not at any time imposed upon us the necessity of forming permanent alliances with any of the Continental Powers; nor did the conditions which prevailed in Asia render them expedient or possible in regard to Asiatic affairs, until our rivals had developed a new policy and Japan had taken her place amongst the nations. Our statesmen have been slow to realize the changes which have taken place in the Middle East and the Far East within the last generation; they have been slower still to appreciate the significance of those changes, whether for our military or for our commercial position. But they have realized both at last, and this treaty with Japan is the natural result. Two far-reaching effects of a common cause have forced us to abandon the attitude of isolation we have so long maintained. Moved by complex considerations of economics and of policy, the other Great Powers of the world have been pressing forward within the last thirty years into regions where formerly little or no European influence was felt but our own. Lord Curzon, in one of those illuminating reviews of the wider aspects on Indian affairs which have distinguished his Viceroyalty, sketched in his Budget speech two years ago some of the consequences of this advance upon the strategic problems of our great dependency. The absorption of the weaker Asiatic States which, not long since, were our only neighbours for vast distances from the frontier; the systematic sap and mine of others by an astute combination of fiscal corruption, intimidation, and intrigue; the steady construction of strategic railways to points where they can serve no purpose but to menace us; the concentration of troops and the establishment of all wide regions in the Far East, either by the actual annexation of those markets themselves, or by the extortion of privileges, monopolies, and exclusive concessions from their native rulers. Between them they threaten some of our most vital interests—the tranquillity if not the safety, of India, and our commerce with the richest undeveloped markets of the old world. Their interdependence is manifest; for they spring from the same root fact—the growing intervention of certain European Powers in Asiatic politics. Yet it is only very recently that our statesmen have reluctantly awakened to this truth. It is only now that they have taken what we trust will prove an efficacious step to avert the dangers hanging over us. The last Agreement with Japan recognized that the interests of the two Powers in the Far East were largely common. The new Agreement recognizes not only that those interests are common, but that the special means of attack within striking distance of our borders, have constituted one group of those consequences. The other group has consisted in attempts, equally systematic, to shut us out from the markets of the world. The interests of each, both our interests in the regions in the vicinity of the Indian frontier and Japan's interests in Korea, must be considered and dealt with as closely related parts of a single problem. It is the abjuration by the English Government of the delusion, long ago renounced by our better-informed allies, that Asiatic questions can be handled in watertight compartments. The wisdom of seeking to solve them in intimate alliance with the Power which approaches them on the same principles as we do, becomes manifest on the dissipation of this hereditary error. Partnership with her does not relieve us, as Mr. Balfour pertinently and seasonably reminded us the other day, from one whit of our obligation to stand armed ourselves for the vindication of our rights. It would be unworthy, and, in the long run, it would be fatal to try to shift any part of the burden of Empire from our own shoulders to the shoulders of others. That is an end which the alliance is not designed to fill, and which no alliance can fulfil. What it may do, and what we believe it will do, is to save us and our allies, for long years to come, from the need of drawing the swords which it will be our duty to ourselves and to each other to keep ready and keen.

THE "KAJI KYOKAI."

It would seem that the restoration of peace on the terms arranged at Portsmouth has given a set-back to the Kaji Kyokai (Marine Association). So at least we gather from a passage in a circular addressed by the Managers of the Association to patriotic men throughout the Empire. On the 13th the Managers, of whom the most prominent are Vice-Admiral Arichi and Messrs. Ogawa and Koto, of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, were summoned to the residence of Prince Arisugawa, President of the Association, on the 13th instant, and received from his Imperial Highness a document urging renewed diligence. This message became the basis of a circular in which we read that the Association has already one large auxiliary cruiser on the stocks, to form the pioneer of the Volunteer Fleet, and is about to lay down another so soon as sufficient money is subscribed. The return of peace, however, has produced a relaxation of effort on the part of the public and the circular, while lamenting this fact, marshals many reasons which should operate to inspire industry, and earnestly invokes the assistance of all patriots.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

On the afternoon of the 8th instant Vice-Admiral Kamimura and Mrs. Kamimura entertained Sir John See at the Mitsui Club. Admiral Togo, Admiral Viscount Ito, Sir Claude MacDonald, Lady MacDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Barclay and many others were present. The affair was quite informal. Sir John See, replying to the toast of his health, referred to the visit of a Japanese Squadron to New South Wales during the period of his premiership and said that it gave him great pleasure to recall the honour of having received Admiral Kamimura and his officers on that occasion. He spoke in strongly eulogistic terms of the qualities shown by the Japanese Army and Navy during the war, and declared that he welcomed the Anglo-Japanese alliance as a great instrument of peace.

Sir John See was received in audience by the Emperor on the 10th. His Majesty showed much interest in Australian affairs and addressed several questions to the ex-Premier, with whom he shook hands cordially both when greeting him and when saying farewell. Subsequently Sir John and his two daughters were received in audience by the Empress.

The Kokumin Shimbum says that Grand Duke Alexander will be despatched by the Tsar to Japan for the purpose of re-opening friendly relations, and that Japan, on her side, will send an Imperial Prince to St. Petersburg. It sounds singular that such things should be talked of by Russia at this crisis of her domestic affairs, but we may hope for the correctness of the inference suggested, namely, that things are not so bad in Russia as the telegraph paints them.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbum has a London telegram saying that the idea of raising the Russian Legation in Tokyo to an embassy is not favoured in the Russian Capital. It is still in contemplation to send as Minister M. Begenechieff, who is now at Sofia in Bulgaria, in accordance with the regular routine of promotion. But we judge it very unlikely that if England, America, France and Germany appoint Ambassadors in Tokyo, Russia will take a different course.

The Daily Telegraph has sent a sum of £100 to the Fiji Shimpō by way of contribution to the fund which the latter is raising on account of the sufferers by famine in the north of Japan. The gift is much appreciated by the Fiji, which interprets it as a sign that England's alliance with Japan is not an affair of politics only but also of the heart.

The Statistical Bureau of the Cabinet publishes the following figures of the population of Japan at the close of 1903, the date of the latest census:—

	Houses.
Number of residences	8,725,093
Number of inhabitants	48,542,736
Consisting of { Males	24,632,462
{ Females	23,910,274

The population at the end of 1902 had been 46,732,841 and the number of residences 8,171,577.

A French firm, whose name we can not identify in its transliterated form, has applied to the Art School in Tokyo for the services of an artist in lacquer and a sculptor. The School is said to have chosen Mr. Tsujimura Nobutaro in the former line and Mr. Asai Kwansai in the latter. Both of these gentlemen are teachers in the school. They are artists of established reputation. It is expected that they will leave Yokohama on the 28th instant.

A banquet, followed by a brilliant ball, was given on the 11th inst. at the German Legation by Count Arco-Valley. The affair passed off with great éclat, as is usual with all such functions at the German Legation.

The obstacles to the landing of Japanese at Vladivostok have been removed. This fact is officially announced.

At 10 p.m. on the 13th instant a woman of about 20 years of age lost her life on the Shinjuku line of the Shigai Electric Railway. It is stated that the driver of the car did not pay proper attention. At all events, failing to perceive that the woman had become entangled in the net of the vehicle, he did not apply the brake for some time, and before the car stopped the woman had been decapitated. Much indignation was shown by the people in the neighbourhood of the place where the accident occurred, and they are said to have been still further incensed by the driver's attempt to proceed on his journey without listening to remonstrances. There seems to be a feeling that the Shigai motormen and conductors are rough and careless and this incident, as well as its sequel, will not tend to allay the sentiment. One of the line of cars which had been checked by the event drove off at such high speed that a girl passenger became alarmed and jumped off, falling to the ground in a faint. This almost led to a fresh commotion. The woman who was killed is a particularly sad case. She had just been married, and was on a visit to Tokyo with her husband.

Reports continue to arrive as to disturbances in Vladivostok but the latest intelligence represents the commotion as quelled. At one time, if rumours may be credited, it assumed very serious dimensions. The peaceful citizens were obliged to seek refuge on board the ships in the harbour; the Chinese commercial agent telegraphed to Peking for protection, and the Chinese merchants in Shanghai were thrown into a panic by apprehensions as to loss of life and property. All accounts agree in describing the commotion as revolutionary, but no analysis has yet been published of the exact causes or immediate origin.

It is confirmed that the Emperor of Germany has sent six stallions of the finest breed to the Emperor of Japan. The horses which are said to be all jet black, have already left Genoa and are expected to reach Japan by the 19th of December.

There is a remarkable absence of any topic to evoke interesting articles in the columns of the Tokyo press. The Fiji Shimpō, taking up the subject of Australia's attitude towards the Japanese, congratulates Australia and Japan on the former's change from a suicidally conservative mood to one of wise liberalism. But our contemporary shrewdly notes that so long as the regulation of Japanese immigration into Australasia is left to the caprice of unfettered legislators, there can be no security. Therefore the Japanese Government should seize the occasion to conclude with Australia a treaty of amity and commerce containing a clause guaranteeing free ingress to Japanese subjects into Australasia and to Australians into Japan.

It is reported that the Government will not submit in the next session of the Diet its complete bill for the expansion of the Army. Financial convenience has to be consulted. The Diet will therefore be asked to sanction the increase of the establishment by only the four Divisions newly raised during the war. The full scheme will be laid before the Diet in the 1906-7 session.

It is stated that the bodies of several of the officers and men engaged in the blocking expeditions at Port Arthur have been found. The Japanese having built a mausoleum—nokotsudo (a tower for interring bones) is the word used—on the top of Pehyusan, steps were taken to disinter the corpses which the Russians had buried at the western base of the hill. The result was the discovery of the bodies of Commander Mukai, chief-engineer Shimizu, Lieut. Itoyama, first-class engineers Ono and Seinosuke, together with 14 other warrant-officers and blue-jackets. These were found on the 11th instant, and two days later the following were disinterred:—Commanders Iwasa and Shiraishi (who led the storming party at Taku in 1900) with 13 other warrant-officers and men. Finally on the 14th instant the bodies were found of Lieutenant Kasahara, Engineer Terajima and 3 others, one wearing a lieutenant's uniform but not identifiable. All these had been buried in their uniforms by the Russians and identification was thus rendered possible. The intention had been to re-inter the remains in the mausoleum, but in deference to the wishes of their families several have been sent back to Japan.

It is stated that the Government has decided to establish an office called the Kokusai Seiri-kyoku (bureau for consolidating the national debts). To this bureau will be entrusted the duty of dealing with all obligations contracted in connexion with the war. Such of the national debts as existed prior to the war and were provided for in the ordinary budgets, will remain as before in the hands of the officials who have hitherto dealt with them. The same is true of debts which may be contracted subsequently to the restoration of peace. A sum of 110 million yen annually will be set aside for the service of the debts handed by the new bureau, and those debts will all be discharged in the course of 30 years, according to the present programme. The new bureau will be under the presidency of Mr. Sakatani, and among its members will be the Presidents of the Bank of Japan and of the Industrial Bank.

The Yomiuri Shimbun has been suspended. Examining the number that contains the offensive matter, we find an incitement to the people of the provinces to assemble in Tokyo in their thousands—taikyo shite is the expression used—for the purpose of constraining their representatives to fight without flinching the contest of popular government against clan cabinets. The whole tone of the article strikes us as foolishly intemperate, but we do not find that, with the exception of the sentence here quoted, there is anything in excess of utterances which had been allowed to pass unchallenged in the columns of other journals.

We have received three letters of thanks for the sums contributed through this journal for the relief of the families of those that perished in the Kinjo Maru calamity. One of the letters is from Captain Iguchi Hambel, who commanded the ill-fated steamer; another from Mr. Saijo Tsuneo, elder brother of Saijo Iwao, an artillery soldier; the third is from Mr. Takemoto Kyuzo, whose son Mansuke was among the lost.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The Far East, by ARCHIBALD LITTLE: Oxford, at the Clarendon Press. Price 7s. 6d. ($2.00).

THESE are the days when English publishers—and for the matter of that, American publishers, too—pin their faith in a "series." So on the whole, it is not very surprising to find Mr. Archibald Little's new book appearing among a series which is being issued from the Clarendon Press at Oxford under the style and title of "Regions of the World," though he has long since demonstrated himself to be a writer fully competent to run alone. There is another point of view, of course: the distinction conferred on any literary man when asked to join a band of brilliant writers associated with any particular series: such distinction when conferred in a case like the present serves to mark the place he has won in the field of letters. We felicitate Mr. Little on the company to which he has attained. In the Regions of the World series, each volume stands entirely apart from its fellows, so the book-reading, book-loving, and book-buying public is under no obligation to buy the complete set, or even more than the one volume which appeals to the tastes and inclinations of the individual reader. Mr. Archibald Little in "The Far East," is traversing familiar ground, and several of the regions which he describes in the present volume have already found place in other works which we have received from his facile pen. In his preface he tells us that the book owes its origin to the suggestion of Mr. J. Mackinder, the general editor, and its completion to his encouragement. "The author undertook the task in the hope that his long personal acquaintance with the bulk of the countries described would make amends for his lack of expert knowledge; and that the power, acquired by a life-long residence in the East, of imparting a 'local atmosphere' to his descriptions would atone for the many deficiencies which he is the first to recognize. The book has been written literally 'in the intervals of business' and that of an absorbing character: but this business has necessitated extended travel in China and the neighbouring countries, and so facilitated the accumulation of the needful knowledge of the regions described. The first of such journeys was made in the year 1860, at the time that Shanghai was invested by the Taipings; and led from Ningpo up the Tsien-tang river through Nganhui, and so by way of the famous potteries of Kingtehchen down the Poyang lake to Kiukiang—the whole country traversed being the scene of the great struggle then going on between the forces of Hung-hsu-chuen and the Imperialists; a long journey which his acquaintance with the language, and the prestige that in those days surrounded the Englishman in China, enabled him to accomplish in safety. The present work might have been more elaborate but for the author's remoteness from the great literary centres: yet possibly there is a compensation in this respect, in that the book is not crowded with more matter than the average reader can digest. To comprise in a handy volume a description of such a vast area of the earth's surface, and of such a series of countries and peoples, has considerably taxed the author's powers of compression, and he trusts that the result may prove its worth as a useful vademecum to the traveller in the Far East, and likewise as an epitome: acceptable to the general reader at home."

Mr. Little has done his work well, and except in the earlier chapters, where several repetitions and parallel sentences, and likewise ends of sentences, occur rather too freely for the fastidious—errors of craftsmanship which undoubtedly would not have occurred had the author been able to see his book to press from title page to colophon—there is nothing which the critic can find fault with. He pays generous tribute to the help given him by Dr. Morrison, the indefatigable correspondent of The Times; to Major Ryder, R.E., with regard to Tibet; to Mr. Thos. W. Kingsmill, of Shanghai, for ethnographic and antiquarian detail; and as he goes to the fountain head for all his authorities we feel we are led by trustworthy guides all through. The volume is in large octavo, of 344 pages, and has eight coloured maps, besides many woodcuts illustrating the text. The author divides his work into seventeen chapters, the first of which is devoted to a definition of his theme and introduces us to some startling comparisons. Then he passes on, in Chapter II., to the Central Kingdom, China; and in subsequent chapters describes the Northern Basin, the Yellow River; the Middle Basin, Yangtse River, which has three chapters; the intermediate provinces; and then the southern basin, Yunnan to Canton, Manchuria, Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet, Indo-China, Korea, Siam, and Japan have each a chapter allotted to them. As an example of the limpidity of Mr. Little's urbane style we quote from one of the chapters dealing with the wonderful Yangtse river valley.

In normal years the Tungting lake region, fed from the south, receives the burst of the monsoon rains, and its waters have time to escape before the Szechuan river, as it is here called, is in flood from the drainage from the far west—the produce of the late summer rains in Yunnan and the melting of the Tibetan snows. The northern and western half of the province is mountainous, thinly populated except in the narrow valleys of the Han river in the north and of the 'Tsing' or Pure River in the west; this latter, a pellucid stream that waters the vale of Shinan and falls into the Yangtse a few miles below the Treaty Port of Ichang. Through these mountains the Yangtse, after quitting Szechuan, continues its way through the grand gorges that terminate at Ichang, situated one hundred miles to the east of the border line between the two provinces. The only possible land road from Hupeh to Szechuan follows up the valley of the Tsing river to Shinan, climbing over a succession of low passes until, after leaving Shinan, it ascends to the plateau country of Szechuan where the path falls again to the level of the Yangtse at a point fifty miles above Wan-hien in a precipitous descent of 4,000 feet; the road then crosses to the left or north bank of the river and continues west across a series of mountains to Chungking. This road, in the Hupeh portion, is quite impracticable for heavy traffic, although used at times by travellers debarred from the water route by the fierce summer downward current; but the scenery is extremely picturesque, owing to the high white limestone cliffs which hem in many of the rich intervening valleys, and the frequent ascent of the path up and over them. Yet porters, for many years, carried chests of opium from Szechuan to Hupeh by this route in order to avoid the Likin stations on the river, until the gabelle officials at last made up their minds to place Likin stations upon the land route as well, which led to the present readoption of the water route.

Deeply interesting is Mr. Little's account of the wonderful irrigation system at Kwan-hien, in Szechuan, which has turned the Chengtu plain into a veritable garden of delight. This system was first devised by Li Ping 2,100 years ago, and so honoured is the great man's memory that to this day, in addition to temples erected to his manes, his sacred maxim is still cut deep in the granite rocks of the Azure Wall mountains for all men in every age to read and bear in mind—"Dig deep the bars; keep low the dykes"; while, best of all, his work is carefully carried on and unlike most of China's public works is never allowed to fall into decay and desolation. Mr. Little also brings before the reader's mind the tree-denuded condition of large districts of China and the rapid growth of the many deltas which mark the mouths of all the big rivers of the empire, and he prophesies that before many years the Saddles and other islands which now lie in the estuary of the Yangtse will become part of the mainland, while the Gulf of Pechili will also become shallower and shallower with the progress of the years. The amount of silt carried down to the sea by the Chinese rivers is enormous and even in our own time foreign residents have seen Tientsin, Shanghai, Macao, and other towns gradually increasing their distance from the sea. The book bears warm testimony to the many good qualities of the Chinese race, while pointing out, at the same time, its deficiencies, its wilful disregard of natural opportunities, its blunders, its social delinquencies.

In the chapters dealing with the whilom dependencies of China which have passed beneath the tricolour of France during the past century we find Mr. Little keenly appreciative of the work done by the French Colonial administrators, and we conclude our short notice of his deeply interesting volume by one more quotation:—

Apart from what appears to us their short sighted fiscal policy, the French municipal administration is ages in advance of anything known in British colonies; not only is everything conceivable done for the health, comfort, business needs, and pleasure of the present inhabitants, but a wise forethought, which seems to be absolutely lacking in our dependencies and crown colonies, provides amply for future expansion. Hanoi, a city built up among Asiatic surroundings is superior in these respects to any in the Far East. Shanghai may claim more business; Hongkong may proudly refer to its Peak residential quarter and harbour reclamation; Manila to its ancient city; and Singapore to its splendid breadth; but in tout ensemble, Hanoi is undoubtedly the superior. In the amenities of life, in arrangements for preventing native overcrowding, and in sanitation generally, in wide streets, open places, strict building rules, and above all in a careful provision for the future extension of the city on a pre-arranged plan, Hanoi and Haiphong stand pre-eminent. Bombay and Calcutta display far more solid wealth and activity, but in elegance as well as in practical amenities of city existence will bear no comparison with Saigon and Hanoi. The latter city now claims to be the healthiest of all European settlements in sub-tropical Asia. The home French Government is proud of its colonies, as it has reason to be, and aids them in every way financially as well as politically, but is too much inclined to treat them as a private reserve for Frenchmen. Indo-China is now progressing by leaps and bounds; it only needs some relaxation of native imposts and greater freedom in external trade to assure the permanence of its present phenomenal progress.

CUSTOMS APPEAL.

Baron Sone, Minister of State for Finance, gave a decision on Nov. 6th in an appeal filed by Messrs. Sale Bros., No. 46, Kobe, against the Kobe Customs. The Minister dismissed the appeal. Messrs. Sale Bros. declared that they imported steel bars which come under No. 31 of the conventional tariff between Japan and Great Britain—"Mild steel manufactured by the Siemens, Bessemer, basic, or similar processes and approximating in value to iron of the same class." On this material, the Customs imposed 10 per cent. ad valorem duty in accordance with No. 241 of the general statutory tariff. It should have been dealt with under No. 217 of the same tariff which provides a 7.5 per cent. duty. The contention of the director of the Kobe Customs was that the material in dispute is not mild steel such as comes under No. 217, but is handi nature.

THE OPPOSITION IN ENGLAND AND THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

SO far as we can discover, only two English journals condemn the Anglo-Japanese alliance. They are the Daily News and the Manchester Guardian. In the columns of the Daily Chronicle, too, an objection is raised, but it is on a point of procedure rather than on one of fact. True to its habitual doctrine, the organ of the labouring classes condemns the principle which permits such vitally important compacts to be concluded "without the advice or consent of the people or their representatives being asked or obtained." The Chronicle admits, however, that such is the constitution of England, and therefore does not waste many words discussing the point, while as to the alliance itself, the editorial view is distinctly favourable, for we are told that "by securing, so far as prevision can do, the status quo in Asia, it ought to facilitate good understandings and to hinder mischief-making in Europe also." The Manchester Guardian, however, makes much commotion about this very question of procedure. It declares that the duty of Liberals is to protest against the alliance on constitutional grounds, "for it is a menace to the whole principle of popular government that a Government situated like the present should make a revolution of this kind in our foreign policy," and it contends that, even supposing there was a case for extending the alliance, "there was still no reason for anticipating the judgment of the people's representatives." A moment's reflection will show how amazingly unpractical are these criticisms. They amount to claiming that a Ministry, so soon as ever it is warned of any signs of its waning popularity, should suspend the exercise of its cardinal functions until it can obtain a renewal of the nation's mandate. But any attempt to apply such a doctrine must plainly lead to an impossible situation, for there would be absolutely nothing to determine the moment at which a Ministry's competence should be held to have ceased. The BALFOUR Cabinet, for example, maintains that it still possesses the confidence of the nation; the Opposition, headed by that most unpatriotic of agitators, Sir HENRY CAMPBELL BANNERMAN, maintains that the Cabinet forfeited the people's confidence long ago. According then to the theory of the Manchester Guardian the BALFOUR Cabinet should now stay its hand from dealing with all grave problems of foreign politics; should, in fact, bow to the verdict of the Opposition and postpone the discharge of public business until the will of the nation can be ascertained by means of a general election. The mere statement of such a doctrine is fatally convincing. Problems of foreign policy can not be subserved to domestic jealousies. A Government, so long as it occupies the seat of power, must utilize all occasions offered by the country's relations with other States. It has always been the boast of Englishmen that the country's foreign policy is independent of domestic dissensions, yet if journals like the Daily Chronicle and the Manchester Guardian had their will, everything would be made to depend upon party politics.

Concerning the Treaty itself the Daily News and the Manchester Guardian are agreed that it will impair Great Britain's prestige in India. For, according to the former journal, the people of India will regard the Treaty as "the summoning of the ablest and youngest of the Yellow Powers to share the white man's burden with him;" and according to the Manchester Guardian, the words, "Japan recognises Great Britain's right to take such measures in the proximity of the Indian frontier as she may find necessary for safeguarding her Indian possessions," are eminently calculated to injure our reputation with the Indian people. Well, after all, it pains us all in our heart of hearts to reflect that England, unable any longer to maintain her old-time attitude of splendid isolation, is obliged to associate herself with others for the preservation of her rights. But we have to ask, could she have preserved those rights without abandoning her isolation or without still greater sacrifices than abandoning it? That is the practical way, the only practical way, to face the dilemma. It must be apparent to every sensible person that England had to choose between two alternatives, the maintenance of a romantic attitude and the recognition of conditions by which the policy of other great Powers has been guided during the past 20 years. There is also another phase of the matter. It is that the first use made of the first signal victory won by an Oriental Power over an Occidental in modern times, is to recognise and promise to support Great Britain's position in India. Many observers have predicted that Japan's triumph over Russia would seriously unsettle India by fanning into flame the ashes of dead ambitions. These critics should further reflect that by the terms of her alliance with England Japan acknowledges the inevitable character of England's conquests in India.

The impression conveyed by a survey of the English newspapers' opinions is that judgment in Great Britain is entirely subserved to party politics. These, to the catalogue of their familiar attributes, have now added the character of being the nurse of prejudice.

SEA MESSAGES.

The countless messages o'er ocean sent,
Must wander far in wide and voiceless space,
Until they reach their sought-for resting-place,

The ship for which the travelled thoughts are meant.

But they will find it, though they wander far
And wandering light on many an unknown mast.

Thus every homeless soul shall find at last Through seeming failure its pre-destined star.

All wasted love, for often love seems vain,
Shall meet with love triumphant, understood.

All good that failed shall meet accomplished good,
And joys undreamed of, counterbalance pain.

Not here, but in a land no man has trod,
Near purer seas, marked on no present map,

Whose pleasant sounding waters, softly lap
The gleaming shores, about the Throne of God.

OUR ALLIES.

[DEDICATED TO HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN WITH DEEPEST RESPECT AND ADMIRATION.]

I sing to the brave Japanese,
The stately, the grave Japanese;
Could Old England ever, (true hearts say, "Oh! never!")

Have worthier allies than these?

They seek not far countries to conquer,
But rather at home to excel;

In all that is good still advancing,
In peace and in plenty to dwell.

They've taught us that silence is golden,
We bow to their grand self-control;

Nor smile at a smallness of stature,
Made up for by greatness of soul.

Then Hurrah! for the grand Japanese!
The courteous, the bland Japanese!

Could Old England ever, (true hearts cry, "Oh! never!")

Have worthier allies than these?

They've set us a noble example!
Though Christ's not professing to be,

His precepts in practice they follow
As well, if not better than we;

They tended sick, hungry and wounded,
Though enemies, dare we then say

The unerring Judge of "all nations"
May not call them blessed one day?

Then Hurrah! for the rare Japanese!
The "do what they dare" Japanese!

Could Old England ever, (true hearts still cry "never!")

Have worthier allies than these?

Hand in hand then we'll travel together
Through ages unknown yet to be,

"For better, for worse," and be never,
Dai Nippon, unfaithful to thee.

But Hurrah! for the brave Japanese!
The inscrutable, grave Japanese!

Old England can never the firm bonds discover That bind her to allies like these.

SUPREME PRIZE COURT.

The Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo, has given two decisions on appeals instituted by the owners of the British steamer Nigresia (1,416 gross tons) and the German steamer Palos (2,398 gross tons), against the decisions delivered by the Sasebo Prize Court and the Yokosuka Prize Court respectively confiscating the hulls and cargoes of those vessels. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeals and the confiscation was thus confirmed. It may be noted that the Nigresia, belonging to Messrs. Allan and Co., Newcastle, was captured by the Tsushima off Ulsan, Korea, on Dec. 19th, 1904, on her way from Shanghai to Vladivostok with seventy thousand cases of kerosene oil. The Palos was seized on Feb. 10th by the converted cruiser Hongkong Maru off Etorofu, Hokkaido, on her way to Vladivostok with iron materials for constructing warships, food-stuffs, etc. It is added that this German ship left Hamburg on Nov. 24th, 1904, having shipped there the contraband and that she steamed through the Java Sea for her destination.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Yokohama Literary Society have now got into the full stride of their winter's work, the second meeting of the season, held last evening at Van Schaick Hall, attracting a large audience. The President in introducing the speaker of the evening said that Prof. MacCauley was one of a brilliant band of scholars who, coming to Japan from the eastern states of North America, had devoted their best energies to a study of the land and the people among whom their lines were temporarily cast. Prof. MacCauley had made a profound study of Japanese literature and many present had read his charming translations of old Japanese poetry and legendary tales. His head and heart were linked to Japan, but five years ago, those little invisible cords which bind us all so subtly and so closely to the lands of our birth, set up such an insistent vibration within his breast that Prof. MacCauley reluctantly went back home. But again he "heard the East calling," and returned for a short visit to the scenes of his former activities; while to the great delight of his many friends in this port, he placed one of his few spare evenings at the disposal of the Literary Society. The Society greatly appreciated the compliment paid them.

Prof. Clay MacCauley, who was warmly received, then read his essay, entitled "There was no Other Way"—a tale of Old-Modern Japan. The story turned upon the working of the samurai code of personal honour under social conditions possible in the Japan of to-day. A merchant, low-born but having become wealthy, being fascinated by the grace and beauty of the young daughter of a samurai whom he had seen at a family pleasuring in the spring, determined to make her his wife. He found this easy to do as the samurai was financially at his mercy. But in doing this it was necessary to annul a partial promise of marriage of the girl to one of her own kind. In the development of the story the merchant is shown as becoming dissatisfied, suspicious and, with no real reason, jealous of his wife. The movement takes place in and near Tokyo, among characteristic scenes and events. Well known suburban resorts, temples, parks, festivals, domestic manners, and customs appear in it. Soon after marriage, notwithstanding the efforts the young wife made to serve her husband in any way possible for her, the old man became dissatisfied and showed his disenchantment with but little concealment. He was essentially vulgar, and could not understand his refined, sensitive young wife. At this time he heard first that his marriage had prevented one that would have been more fitting. Thenceforward he became increasingly fault-finding. The most innocent things were misunderstood and were the occasion of rebukes and commands. At length after much unjust accusation he degraded the young wife with unbearable insult. Dishonored and put to shame, the daughter of the samurai then could find no other way than the way of the samurai—death by her own hand.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer at the close.

A motion by Dr. Dearing "that non-transferable season tickets of admission to entertainments of the Society shall be issued to all members," was, after discussion, carried. The following musical programme was discussed:

ADMIRAL TOGO AT THE YOKOHAMA UNITED CLUB.

Admirals Togo, Kamimura, Dewa and Uriu, together with their staffs and some seventy officers from the Japanese warships at present in Yokohama, were entertained at a conversazione by the President and members of the Yokohama United Club on Thursday afternoon (the King's Birthday). The distinguished party were received by Mr. James Walter, President, about 4 o'clock, Mr. Carlyle Robinson, in full Highland costume, playing "The Cock o' the North" upon the bag-pipes as Admiral Togo advanced down the Hall. Having made a tour of the handsome building, the Admirals took seats in the winter garden, around which were draped the flags of all nations. Here they were joined by Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Ambassador; Mr. G. Barclay, First Secretary of the British Embassy; H. E. Governor Sufu, the commanding officer and staff of H. I. G. M. cruiser Hansa; Mr. J. Carey Hall, I.S.O., British Consul-General; Mr. Montague Kirkwood, Mr. Otani Kahei, Inspector Ikariyama and others. The speech making was very brief, being confined to the tersest statement of the different toasts. Sir Claude MacDonald first proposed the health of the Emperor of Japan; the President proposed the health of King Edward; Mr. Ichihara that of the Rulers of all the nations represented in the cosmopolitan assembly; Admiral Togo proposed the health of the President and members of the Yokohama United Club; Mr. James Walter proposed the health of Admiral Togo and the Japanese naval officers present. All these toasts were drunk with "three times three," while the band played the "Kimi-ga-yo," and "God save the King," at the appropriate places. The guests and hosts then spread themselves about the Club, refreshments being served both up and downstairs, and the heartiest good fellowship being quickly established.

During the proceedings Mr. G. G. Brady, disguised as a sailor-man, sang "The stormy winds did blow," which caused infinite amusement, Admiral Togo leading the cheering as the singer made his exit. After a song by Mr. Gracey, the Piper led a procession twice round the Club, playing various Gaelic airs, and came to attention before the guest of honour. Soon after the three Admirals left, with Sir Claude MacDonald, for Tokyo, but the festivities were kept up after their departure till a late hour. The fine band of Admiral Togo's flagship, the Shikishima, was in attendance and played a capital selection of music.

YACHTING.

The Yokohama Yacht Club scheduled a race on Thursday, the 9th, for the Commodore's Cup, to be competed for by the 39 and 32 Raters. There were three starters; Kingfisher, Naniwa and Nina. Naniwa is the former Kingfisher, which has just been put in commission again, with considerable alterations and improvements, particularly to her internal accommodation, making her a very fine cruising yacht. She sailed under the ketch rig, and so did Kingfisher. Nina had her small winter mainsail bent, and the three yachts sailed on level terms. The cutter made the best start, crossing the line on starboard tack, and meeting the Kingfisher, on port tack, the latter had to go about. Naniwa made a poor start, being hung up just on gunfire, and was last out of the Harbour. She caught up Kingfisher, however, on the run down from the Lightship the Widow buoy, as the new yacht did not set her spinnaker. At the Widow buoy, Nina led by about five minutes from Naniwa, the latter being about a quarter of a minute ahead of Kingfisher. In the beat back to the Lightship, the wind was very variable, and of the trio, Naniwa was best served, and Kingfisher worst. The latter got into such a poor patch off Honmoku that she was badly left. Rounding the Lightship, Nina led from Naniwa by two and a half minutes, and there was a reach in to the Harbour Entrance, on which Naniwa gained a trifle, and a dead run under spinnaker to the finish, Nina regaining on this leg, and crossing the line about two and a half minutes ahead of Naniwa, thus winning the Commodore's Cup. Kingfisher did not finish.

The Yokohama Yacht Club arranged on Wednesday a race for the sendees of all yachts belonging to the Club, and by kind permission of the owners the 21 raters were placed at their disposal. The course was around the Tachibana buoy, the lightship and home, a distance of 5.3 miles. The wind was fresh from the northward, and all boats carried one or more reefs and three or four men.

At the start at 12, noon, Chocho was quickest over the line, very closely followed by the rest, except Aimee, who was one minute late.

At the Tachibana buoy Pele was leading from Edna, the other boats being scattered somewhat behind them. On the reach to the lightship Aimee seemed to gain on the leaders but not sufficiently to reach that mark first. Turning home for the Harbour Entrance, however, Aimee showed remarkable speed in spite of her double reef, and she finished first.

Chocho, being sailed admirably, easily won on her handicap of 10 minutes, her performance in this race proving that she is a much abler boat in fresh breezes than was formerly believed by the handicapper.

	Finish.	Handicap.	Corrected finish.
Aimee	1.12—	scratch.	1.12—
Pele	1.12.35	2 min.	1.10.35
Winsome	1.13.33	3 "	1.10.33
Edna	1.13.23	2 "	1.11.23
Elsa	1.17.30	2 "	1.15.30
Chocho	1.17.32	10 "	1.07.32
Lily	1.24.08	8 "	1.16.08

The total amount subscribed by members, aggregating yen 39, was distributed amongst the crews of the 7 competing boats after the race, Chocho taking first prize, and Lily last.

HONORARY CLERK OF THE COURSE:—A. J. Easton, Esq.

HONORARY TREASURER:—T. C. Anderson, Esq.

SECRETARY:—Geo. Hood, No. 72.

The first day of the Autumn Meeting was favoured with fine, bright weather, though, as might be expected so late in the season, the wind blew rather bleakly during the latter part of the afternoon, making furs and wraps for the ladies, and overcoats for the men decidedly acceptable. The course was in fair condition though rather dead, and not by any means conducive to fast times being made. The entries were considerably more numerous than the average and large fields of starters were the order of the day. The attendance of visitors was about an average for the first day. Of course with so many griffins, both Australians and China ponies, it was not easy for the public to spot the winners, but four out of the eight events were won by the favourites for those particular races. As usual, the Town Band played a selection of music during the afternoon and the arrangements were efficiently carried out by the stewards for the meeting, viz., Messrs. V. A. C. Hawkins, Judge; A. Bianchi, Assistant Judge; Dr. Wheeler, Clerk of the Scales; D. Marshall, Starter; F. H. Bugbird, Handicapper, and F. J. Hall, Timekeeper. The various events were as follows:—

1.—The PEKIN STAKES, value yen 350, the second to receive yen 100, and the third yen 50. For All China Subscription Ponies; weight as per scale; winners of 3 races at date of entry excluded; of less than 3 races 5lb. extra. Three-Quarters of a Mile.
Mr. Star's Petit Canard, 147lb. (Higaki) 1
Mr. Lefroy's Coot, 155lb. (Mr. Mottu) 2
Mr. Virginia's Flounder, 155lb. (Mr. Dietrich) 3
Mr. Spark's Dairen, 144lb. (Hakodate) 4
Mr. Kanagawa's May-oui, 158lb. (Kawasaki) 5
Mr. H. Kashiwagi's Bamboo, 152lb. (Goto) 6
Mr. Burghdunum's The Miller, 150lb. (Mr. Hutson) 0

Seven out of ten entrants stripped for this race, Coot being a hot favourite. After a fair start Petit Canard took the lead, with Flounder next. After passing the Trees the favourite ran into second place and coming down the Straight ran neck and neck with Petit Canard, the latter just winning by half a head, with Flounder third, a length and half behind Coot. Time 1.43½.

PAIR MUTUEL.—Paid yen 30.50.

2.—The COLONIAL STAKES, value yen 600, the second to receive yen 150, and the third yen 75. For All Subscription Horses and Country Breds; winners of 3 races or less at date of entry weight for age, of more than three races 3lb. extra for each win over 3 wins, not exceeding 15lb. in all. Three-Quarters of a Mile.

Mr. Norfolk's Parma Violet, 137lb. (Mr. Dietrich) 1
Mr. Star's May-mie, 146lb. (Higaki) 2
Mr. Alexander's Ohgon, 137lb. (Kawasaki) 3
Mr. Friends' Daylight, 137lb. (Hakodate) 4
Mr. N. Kawakita's Hitachi, 152lb. (Sugiyama) 5
Mr. Green's Kachidoki, 146lb. (Tsubouchi) 6
Mr. R. Yezoye's Capricieuse, 137lb. (Goto) 7
Mr. Taisuta's Suma, 149lb. (Takahashi) 0

Hitachi started first favourite and Kachidoki second in favour among eight starters. The favourite got away first but was passed by Parma Violet at the Houses, who led by a length at the Trees. Coming down the straight May-mie came to the front and challenged Parma Violet, and after a splendid finish the latter won by a short head. Ohgon having run into third place about two lengths behind May-mie, the favourite fourth. Time 1.24½.

PAIR MUTUEL.—Paid yen 50.50.

3.—The FIRST CHINA GRIFFIN RACE, value yen 250, the second to receive yen 100, and the third yen 50. For China Subscription Ponies of Autumn 1905; weight as per scale. Five Furlongs.

Capt. Leader's Bonnie Morn, 150lb. (Capt. Leader) 1
Mr. R. Loonen's Enjoleur, 147lb. (Kuramoto) 2

Mr. J. Koerting's Michalitz, 144lb. (Fujisaki) 9
Mr. H.M.S.'s Pincher, 147lb. (Sugiyama) 0
Mr. Taisuta's Haruna, 150lb. (Takahashi) 1
Mr. H. Pollak's Zealandia, 150lb. (Miyagawa) 2

This was regarded as a pretty open event as the ponies' public form was of course unknown, but Finasseur appeared to be the most favoured. A round dozen faced the starter and were got away on the second attempt. Pooh Bah got away best and Prince next but there was not much distance between any of the field until after entering the Straight when Prince and Enjoleur came to the front, passing Pooh Bah. Coming down the Straight, Bonnie Morn came with a rush and just won by a nose from Enjoleur, with Prince third, only half a length behind, the rest in a bunch. Time 1.25½.

PAIR MUTUEL.—Paid yen 136.50.

4.—The FIRST AUSTRALIAN GRIFFIN RACE, value yen 450, the second to receive yen 100, and the third yen 50. For Australian Subscription Horses of Autumn 1905; weight for age. Five Furlongs.

Mr. Cotton's Yahagi, 137lb. (Rikizo) 1
Mr. Green's Toun, 137lb. (Tsubouchi) 2

Mr. H.M.S.'s Chloe, 137lb. (Ichii) 3
Mr. Taisuta's Akagi, 137lb. (Kawame) 4

Yahagi was made first favourite on his training form but several others of the 14 starters found friends. The big field of impatient griffins naturally gave some trouble, but a fair start was effected. Toun got to the front at first, but was collared by Yahagi at the Trees and passed coming down the Straight, the favourite winning by about a length, with Susan third, two lengths behind Toun. Time 1.11½.

PAIR MUTUEL.—Paid yen 15.

5.—The SECOND AUSTRALIAN GRIFFIN RACE, value yen 450, the second to receive yen 100, and the third yen 50. For Australian Subscription Horses of Autumn 1905; weight for age; winners at the meeting excluded. One Mile.

Mr. Lefroy's Lola, 138lb. (Mr. Mottu) 1

Mr. S. Sato's Genji, 135lb. (Sugiyama) 6
Lola was a warm favourite, and after a good start went to the front with Genji next in order. At the half mile Dekimasho came away and challenged the leader. In the run home, after a good race, Lola kept a slight lead and won by about two lengths from Dekimasho, while Sazanami ran into third place, finishing about two lengths behind Dekimasho. Time 1.56½.

PAIR MUTUEL.—Paid yen 9.

Gogai, who distinguished himself by winning a race most unexpectedly last Spring, got away well and led to the Trees, where his bolt was short, and Raubgraf and Coot came to the front. Entering the Straight Empereur came up with the leaders and after a fine race home won by about half a length from Raubgraf, Coot finishing third a length behind. Time 1.40½.

SECOND DAY, SATURDAY, NOV. 11TH.

The second, or the Emperor's Cup, day of the Autumn Meeting was again favoured with bright and sunny weather, though the fresh north-westerly wind blew very keenly during the afternoon and made it no easy matter to keep warm on the Grand Stand and on the Lawn. Nevertheless the attendance of visitors, including a fair proportion of ladies, was large, amongst them being many from Tokyo and officers from the Japanese squadron now in port. The fifth race, for China griffins, brought out the largest field of the meeting, so far, and all of the events were well contested. The Emperor's Cup, a beautiful silver flower vase, was presented directly after the race, by Count Toda, Grand Master of Ceremonies, to "Mr. Alexander" representing the owner of May-mie, and on the initiative of the popular Vice President of the Club, Dr. Wheeler, three ringing cheers were given for His Majesty.

The various events were as follows:—

1.—The CHINA DERBY, value yen 350, the second to receive yen 100, and the third yen 50. For All China Ponies; weight as per scale; Subscription Ponies 5lb. allowance; winners at the Meeting 7lb. extra. One Mile and a Half.

May-oui was the favourite. After a little delay the ponies were sent away to a poor start, Coot being left lengths behind at the post. Empereur made the running and led by a length first passing the Stand, with Charmeur and May-oui in order. After rising the Hill Raubgraf came through his horses and gradually drew up on Empereur, while Coot displaced Charmeur. Going down the dip Kachidoki stumbled and threw her jockey, Tsubouchi, who however was not hurt. The mare recovered herself and completed the race on her own account and passing the post first went round the course again before she could be caught. Dekimas kept the lead till entering the Straight when Suma, who had been steadily bettering her position, came up and passed the leader, winning by three lengths, Ohgon a good third. Time 3-0 1/2.

Mr. Tatsuta's Haruna, 150lb.(Takahashi) 0

The big field of sixteen ponies faced the starter and were sent away anyhow, there being a dozen lengths between Finasseur and Hansel, the first and last to get off. After half the distance had been covered the race lay between Kintaro, Daijobu and Pincher, and they finished in that order, after a fine run home, Kintaro winning only by a head, and half a length separating second and third. THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM FOR INSURANCE PREMIUM.

The hearing of a case lodged by Mr. George R. Davis, President of the Manchester Assurance Co., England, against Mr. H. C. Litchfield, administrator of the estate of the late Mr. N. P. Kingdon, of Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe & Co., claiming yen 17,026.35, which is alleged to represent premiums received by the deceased gentleman on behalf of the plaintiffs while acting as Oriental agent for them, was resumed on Nov. 11th in the Yokohama District Court. An interlocutory judgment was delivered as to the protest by which the defendant contended that he is merely administrator of the deceased's estate and has no right or obligation to carry on legal actions. Judge Matsuyama dismissed the defendant's protest. The next hearing will take place on Nov. 16th.

RAZA V. CHARTERED BANK.

The hearing of an action filed by Mr. M. A. Raza against the Chartered Bank petitioning for delivery of forty bales of tanned sheep skins, each bale containing a thousand pieces, was resumed on Nov. 16th in the Yokohama District Court. Mr. Carl Helm, of Messrs. Helm Bros., was examined as a witness.

Mr. Helm deposed that during the period from July 14th to the end of August he was absent from his office. Consequently he did not personally attend to the landing and storing of the forty bales of sheep skins. Under the instructions of the Chartered Bank, the firm—Messrs. Helm Bros.—stored the goods in a warehouse. The bank gave two bills of lading, one for eight bales and the other for thirty-two bales, to the landing agents. The goods were brought by the Empress of Japan being transhipped from the Zamania from Calcutta. The bills of lading were handed to the ship's agent after taking delivery of the goods. The goods were stored in a godown, and Messrs. Helm Bros. gave a receipt to the bank. The contents of the bales seemed to be short. Witness, however, could not tell the exact shortage as he did not examine the goods.

After the close of the examination of the witness, counsel discussed the transaction as between the bank and the consignee and as to the responsibility arising on the bills of lading and the receipt for the goods given by Messrs. Helm Bros. to the bank.

At this stage, the Court adjourned the case till Dec. 2nd.

CLAIM FOR SHIP DAMAGE.

In the Yokohama District Court a case instituted by Messrs. Andrews and George, No. 242, Yamashita-cho, against Messrs. Dodwell and Co., No. 50, claiming yen 315 came up on Nov. 16th. Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Yamada, and defendants by Mr. Ideura.

Plaintiffs' Counsel stated that one drilling machine and thirteen sundry implements were shipped on May 27th at Liverpool on the steamer Den of Crombie, for which the defendants are the agents in Yokohama. The goods were consigned to Messrs. Andrews and George. The ship arrived on Sept. 5th at Yokohama. On landing the goods, the consignees found the drilling machine damaged. In view of this damage, the consignees made a reduction on the price, and delivered it to one of their customers to whose order the machine was imported. Counsel concluded that the defendants should be held responsible for the damage.

Defendants' Counsel contended that Messrs. Dodwell & Co. were the agents for the ship's owner but not his legal representatives. They had no right or obligation to be sued in a legal action under Japanese law. Even if they could be sued they were not responsible as the machine alleged by the plaintiffs to be damaged was not packed in a case. Consequently the ship's owner was under no obligation to meet the plaintiffs' claim under the clauses of the bill of lading.

Mr. Yamada, for the plaintiff, producing the bill of lading, said there was no provision in Japanese law as to the capacity of an "agent." All business affairs should be dealt with in accordance with universal usage. According to British law, anyone authorised to act as agent was always regarded as the legal representative of the principal. The defendants were British subjects representing the ship's owner as agents in Yokohama. There was no doubt that the ship's owner was saddled with responsibility for damage under both Japanese and British law. Messrs. Dodwell and Co. therefore should not decline to meet the claim.

At this stage, Counsel discussed technical points after which the Court decided to go on with the hearing as to facts.

Plaintiffs' Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine an expert witness as to usage in the shipping business. The defendants' Counsel held that there was no necessity to summon any witness since the status of agent was distinctly defined in Japanese law.

The Court decided to give a decision as to calling the witness required by the plaintiffs' Counsel on Dec. 8th. The hearing was adjourned.

We regret to record the death of Capt. W. G. Furber, which occurred at Napa, California, on Nov. 7th in the 87th year of his age. Capt. On the application of the representative of Mr. Alfred Elgar, a British engineer, with regard to a submarine invented by him, the Minister for Agriculture and Commerce has granted a patent. This new craft according to the statements of the inventor, can carry mines under water and lay them at the appointed places or can discharge torpedoes under water without being visible from the surface. Whenever the boat is not required on the surface she can stay on the bottom as long as necessary. In this case, however, she can make communication with her consorts at a distance by means which constitute her speciality.

An Osaka telegram to the Fiji adds that there will hardly be any speculative import of sugar in consequence of this rumour, as a large quantity was imported before July 1st when the war tax was enforced and stocks are almost untouched.

Mr. Crombie is at present in Colorado and much sympathy will be felt for him in his sad bereavement.

Katsumoto and Akita, two of the Japanese prisoners in Russia, have been tried by Court Martial in St. Petersburg on a charge of having infringed the regulations regarding prisoners and having opposed the officers guarding them. They were sentenced to two years' imprisonment and eight months' imprisonment respectively. Later a lawyer appealed to the higher Court against the decision on behalf of the accused. The second Court quashed the foregoing judgment on Sept. 22nd; sentenced Katsumoto to one year and four months' imprisonment and acquitted the other.

Commenting on the appointment of Mr. T. The business of the local office has been conducted very successfully during the period it has been under his control and we have pleasure in testifying to the general accuracy of the work of the staff.

Two tragedies are reported from Osaka. T. Teraura (21) a farmer residing at the village of Oto, near Osaka, murdered his cousin, U. Tsujinaka (39) living in the same district by inflicting on him severe injuries with a hatchet. He also wounded his victim's wife, Toyo (25). The murderer took refuge on the Ikoma hill. Subsequently he was arrested by the police. The other case is that of S. Kobayashi (25) a workman employed at the Osaka arsenal, who murdered, on the night of Nov. 14th, another workman named Y. Yamauchi (22) by hitting him on the head with a large hammer while the latter was asleep. Both were living in the same boarding house. There is no report as to the cause. The crime seems to have arisen from a slight dispute which the two men had previously in the arsenal.

A small sensation was caused on Wednesday forenoon on board and in the vicinity of the steamer Craighall, lying in the harbour, by the antics of one of that vessel's firemen. He went on board about eleven o'clock, heavily burdened with liquor, and, having added to his load with the benevolent co-operation of the bumboat people, began to comport himself forthwith in such disorderly fashion that he was finally locked up in the fore-castle. Resenting this interference with his liberty he broke out and wrathfully essayed to take charge of the ship, winding up his capers by jumping overboard. Buoyed up by bumboat whisky he swam gleefully round the ship for some time, and refused to return on board until a boat was sent in chase and recaptured him. He seemed all the better for his icy cold bath.

At the meeting of the Corporation of London on September 26th, it was unanimously resolved, following the precedents of 1874 in the case of Lord Shaftesbury and 1884 in the case of Sir George Williams, to confer the freedom of the City on General Booth, "in appreciation of his earnest and conscientious exertions for the moral and social improvement of the condition of the necessitous classes, not only of his fellow subjects of the British Empire, but of other races and peoples throughout the world." In deference to the wishes of General Booth, the box in which the freedom will be enclosed will cost only £5. The balance—£100—of the sum usually voted for a box upon such an occasion will be handed over to the funds of the Army.

Although the world is still ignorant as to how, where, or when De Brazza died, remarks the Globe, tributes to the dead explorer are flowing in freely upon his widow. It was a curious position that De Brazza occupied among explorers. An Italian, ranging Africa as a free lance, he carved out a rich dependency for France. The proceeding sounds strange, but it is fully explained by the circumstances of the time. The map of Africa was then being recast by the Berlin Congress and De Brazza, unfriended but talented, with a career to make by his own efforts, had gauged the situation. Italy had no chance on the Congo, where France had manifested a clear determination to have a footing, and De Brazza, placing his experience and his relations with the chiefs at her disposal, cut out the French Congo and became its first organiser and administrator.

In connexion with the matter of repaying the house tax to foreigners, a curious report is published by some Japanese newspapers. The Financial Department, they say, proposes that the tax shall be paid back by the city offices concerned, as it has been spent by those offices. The Foreign Office contends that the city offices enforced the tax upon the foreigners under the orders of the Central Government, consequently the National Treasury is bound to pay back the tax even if it was spent by the city offices concerned. The citizens have no obligation in reference to the house tax. These different views are obstinately maintained by both Departments. The matter, it is reported, will be submitted to the Cabinet. In the Legislative Bureau the subject is under investigation. After the conclusion of the examination the arguments of the Foreign Office and Financial Department will be presented to the Cabinet.

FIRES.

Fire broke out at 4.20 a.m. on Nov. 11th in Horai-cho, Yokohama, destroying ten houses and damaging nine including the dwelling occupied by Bun Fijita, the girl who was brought into prominence in connection with the H. B. Collins' espionage case. Mr. Hayashida, one of the police-inspection of the Isezaki-cho station and an old woman sustained injuries. The cause is not known.

Fire broke out at 9.30 a.m. on Nov. 12th in Otsuka-machi, Koishikawa, Tokyo, destroying six houses. The cause was negligence.

A Sapporo telegram says that an outbreak of fire occurred early on the morning of Nov. 13th at Masuke-machi burning down a hundred and ten houses. No person was killed or injured.

At 3 p.m. on Nov. 14th, fire broke out in the dormitory of the Tokyo Female Normal School, destroying it. A stove is reported to have been the cause.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

The Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Ryushin Maru which arrived at 5.10 a.m. on Nov. 8th at Osaka from Takamatsu with twenty-five passengers and sundry cargo, collided with the break-water. The Ryushin Maru sustained severe damage forward and below. The passengers, crew and cargo are safe.

The hospital ship Toyei Maru, with 291 sick and wounded, including an officer, went ashore at noon on Nov. 8th at the entrance to Ujina harbour. The passengers and crew were safely landed. The ship is in a serious state.

A telegram from Wakanai says that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's steamer Kilami Maru went ashore on Nov. 10th off Mombetsu, Hokkaido. The crew is safe. The ship is in a dangerous position.

Fire occurred on board the Dakota at Kobe, at 3 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 12th. The fire was still going on at 8.30 p.m. when this information was despatched to Tokyo. The accident originated in the midships hold which contained matting and sundry other goods. The conflagration seems to have been limited in its extent by the bulkheads, which prevented its spreading to the adjoining holds.

The small steamer Fuyei Maru, at 5 p.m. on Nov. 12th collided in Kobe harbour, with the destroyer Kagero, which was at anchor there and about to tow submarines to Kure. The destroyer sustained severe damage forward and entered the dock of the Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard for repairs.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

To few men has it been given to use the English language as Cardinal Newman used it. He was, indeed, a master of literature, a poet and a mystic, a writer and a speaker whom posterity will recognise as one of the most fascinating figures of the nineteenth century. Every age has its unrepresentative men, men aloof from the movement of their time, seers or reactionaries, according to the point of view of the observer, who live in the future and in the past but not in the present, and who influence their generation by challenging its ideals. Of these the most eminent in the last century was Newman. A little book has just appeared in London containing the replies he made to addresses presented to him on various occasions, and a perusal of the volume discloses the strange witchery with which the Cardinal clothed even the most trivial details of daily life, when he came to translate them into words. What can be more singularly beautiful than the closing sentence of his reply to the congregation of the Church of the Oratory when they had presented him with his portrait:—

You ask for my blessing, and I bless you with all my heart, as I desire to be blessed myself. Each one of us has his own individuality, his separate history, his antecedents, and his future, his duties, his responsibilities, his solemn trial and his eternity. May God's grace, His love, His peace, rest on all of you, united as you are in the Oratory of St. Philip, on old and young, on confessors and penitents, on teachers and taught, on living and dead. Apart from that grace, that love, that peace, nothing is stable, all things have an end; but the earth will last its time, and while the earth lasts Holy Church will last, and while the Church lasts may the Oratory of Birmingham last also, amid the fortunes of many generations one and the same, faithful to St. Philip, strong in the protection of our Lady and all Saints, not losing as time goes on its sympathy with its first fathers, whatever may be the burden and interests of its own day, as we in turn now stretch forth our hands with love and with awe towards those, our unborn successors, whom on earth we shall never know.

Protestant or Catholic, we can hardly read this without a thrill. The close of it is positively magical.

What should prove a book of considerable interest as a record of travel in lands where "no other white woman has ever been" is a volume entitled "Everyday Life Among the Head-Hunters," by Dorothy Cator, which Messrs. Longman will publish. The title refers, of course, to Borneo, where the author enjoyed for two years excellent opportunities of studying a most interesting people and country. The second portion of the volume deals with sketches of native life on the West Coast of Africa, native beliefs, industries, and secret societies being among the subjects treated. There are many illustrations, the product of the author's camera apparently.

Mr. Alexander Macdonald, F.R.G.S., puts forth "a wanderer's experiences" in some of the wildest regions of British Columbia, Australia, and other lands in a volume published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, with the title "In Search of an El Dorado." The author is an explorer and a pioneer, as well as a seeker after an El Dorado. His book is one of those chronicles of travel that take on the hues of romance and the charm of an adventurous story. Admiral Moresby, who contributes an "introduction," describes Mr. Macdonald as "a born leader of men, a very prudent Odysseus," and yet as one who has felt the attraction of the unknown just as the Spaniards of old succumbed to the spell of the golden city of Manoa. Many illustrations adorn this interesting book of travel.

From the University Press, Cambridge, is forthcoming Sir Richard Jebb's edition of "Bacchylides: the Poems and Fragments," with introduction, notes, and a prose translation by the editor. Professor Jebb refers in his preface to the literature that has so speedily grown around the study of Bacchylides. It was only in 1896 that the Bacchylides papyrus was brought from Egypt, and only in 1897 that the editio princeps by Dr. F. G. Kenyon was produced.

Another book on Japan is promised. It will be entitled "Japan: From the Old to the New." The author is Robert Grant Webster, LL.B., J.P., late M.P. for St. Pancras, who has more than once lived and traveled in Japan. The volume will be published by S. W. Partridge & Co.

Under the nom de plume of "Mr. R. E. Fyffe," the Duchess of Sutherland, it is announced, has hidden her identity as the author of "The Conqueror, now holding the boards in London." Not, of course, that authorship nowadays carries any stigma, as it did when Sir Walter Scott made such strenuous efforts to avoid being known as a novelist, and when Charlotte Brontë was considered forward, if not indelicate, for writing fiction. Lady Jersey and Lady Margaret Sackville are among those who are both prominent in society and in literature, and Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton has, of course, written a play. Nowadays authorship carries such distinction that it is not unknown for managers to receive offers of large sums to produce unproducible dramas.

Many who knew nothing of the quiet life passed in a small agricultural parish, will learn with regret of the death, in his 77th year, of the Rev. W. J. Brodribb, who had been rector of Wootton Rivers, Wilts, since 1860, for his classical and literary work extended his name far beyond the confines of his living. The Times reminds us that with his cousin, the Rev. A. J. Church, he translated the whole of the works of Tacitus and that in association with the late Sir W. Besant he published a short history of Constantinople. The translation of the "Histories" first appeared some 40 years ago, and was followed by the "Annals" and the three Minor Works. Besides these, the two collaborators issued a translation of Books XXI-XXIV of Livy, editions of the "Agricola" and "Germania," and certain select letters of Pliny.

France is just at present without any great novelists, for the great men of the Zola and Daudet epoch seem to have left no successors. Various theories, says the Globe, have been put forward in Paris for this dearth of good fiction, the chief one being that it does not pay to write novels nowadays. That theory will hold good for the general run of trade fiction writers, but the really great novelist writes because he must, and not because novel-writing is a profitable trade. On the English side of the Channel, we cannot boast of any first-rate composers of long stories, but nevertheless the French papers have turned to us for some of their feuilletons. For example, the Journal des Débats has just finished publishing Mr. Rudyard Kipling's "The Story of the Gadsbys," which went very well in French, though it lost a good deal of its rugged power, and many of the conversations seemed strange in their foreign dress. It might have been thought that having published one English work, the Débats would have resorted to a native author, but Mr. Kipling was evidently so great a success that the paper is now issuing a translation of Sir William Magnay's "Count Zarka," a novel of the "Zenda" school. There was plenty of health and strength in the fiction of Dumas, and Victor Hugo, but to-day, with a few exceptions, French novelists are nerveless and anæmic.

In the English magazine world a notable landmark has just disappeared, and another is to change its aspect. Longman's has ceased to exist, and Macmillan's is henceforth to be a sixpenny magazine. The first event is a matter for sincere regret, but it is another impressive indication of the decline of the serious magazines. It is explained by the editor of Longman's that "the reproduction of drawings and photographs has called into existence a number of magazines and papers depending largely upon their illustrations. Competition for the patronage of the sixpenny public has become very severe, and the mere endeavour to keep up a high literary standard is nowadays not sufficient." This is a sound statement, yet we are not sure whether the craze for illustrations will last much longer. The process block has cheapened and multiplied until it is becoming almost a nuisance. It is significant that one of the great houses which purvey popular literature has recently started a sixpenny magazine with no illustrations. A very good record is that of Longman's. The magazine has been in existence for twenty-three years. Robert Louis Stevenson was a contributor to the first number, and so was Dr. E. A. Freeman. Mr. Andrew Lang was a contributor from the first, but his famous "Sign of the Ship" was not hung out until 1886. J. A. Froude wrote on the Spanish Armada in 1890. Richard Jefferies was, of course, a large contributor. In regard to Macmillan's, it is not, we suppose, very generally remembered that this magazine ran an almost neck and neck race with the Cornhill for seniority, and won by two months. Mr. David Masson, now known the world over as Professor Masson, was its first editor, and "Tom Brown at Oxford" was its first great attraction. Such were the circumstances of its birth in 1859. Macmillan's has had a fine career.

In the Army and Navy Journal (U.S.A.), we find the following review of Lieut.-Col. Wood's new book:—

When the historian takes up the task of preparing the authentic annals of the Russo-Japanese War he will recognize at the outset that he is deeply indebted to an officer of the United States Army for a work which greatly simplifies the labour before him. That officer is Lieut.-Col. Oliver E. Wood, Art. Corps, U. S. A., who, in his volume, "From Yalu River to Port Arthur" (Franklin Hudson Publishing Company, Kansas City, Mo., $1.50), has prepared an exceptionally lucid and comprehensive epitome of the first period of the campaign in Manchuria which, from the military viewpoint, is incomparably the most valuable work on the subject thus far published. Colonel Wood was especially qualified for the production of this important volume. For nearly four years preceding the war he was the American Military Attaché at Tokyo where he enjoyed exceptional opportunities to study military conditions and observe Japan's preparations for the impending conflict. He possessed the full confidence of the Japanese military authorities and through their contest he was enabled to reach Dairen before the surrender of Port Arthur and was the first foreign officer to enter that great stronghold after the capitulation. Thus favored, and with his high attainments as a military officer, Colonel Wood has undertaken to describe the first period of the war as a soldier observed it, and in that undertaking he has been brilliantly successful. His book is one by a soldier for soldiers. It is characterized by the accuracy, thoroughness and grasp which are part of the officer's equipment, and, seen through his eyes, the gigantic event with which he deals becomes distinct and clear, passing like a great military panorama. He explains that the basis of his work is the Japanese official reports daily received from the Imperial Headquarters before being issued to the press, but he has supplemented these with a mass of important and trustworthy information from other sources. The care with which Colonel Wood has completed the technical portions of this work is well illustrated in his appendices giving the order of battle of the Japanese armies in Manchuria. Each of the four armies is described in detail and its division and brigade organization is given in full, together with the date of mobilization and the names of its principal officers. This information is supplemented with the order of battle of the Russian forces showing the corps and division organization of each of the three armies and the names of their leading officers. The author's graphic outline of the field operations of the campaign is embellished with nine instructive maps prepared by himself, together with a chronological table of important events during the period under review and a separate table relating to the sieges of Port Arthur. Colonel Wood writes clearly, forcibly and with the fine art of description. His description of Port Arthur after the surrender, his impressions of the officers and men of the opposing armies and his observations on the thoroughness of the Japanese military system are all dramatic and graceful. As we have said, however, his work is impressive, first of all because of its strength, clearness and accuracy as a military study by a military expert and in that respect it is unrivalled in the published literature of the late war.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

The Canadian Minister of Justice has finally issued a warrant for the extradition of Gaynor and Greene. These men were indicted in connection with the harbour improvements in Savannah, and covering a period of six years they resorted to all sorts of methods to avoid extradition through court procedure. Their latest effort was to apply for a writ of habeas corpus, and this being denied, the extradition warrant was promptly issued, and Gaynor and Greene will be returned to the United States for trial. Referring to the efforts made on behalf of these men, the New York World says:—"The nature of the technicalities made use of to defer action, the long period of immunity secured to the defendants, exceeding by nearly two years the term of imprisonment served by Captain Oberlin M. Carter, the engineer in charge of the fraudulent work, and the great cost of the prosecution to the Government, make this one of the most extraordinary cases of international law's delay which can be recalled. For nearly six years Greene and Gaynor have lived in comfort under indictment, half of the time in luxurious exile. For the young lawyer the proceedings will serve as a complete text-book of legal subterfuge and defensive strategy."

The experiment of fastening a tag to some finny creature, liberating it in the sea and then waiting for some one to catch it and report results has, according to a writer in the New York Evening Post, often been ridiculed as being merely the intentional putting of needles into a haystack. But the Post writer says that scientists are really learning a good deal from these methods, adding: "Considering the proverbial abundance of the fish in the sea the number of such labelled creatures to be caught again is really so astonishing as to suggest that like pet canaries, they must intentionally seek human protection. For example, of 479 lobsters recently liberated in and about Buzzards Bay, no less than seventy-six were traced. One fact brought out in this way was that the lobster was able to travel as much as ten miles in forty-eight hours. It was in the same way that scientists learned where the salmon spend the time between their birth and their return to the fresh-water rivers. Some tagged salmon liberated when young in the river were caught much later, by deep-sea fishermen. It is said that the edible crab of Chesapeake Bay is to be the next subject for investigation by this method. One unforeseen result of the ichthyologist's labours has been an addition to the legends of the deep. The metal tags seemingly designed for the personal adornment of the submarine dandies, are said to be in great request among superstitious fishermen, especially Greeks and Portuguese, as charms.

The latest line of credit given to President Roosevelt is particularly interesting, and is revealed in an article printed in a New York newspaper from which the following extract is taken. "President Roosevelt's doctrine of large families has had a stimulating effect on the New York city birth-rate. Cupid, too, has evidently been listening to what the President said, and as a consequence the ministers and the magistrate have been unprecedentedly busy tying the marriage knot. The bureau of vital statistics of the health department announced yesterday that during the first six months of the present year there were 50,943 births reported, as against 47,384 in the same period of 1904. The increase amounts to 3,559. In the first six months of 1905 there were 20,768 marriages, as against 19,295 in the same period in 1904. Nearly 3,000—to be exact, 2,945—happy lovers hearkened to the warning from the White House against race suicide, and resolved themselves into 1,473 happy couples.

A "tourist trust" comprising nine western states having the best scenery to offer, is to be organized to fight Europe and the fashion of going abroad in preference to seeing the wonders at home. The idea is to corral the American tourist and show him that the best and most profitable vacation can be spent in the west. The Salt Lake Commercial Club fathers the movement and asks the governors of nine states to join in advertising.

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, in his annual report, will recommend that bonds be issued to the amount of $60,000,000, running for a period of 50 years, covering the outlay already made on the Panama Canal. Congress will be asked to pass the necessary legislation. Before the canal is completed not less than $200,000,000 will have been expended, and it is the opinion of Secretary Shaw that for this generation to pay practically one-third of the total is more of a burden than it should bear. By issuing bonds for the money already expended, the hole which has been eaten into the treasury will be filled, and the danger of a threatened deficit will disappear for a number of years. It will put a period to the discussion of tariff revision from the standpoint of a needed revenue raiser. It is important in one other sense, in the opinion of Secretary Shaw. It will make clear to future generations, at a glance, what the work has cost. By including the $60,000,000 in the total of the bonds to be issued, there will never be any question as to cost, for the amount of bonds issued will answer that question automatically.

The criticisms of the American army and navy, published by the Neue Preussische Kreis Zeitung of Berlin, have provoked retorts and comments from Secretary of War Taft and Admiral Dewey. In the criticism that the officers of the American navy are too old for their ranks, Admiral Dewey entirely agrees, and says that the General Board is now drawing up recommendations on the subject. "The nation will assuredly meet with disaster in a naval war unless younger men are given command of the ships of our navy," he said. "I know from experience that in the stress of war we must have younger men to direct the fighting."

It is believed in New Bedford that the famous northwest passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific, skirting the northern extremity of the North American continent, has been traversed. Captain George Comer, back from the North with the whaling schooner Era, says in all probability the exploit has been accomplished by the Norwegian Arctic exploring expedition of Commander Amundsen in the sloop Gjoa. This passage has been the dream of Arctic explorers. Many have tried it, but none has succeeded. Captain Comer bases his statement on a letter he had from Commander Amundsen who was then, April 22, in the Gjoa, off King William's Land. Captain Comer figured that the ship must have made the better part of the passage, for she was in Simpson Strait, and the commander had asked about the country to the westward. In reply Captain Comer had sent information that American whalers were wintering in Mackenzie River at Herschell Island. The natives reported that the Norwegian had made the passage, or the better part of it, and the commander himself had sent word that the vessel had accomplished all she hoped for, and would work her way out to Behring Strait this past summer. It is believed that the commander meant that he had made the passage.

Mr. S. O. Davis, comptroller and insurance commissioner for Nevada, has revoked the license of the New York Life Insurance Company in that state. Mr. Davis sent to President McCall the following telegram: "Pending the investigation of the corrupt management and fraudulent disposal of funds entrusted to your company, and so long as yourself and George W. Perkins retain offices of trust in the management of the New York Life Insurance Company, the license to do business in the state of Nevada is hereby revoked. Upon advice of a change of management and satisfactory proof of honest management the license will be reissued. A notice has been forwarded throughout the state warning all agents of the fact of the order and giving the agents two weeks to close the records."

James Russell Lowell and John Greenleaf Whittier were on Oct. 9th declared elected to the Hall of Fame. All the other American authors—there were 17 in all—and the 23 teachers who were candidates were blackballed. Edgar Allan Poe, who was up for election once before, received 43 out of the 51 votes necessary. Whittier got in with only one vote to spare. Lowell received 58 votes. Among the other authors who failed were William Cullen Bryant, with 46 votes; James Fenimore Cooper, with 43 and Oliver Wendell Holmes, with 48. Among the teachers, Phillips Brooks received 49 votes.

"Years ago the dangers of unlimited size of insurance companies were pointed out, says Collier's Weekly. In a paper by an actuary read at the convention of insurance commissioners of 1892, for example, it was argued that the largest companies might "grow to such vast size that their assets and affairs could not be perfectly managed by their officers, supervised by their directors, and examined by state insurance officials." And he, like other prophets, pointed out also the moral temptation, increasing with the size. Mr. Hughes, pressing an officer of one big company about syndicate operations, received the reply that they were necessary in order to handle so much business. To the paraphrase of Mr. Hughes, that the insurance companies fight for an amount of business that will force them to disregard the law, there was, as there could be, no adequate reply. These big companies, says the writer, have come to be indifferent to the permanence of the business written. The public has been naturally hypnotized by figures. The statement of an agent that his company has hundreds of millions in assets stops criticism, for a "billion of assets in force" must impress the uninformed imagination. The policy-holder can hardly be expected to know that under the law of legal reserve each thousand dollars of insurance in force is protected by its reserve, and that, therefore, a company with $20,000,000 of insurance in force, and a reasonable surplus, is as sound as one with many times that volume. The principles of life insurance, however, will, at the end of the present upheaval, be better understood by the public than they ever were before. A limitation of the amount of insurance permitted to one company is likely to be among the many legal measures taken to keep this vast and necessary business from becoming dangerous to the policy-holders, to other lines of enterprise, and to the community.

ENGLISH MEDICAL SCHOOLS.

The medical schools of London started their winter's work on October 2nd, and the occasion was taken advantage of by some of the leading members of the profession in England to address the students. Sir James Crichton-Browne, speaking at the Charing Cross Hospital Medical School, remarked in the course of his address:—

Inefficiency was widespread, but the encouraging fact was that it was at length recognised, and that in many directions measures to insure efficiency were being adopted. This more healthy and hopeful state of affairs might be attributed, he thought, in some measure to the great object-lesson recently furnished by the wonderful efficiency shown by the Japanese in their struggle with Russia. He felt convinced that the Japanese brain would be found, when careful measurements and observations were made, to be not inferior to our own. This should prove of the utmost anthropological significance, and should the Chinese brain be found to participate in the characteristics of that of Japan, then the "yellow peril" would be not merely a fancy bogey, but in some form or other a possible contingency. With regard to the use of stimulants, he said that happily the bibulous medical student was a creature of the past. It was a noteworthy fact that in nearly 90 per cent. of cases of confirmed inebriety the addiction to drink began between 15 and 25 years of age. That was the dangerous period, and little apprehension need be felt as to the future career, as regarded sobriety, of any man who had voluntarily abstained from alcohol until 25, or even 21, years of age. He thought the medical student, aiming at efficiency, did well to place alcohol in all its guises, from the homely stout to the ethereal champagne, in the index expurgatorius.

At St. George's Hospital Medical School, Mr. R. Brudenell Carter, F.R.C.S., was the principal speaker. He said:—

We were looking forward not quite without anxiety to the competition of Germany in various fields of activity, but we were handicapped by the fact that Germany had banished smallpox from within her boundaries, while we were still paying an annual tribute in population and money, and many of those whose lives were spared suffered a permanent disability of a kind likely to be handed down from generation to generation in ever-widening circles. The problem set before the authorities of medical schools was how best to assist in establishing barriers against disease, and how best to deal with the admirable raw material furnished by English homes, in order to train with the definite object of producing men who were not only conversant with disease in all its manifestations, but with the means of prevention and cure, and also be at the same time wise and trustworthy councillors in the domestic questions which were constantly brought to their notice and submitted to their decision. The great problem of life and society—using the words in their widest sense—were mainly, the problems of health, habits, physical environment, and concerning these the medical profession alone either possessed or was able fully to acquire the knowledge which was necessary for the guidance of the public. He dwelt at some length on the necessary elements of a medical education, remarking that the future of physics was the future of medicine, and a real and thorough training in physics must form the essential groundwork in medical education. He deprecated the idea of encouraging or assisting imperfectly educated young men without exceptional ability in the medical profession. This profession was not a refuge for the destitute. The future of medicine rested largely on research, but this was very expensive, and he urged that it should receive public recognition.

THE NEWSPAPER READER'S TEN COMMANDMENTS.

If much advice and instruction are educative forces, newspaper readers should be a highly cultivated community, for the advice showered upon them is surely unequalled for quantity and diversity. A Continental would-be guide and philosopher has lately added to the wisdom specially prepared for the needs of the reader by formulating into ten "commandments" the laws to which the said reader should adhere. Here is the text of these legal documents:—

I.—If thou art neither crank nor stick-in-the-mud, subscribe at once to an energetic paper. Nor let thy heart fail thee if now and again thy paper uses strong language, for it is better that the country should be pluckily defended than that it should be railed at in an underhand manner.

II.—Read thy paper attentively, for it is written for thy benefit; he who takes papers only on account of the announcements it makes insults the editor.

III.—Do not imagine the paper to exist solely for thee; it is there for general use, and as no one has the right to put private interests before public ones, so no one has the right to expect his own fads and fancies to be given preference in a newspaper.

IV.—Be a loyal collaborator of thy paper. Every item of news thou canst supply adds to its popularity and attracts new readers. Whatever news thou obtainest which is of public interest, write it on a postcard, and send it to the office. And be not offended if the editor puts useless or personal news into the waste-paper basket.

V.—If anything in public life strikes thee as requiring alteration, be not afraid to write to the editor. Remember, it is the object of a newspaper to bring abuses to light, and to help good causes to victory.

VI.—Do not be afraid of the powers that be, for all right-minded men in power welcome honest criticism.

VII.—Have faith in the administrators of a paper, whatever may happen.

VIII.—Be an advocate of thy paper; point out everywhere that here is a cause round which it is worth while to gather.

IX.—Be mindful of the criticisms of a strong and able writer, but where a coward criticises merely from craving for notoriety, there turn away with scorn.

X.—If it happens that thy paper should reach thee late, do not at once threaten to stop thy subscription. As a rule, the office is not responsible, for the paper is always printed at the same time. And the editor remains absolutely cool at thy threats, for he has nothing to do with the business aspect of the paper.

And now go and do as thou hast been told.

THE IMPERIAL MINT.

We are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. T. Hasegawa, Director of the Imperial Mint at Osaka, for a copy of the report of the Mint's working during the year ended March 31st last. We extract the following:—

The coinage of this financial year consisted of gold and silver only.

The amount of coinage was much greater than in the preceding year, being 31,166,111 pieces of the value of 72,503,151 yen, against 13,316,571 pieces of the value of 25,801,085 yen of the previous year.

In addition to these, 6,970,843 pieces of silver yen were manufactured during the year.

The medals struck during the year amounted to 139,658 pieces, being considerably below the number of last year.

The analyses of ores and metals made for the public were particularly numerous.

The total amounts of bullion deposited or purchased for coinage during this financial year were:—Gold, 14,865,443.72 monme (0.900 fine); and Silver, 36,125,000.02 monme (.800 fine). There was no purchase of nickel or of copper for bronze.

The deposits of bullion for refining and certification of fineness amounted to 2,188,302.68 monme of gold and 12,476,735.68 monme of silver, both in fine weight.

The total amounts of bullion deposited for refining and certification of fineness at the Mint since the regulation for certification came in force in April, 1898, up to the end of this financial year were: Gold 15,445,426.24 monme (fine weight); Silver 74,304,353.63 monme (fine weight).

The total coinage of gold and silver during this financial year amounted to 31,166,111 pieces, of the real or nominal value of 72,503,151 yen.

The coinage of this year compared with that of the last year shows an increase of 43,500,000 yen in gold and of 3,302,081 yen in silver as well as a decrease of 100,016 yen in nickel, making a net increase of 46,702,065 yen.

Silver bullion deposited by the Imperial Government and Taiwan Ginko (Bank of Formosa) for the manufacture of silver yen during this financial year amounted to 66,756,887.18 monme (.900 fine).

The total number of silver yen manufactured in this year was 6,970,843 pieces, as against 5,131,096 pieces in the preceding year.

The number of medals made at the Mint during this financial year was as follows:—

Gold.....	7
Silver.....	131,912
Nickel.....	6,002
Copper.....	1,737

Besides the above, the Mint furnished the Chinese Government with 206 dies, including matrices and punches of four denominations of silver coins, and the Korean Government with 4 punches for medals; it also supplied the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and the Provincial Government of Fukuoka Prefecture with 3,010 punches for making weights and measures.

The assays of ores and metals made at the Mint for the public increases in number year by year, owing to the progress of mining and metallurgical industries. In this financial year the number of samples examined was 550, as against 291 of the preceding year.

The total receipts and expenditures of the Mint for this financial year, and those from its commencement up to the end of the last financial year, were as follows:—

The balance of receipts and expenditures does not agree with the sum of net profits since 1891-92 owing to certain alterations in the financial system.

The precious metals reclaimed from sweeps in the Amalgamation Room during this year consisted of 1,189.61 monme of gold and 34,422.49 of silver, both in fine weight, showing the increases of 481.194 monme in gold and 26,597.14 monme in silver, as compared with last year.

Experiments on the electrolytic refining of impure gold bullion were conducted partly during the last and partly during this financial year. The process was found easy of execution and yielded gold of a very high degree of purity. Moreover, besides iridosmine, all the platinum contained in the impure gold can be reclaimed, and the value of this by-product, if contained in the proportions of over 0.4 parts per mille, would alone offset the cost of refining the bullion. The process should be particularly applicable to institutions in which there is not available sufficiency of silver-containing materials required by the ordinary sulphuric acid process. The only drawback with the electrolytic process, as applied to the necessities of the Mint, seems to lie in the circumstance that it does not admit of exact stocktaking of the gold as readily as in the sulphuric acid process, in which all the gold remains in compact solid state and can be readily collected and melted into ingots.

THE CANALS IN MARS.

Ever since the presence of canals or channels (canals) on the surface of the planet Mars was first described by the Italian astronomer, G. V. Schiaparelli, in 1877, the question of their character and even of their real existence has been keenly debated. On the one hand they have been accepted as truly material formations, and various hypotheses have been advanced to explain them, such as that they are waterways connecting with oceans, or that they consist of lines of vegetation growing along irrigation works which derive their water from the seasonal melting of the polar snows and are the result to intelligent effort of some sort, or that they are merely great rifts produced in the globe by uneven contraction on cooling. On the other hand some competent observers have failed to detect the canals at all, while others who have succeeded in seeing them have not agreed with each other in their descriptions of what they saw. In consequence it has been suggested that these canals or channels are of the nature of illusions of vision, and are not the definite features that appear on the drawings, but rather the result of slight suggestions made to the eye by more or less irregular differences in the minute shadings and colour tints on the surface of the planet.

Within the last few months fresh light has been thrown on the question by a piece of work carried out at the Lowell Observatory at Flagstaff, Arizona. The observers there have always been among the most successful in seeing and drawing the canals; and they resolved to supplement their visual observations by an attempt to photograph them in the favourable conditions presented by the planet's opposition in the spring of this year when it was comparatively near the earth. The observatory at Flagstaff enjoys exceptional advantages for such a task. It stands 7,250 ft. above sea level, and therefore above many of the lower and denser layers of the atmosphere which incommode observatories at smaller altitudes; and it possesses the largest glass in the world mounted at such an elevation. Further the air is intensely dry, and its currents trouble the image less and produce less distortion and obliteration of detail than at lower levels in more humid conditions. Without such advantages the undertaking would be hopeless; even with them it was one of extraordinary difficulty and delicacy, and called for numberless precautions. It must be remembered that the diameter of the planet at the time was only some 15 seconds of arc, and that the view of it to be obtained even with the largest telescopes in favourable conditions is little, if any, better than that obtained of the moon with the naked eye. But to secure the required definition of detail it was usually thought necessary at Flagstaff to use only the central portion of the 24 in. object glass of the telescope, which accordingly was reduced by a diaphragm to an effective diameter of 2 in.; a colour screen was employed that allowed only the yellow and orange rays to pass; and the extremely sensitive plates which had to be used permitted exposures of only from six to ten seconds, though during that time the utmost care had to be exercised to ensure that the telescope followed the planet smoothly and exactly.

The result was that Mr. Lampland, Professor Lowell's assistant at Flagstaff, succeeded in obtaining in May and June a number of photographs of the planet at different stages of rotation, which show canals quite distinctly and even present indications of the doubling which has been regarded as still more doubtful than the existence of the canals themselves. When a series of these photographs taken on the same night in close succession is examined, the same markings are seen to be repeated from one to another, though naturally some of the pictures are better than others; and comparison of drawings made of the planet's surface by Professor Lowell himself at about the same dates as, though quite independently of the photographs, shows a close correspondence between the two, canals having the same position and direction being perfectly visible on both drawings and photographs, even to the untrained observer. The defining power of the eye, however, is so much superior to that of the photographic plate that, although some 400 canals and 175 oases have been made out by Professor Lowell himself, the photographs have so far revealed only about 40 canals and four or five oases. If it be admitted that the photographic plate cannot lie and can yield representations only of things that have a real objective existence, the conclusion to be drawn from the constancy of the markings on the successive photographs of a series and the correspondence between photographs of different series and almost contemporaneous drawings by Professor Lowell would seem to be that the canals, whatever be their nature and origin, cannot be mere subjective illusions on the part of certain observers, but have an actual existence as material formations on the surface of Mars.—The Times.

GERMANY GROWS IN WEALTH.

The Daily Express says:—Some remarkable figures showing the steady growth of wealth and prosperity in Germany are given by Mr. Consul-General Schwabach in his report to the British Foreign Office for the first half of 1905.

With the exception of the temporary setback caused by the great miners' strike in the Rhenish-Westphalian coal districts in January this year, there has, he says, been a gradual improvement in German trade and industry since the last months of 1902.

Some idea of the general prosperity of the nation may be gained from the fact that within the nine years 1896-1904 the income tax payers in Prussia alone increased from 2,650,000 to 4,500,000, or nearly 70 per cent., while the increase of population during the same period was only about 15 per cent.

The aggregate income of all taxpayers amounted in 1904 to £436,134,478, or £20,650,000 more than in 1903.

The savings of the people as represented by the deposits in the banks amounted to £361,450,000, nearly double the total of ten years before.

The stock markets form another guide to the national wealth, and it is interesting to note that a very high level of quotations has been recorded in connection with German industries during the half-year. Not only this, but new enterprises, floated successfully, have totalled £106,244,000 for the half-year, against £90,032,500 for the whole of 1904, and £94,404,000 for the whole of 1903.

The foreign trade for the half-year was valued at £300,860,000, of which £168,660,000 was imports and £132,200,000 exports.

The figures for the first halves of the four preceding years were as follows, although in making the comparison it must be remembered that owing to the miners' strike less coal was exported and more imported than the average:—

	Exports.	Imports.
1901.....	£106,800,000	£137,600,000
1902.....	111,150,000	141,950,000
1903.....	121,150,000	153,859,000
1904.....	126,620,000	161,150,000

It is interesting to note that of the imports this year 48.8 per cent. consisted of raw materials for industrial purposes.

In the textile industry, in which the Germans are becoming formidable rivals to Lancashire and Yorkshire, it may be noted that the half-year shows an increase in exports valued at over £600,000.

In her exports of iron and ironware Germany continues to increase her trade, while for pig iron, rails rolled and drawn wire, fine cutlery, cement, and needles she is securing an important position in the world's markets.

There is a notable increase shown in the shipments abroad of machinery, including locomotives, boilers, machine tools, transmission machines, pumps, and other kinds.

The miners' strike, which is practically the only regrettable feature of the half-year's industry, is estimated to have cost £3,000,000, of which half was loss in wages. British coalowners benefited largely by the strike, imports of coal from this country rising to 948,497 tons in February, whereas the average for the month is between 200,000 and 300,000 tons.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE JEWISH MASSACRES IN RUSSIA.

A mass meeting of Jews was held in New York, to consider the relief of suffering in Russia.

The result was that a committee was formed to attend to the relief of Russian sufferers in general,—irrespective of religion.

The sum of $56,800 has been subscribed, and telegrams have been received from the Jews of London, Paris, and Berlin offering to participate in an international relief organisation.

Four hundred and twelve Jewish victims were buried in Odessa yesterday, in the presence of vast crowds.

The corpses were buried together in long trenches, without being placed in coffins.

MR. BALFOUR'S TRIBUTE TO JAPAN.

London, November 11.

The Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, the British Prime Minister, speaking at the Lord Mayor's banquet at the Guildhall, London, referred to Japan as "our new ally—a Great Power that has arisen in the Far East." He said this was "a happy time to survey foreign politics when our allies were beginning their great mission of civilization."

COMBINED MANŒUVRES BY BRITISH AND JAPANESE FLEETS.

The Standard says that theoretically the Japanese Navy will form part of a scheme of world-wide naval manœuvres in 1906. It will be assumed that the situation is threatening, and the Anglo-Japanese navies are watching enemies' ships throughout the world. Presuming that war breaks out later, a skeleton squadron of cruisers to form the enemy will leave England with secret orders. This will keep everyone on the alert for weeks.

THE MUTINY AT KRONSTADT.

The mutinous soldiers and sailors at Kronstadt number 5,000. They have killed ten unpopular officers. Two squadrons of Hussars and two battalions of the crack Preobrajensky regiment have arrived there.

Later.

The mutiny at Kronstadt has been quelled. Two thousand troops now occupy the town.

AUSTRALIA AND ASIATIC EMIGRATION.

London, November 12.

Mr. Deakin has introduced into the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Australia amended immigration bills, the first of which provides that the Commonwealth may make arrangements with the Government of any other country whereby merchants and tourists may enter and travel in Australia under passports, other natives being prevented from entering Australia at port of shipment. Mr. Deakin emphasized in his speech that "while carrying out the policy of a White Australia we are not called upon to cast slur on other people. Two races had peculiar claims on our respect and admiration. The Hindoos were entitled to special consideration as forming part of the British empire, and so are the new people who are allied to the empire. It was desired to so amend the Australian immigration law as to avoid hurting the susceptibilities of any nation."

The second bill deals with the importation of contract labour, which is sanctioned under certain circumstances.

LONDON'S UNEMPLOYED.

Later.

The Lord Mayor of London has opened a fund to relieve the unemployed. The Queen has given £2,000. The Lord Mayor appeals to all charitable persons throughout the Empire to relieve the starving during the winter.

THE AMERICAN EMBASSY TO JAPAN.

The American Legation in Tokyo has been raised to the rank of an Embassy.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

An official communiqué declares that the Russian Government no longer tolerates, but stigmatizes as impudent, the movement aiming at the independence of Poland; therefore, so long as the troubles continue and the people are influenced by agitators, Poland will receive none of the benefits of the manifestoes of August 18th, or October 30th. Hence, too, the reason for the proclamation of martial law.

A BIG JAPANESE LOAN.

ANOTHER SERIOUS STRIKE IN RUSSIA.

London, November 16.

The St. Petersburg Council of Workmen Delegates resolved upon another general strike to-day, owing to the employers refusing the eight hours' day, but it is intimated that the object of the strike is largely political and the situation is critical.

Later.

The Council of Workmen Delegates in St. Petersburg has declared a general strike to begin at noon in sympathy with the revolutionists in Cronstadt and in Poland. It was begun punctually in all the great works and on all the railways radiating from St. Petersburg, except the St. Petersburg-Moscow line. Both capitals are cut off from communication with Europe.

The strike is rapidly generalising.

The police have begun to arrest prominent Polish leaders in Warsaw.

KOREA.

Friday, November 17.

Marquis Ito's private audience with the Emperor of Korea on the 15th instant lasted for over three hours. Only one interpreter was present and no officials of either Government. As to the result of the interview there are various rumours, some conveying a very hopeful impression, others attributing an attitude of extreme reserve to the Emperor. The Kokumin's correspondent avers that His Majesty gave no definite reply to Marquis Ito's suggestions, but merely directed that a conference on the subjects involved should take place between duly appointed plenipotentiaries. As to the subjects themselves, secrecy is of course observed. We read merely that Korea's foreign politics and domestic affairs were in question, a sufficiently vague synthesis.

It is alleged that opposition to the purport of the Il Chinhoi's manifesto grows in volume and intensity. On the 15th instant crowds collected in the streets and orations were made denouncing the manifesto and declaring that Korea must be independent. This demonstration assumed a threatening form, and the Japanese gendarmes were obliged to disperse the crowd, which was effected without any serious difficulty.

Rumour says that Mr. Kameyama and other Japanese officials in Seoul have been engaged for some time drawing up a schedule of regulations for the better control of Japanese subjects in Korea. The draft has been finished and approved, and the regulations will be sent, in two or three days, to the various consulates for strict enforcement. Judging from the writing which has appeared in the foreign local press of Korea this question of the better control of Japanese subjects is one of the most pressing problems of the day. Independent accounts indicate that similar legislation is scarcely less needed for the control of other nationals, but there is this radical difference, namely, that whereas the small handful of Europeans and Americans residing in Korea are, for the most part, men of education and some social standing, the large body of Japanese settlers—nearly fifty thousand in all—include hundreds and thousands of persons belonging to a very low, if not the lowest, grade of society, and the licence exercised by them is probably greater in proportion and certainly greater in volume.

The Jiji Shimpō has a very strong article on the subject of Japan's relations with Korea. In brief our contemporary's conviction is that gentle and conciliatory methods will never succeed with the Koreans. They are essentially cunning and specious, ready to take the fullest advantage of every display of weakness and always alert to find an opportunity of evading their obligations. A strong ungloved hand is the only instrument for governing them effectively. Treat them with consideration and they will at once repay you by treachery and conspiracy. The Jiji seems to think that even Marquis Ito, by his naturally courteous and considerate methods, may lay himself open to misconstruction, but it has great confidence in the astute old statesman. At all events it urges implacable resolution and recalls the fact that the history of Japan's relations with Korea is not such as to relieve the Koreans of all apprehension.

Saturday, November 18.

It is reported that on the 16th instant Mr. Hayashi handed to the Korean Government a document embodying certain proposals of a most important nature. Of course the exact nature of these proposals is not stated, but they are said to have embodied a system for placing the direction of Korea's foreign affairs in the hands of Japan and for organizing some kind of bureau of general control in Seoul. The latter point is specially obscure. From the language of the telegrams we find it impossible to decipher whether the control in question relates to foreign affairs or to administration. The communication of this document is said to have caused much commotion in Korean official circles. A Cabinet Council was immediately held and vehement discussion resulted, the council breaking up at a late hour in the night without having arrived at any decision. On the 17th instant Mr. Hayashi entertained the Cabinet Ministers at luncheon and an animated debate is reported to have ensued. One account says that Mr. Pak, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, did not attend on the occasion, from which it was inferred that the situation had become complicated, but later cablegrams allege that the Ministers all gave their assent to Japan's proposals, and that the whole body, accompanied by Mr. Hayashi, repaired to the Palace to report progress. It would seem that the Japanese negotiators, while they exercised deliberation in the early stages of the discussion, pressed rapidly for a decision so soon as the final stage was reached. In such a matter quick and wholesale consent was not to be expected from the Koreans. Their custom is not to do anything in a prompt and comprehensive manner, and for the rest the case was one justifying some hesitation. The telegrams reflect this state of doubt. They say that Marquis Ito had a four hours' interview with the Emperor of Korea on the 15th instant. In the early part of the audience only one official was present besides His Majesty and the Marquis, namely, an interpreter whom Marquis Ito had taken with him, but the Emperor, finding this aid insufficient, ultimately summoned Mr. Pak Yong-ho of the Treasury Department, a fact which illustrates the complicated nature of the interview. Rumour says that Marquis Ito's arguments prevailed in the main, and we may assume that they did, for this audience must be regarded as preliminary to the submission of the memorandum by Mr. Hayashi on the 16th instant. Had the Emperor declined positively to entertain Marquis Ito's suggestions, Mr. Hayashi's subsequent action would not have been taken. It is said that the long interview with the Japanese statesman and the momentous decisions the Emperor was required to make proved too much for His Majesty's strength, and on the 16th instant he postponed audiences which he was to have given to Mr. Bryan and Mr. Hayashi. But without going so far as to infer actual sickness, we may fairly imagine that the Emperor himself was too much occupied with matters concerning the future of his country to devote time to the ordinary courtesies of court life. Meanwhile the agitation against Japan appears to be continuing in certain circles. Four of the ringleaders, who were endeavouring to incite the populace to lawless demonstrations, have been arrested and drastic steps are being taken to check the commotion fomented by some of the literati. It can not be expected that measures such as the Japanese Government appears to have in contemplation will be achieved without more or less commotion. Mr. Hayashi has taken occasion to issue to all the Japanese Consuls throughout Korea an instruction the gist of which is that every effort should be made to prevent mistakes and misunderstandings between Japanese and Koreans, and that all acts of rudeness or violence on the part of the former towards the latter should be made the theme of immediate complaint.

On the afternoon of the 18th instant the Asahi Shimbun published an extra which is worth quoting in full:—

Seoul, 17th instant, 4 p.m.
At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Cabinet Ministers repaired to the Palace where a council is still going on in the presence of the Emperor. Mr. Hayashi also is at the Palace. The appearances are that according to circumstances Marquis Ito too will proceed thither.

9 p.m., 17th instant.
Marquis Ito went to the Palace at 8 p.m. to-day. It is expected that the Council in the presence of the Emperor will last all night.

General Hasegawa also has gone to the Palace. The proposals made by Japan are that a viceroy's (or governor-general's) office should be established in Seoul with branches at the various open ports, and that the control of the Empire's foreign affairs should be in Japan's hands.

1.55 a.m. 18th instant.
There are indications that the negotiations have matured and that the Korean Government has given its consent. Mr. Hayashi and the Ministers of the Cabinet are now in audience with the Emperor.

2.30 a.m. 18th instant.
The result of the Palace council is that new relations have just been established between Japan and Korea.

4.10 a.m. 18th instant.
The Korean Government has agreed to the terms proposed by Marquis Ito, and the Foreign Minister also has consented to sign.

Marquis Ito and General Hasegawa left the Palace a short time ago. Mr. Hayashi is still there.

All this, though it leaves something to be desired in point of clearness, indicates plainly enough that the great crisis in Korea's affairs has come and passed. We do not pretend to say whether the principal proposals of the Japanese are rightly described above, namely, the establishment of a viceregal office (or a governor-generalship) in Seoul and the transfer of the control of Korea's foreign affairs to Japan. The word used in the telegram is sookufu, which is the term for the governor-general's office in Formosa as it is also the term for the Chinese viceroys. But it cannot be a serious mistake to assume that some kind of administrative supervision is to be exercised by the Japanese and that Korea will no longer be left to mismanage her own foreign affairs. No smaller measures seem to be adapted to the situation.

Sunday, November 19.

It is evident that for a moment the agreement of the Korean Ministers to Japan's proposals hung in a very delicate balance. One story telegraphed from Seoul is that during the night of the Palace Council the Prime Minister, Mr. Han Kiu-hwa, attempted to make his escape from the Palace but was turned back by the Japanese gendarmes. At 7 a.m. on the 18th instant Marquis Ito and General Hasegawa left the Palace and it may therefore be assumed that an agreement had been reached at about that hour. The Jiji Shimpō's account says that Mr. Hayashi proceeded to the Palace at 3 p.m. on the 17th, and that Marquis Ito held himself in readiness to repair thither as soon as Mr. Hayashi withdrew. The inference is that Mr. Hayashi's visit was expected to achieve its purpose without much difficulty. But at 7 p.m. Mr. Hayashi had not returned, and at 7.45 Marquis Ito, who had doubtless been kept informed of all that was passing, set out for the Palace in company with General Hasegawa. The issue was then distinctly in abeyance, though there is no evidence that it was regarded with any serious apprehension of failure on the Japanese side. The Nichi Nichi's reporter sends news that the factor which finally resolved the situation was Marquis Ito's arrival at the Palace and the very firm attitude taken by His Excellency. Other accounts confirm this analysis, but there is a strong air of conjecture about all the stories. Thus while some represent the Prime Minister, Han Kiu-hwa, the Foreign Minister Pak and the Minister of Education Li as the most obstinate objectors, others allege that whereas for a long time the Korean Ministers sat looking one another furtively in the face, each unwilling to take the initiative in expressing an opinion, the Minister of Education Li finally had the courage to speak out and declare that nothing remained except to agree to Japan's proposals. This latter version is confirmed by a rumour that an attempt has been made to set fire to Li's residence. On the other hand Han and Pak are reported to have resigned. All agree that Marquis Ito's efforts were most untiring and efficacious. His Excellency never wearied in offering explanations of the situation and of Japan's intentions, and there can be no doubt that his influence produced excellent results. Naturally the Japanese Authorities adopted all precautions to secure the preservation of order in these extraordinary circumstances. Thus far their arrangements have been entirely successful, though appearances are said to indicate that anything less thorough must have failed to avert disturbance.

All the Tokyo journals have intelligence from Seoul, dated at noon on the 18th instant, to the effect that on the morning of that day a convention was signed by Mr. Hayashi and Mr. Pak by which the control of Korea's foreign affairs was handed over to Japan.

According to the Fiji Shimpō, which does not, however, profess to be entirely accurate, the above Convention consists of five articles, namely:—

- 1.—Japan engages to maintain the prestige (songen) of the Korean Crown. (This article is textually stated to have been inserted at the request of the Korean Government).
- 2.—A Japanese Governor-General (sotoku) directly attached (chokurei) to the Korean Sovereign shall be appointed to carry on the administrative functions of the country.
- 3.—The foreign relations of Korea shall be conducted by Japan. Provided that in the event of Korea's developing capacity such as, in the opinion of the Japanese Government, qualifies her for independence, she shall be re-introduced with the management of her own foreign relations. (This provisional clause is explicitly stated to have been inserted at the request of the Korean Government).
- 4.—The commissioners of customs at the various open ports shall be Japanese subjects.
- 5.—Korea shall not establish relations with any foreign Power without Japan's consent.

Thus far only three Tokyo journals have commented on this arrangement. They are the Nichi Nichi, the Fiji and the Asahi. All write in the sense that a new and powerful guarantee of Far-Eastern peace has been secured, mainly through the skill and resolution of Marquis Ito. The evident impression is that Korea now stands towards Japan in much the same relation as Annam stands towards France, and that a situation which was equally anomalous and dangerous has been solved along really practical lines. The Asahi pays a compliment to the discernment of Korea's statesmen, who were able to appreciate the trend of the time and the necessity of adopting this course. It is easy to see that such a speedy settlement had not been anticipated and that the Tokyo journals are profoundly relieved to find that the storm centre of the East has now been brought under Japanese control. The Kokumin takes the view that a condition which already existed virtually in fact has now been formally legalized, and the Shogyo Shimpō believes that Marquis Ito will remain in Korea until the administrative machinery contemplated by the new convention has been organized.

Monday, November 20.

It appears from the detailed accounts that on the 16th instant while Marquis Ito was receiving the Cabinet Ministers and explaining to them in the fullest manner the reasons which rendered it imperative that the relations of the two Empires should be placed on a more definite footing, Mr. Hayashi was holding an interview with the Minister of Foreign Affairs for the same purpose. The line taken by Mr. Hayashi and doubtless by Marquis Ito was that whereas there had been from time immemorial close connexion between the interests of the two neighbouring countries, Korea's frequent mismanagement of her foreign affairs had jeopardized those interests seriously and had menaced the peace of the East. Hence it became obviously necessary that in addition to the treaties and conventions already existing some compact should be concluded of such a nature as to preclude the recurrence of these dangers. That was the general argument and it was of course re-inforced by many detailed examples which could easily be culled from the history of the past twenty-five years. The Emperor of Korea, with whom Marquis Ito had a four hours' audience on the 15th instant, appears to have appreciated the force of the Japanese statesman's contention, but among the Cabinet Ministers some remained obdurate and unconvinced even in the presence of the Sovereign, and it was not until 1.30 a.m. on the 18th that a consensus was finally reached. The Minister of Education, Li, was the first to give his open approval. This has been already related and is now confirmed, together with the fact that there resulted an attempt to set Li's house on fire. The account published by the Fiji Shimpō, which is much the most detailed, indicates that the Emperor did not actually appear at the Palace Council which took place from the afternoon of the 17th until the morning of the 18th. His Majesty was kept accurately informed, however, of the progress of the negotiations, and he is said to have sent a message to Marquis Ito urging the latter to rest as the great labour he was undergoing might impair his health.

The present expectation is that the convention will be published in Seoul within the course of two or three days.

It will be remembered that the Prime Minister, Han Kiu-hwa, was reported to have attempted to escape from the Palace during the conference and was turned back by the gendarmes on duty. Rumour now says that his conduct resembled that of an insane person. Probably his reason had been unhinged by the stress of the crisis. At all events he refused to sign the protocol which had received the Sovereign's consent, and the Emperor consequently deprived him of office and sentenced him to three years' banishment. This punishment, however, is said to have been subsequently remitted at the instance of Marquis Ito, but the post of Prime Minister is now occupied by Min Yong-chol.

The news of the convention spread rapidly through Seoul and produced at first considerable commotion, people crying out that the Il Chin-hoi and the Ministers of the Crown had sold their country. It appeared at one moment that disturbances might result but the Japanese gendarmes and police had taken effective measures to preserve the peace. The latest telegrams (published by the Kokumin) bear date of the afternoon of the 18th. They say that everything is quiet in Seoul and that on all sides Marquis Ito's diplomatic skill is lauded. Some of the Foreign Representatives have called at the Japanese Legation to offer their congratulations. The correspondence of the Vorozo Choho says that not the slightest opposition was made by any of the foreign Representatives. Even the French Minister, who might have been expected to make some difficulty, is about to hold a reception in honour of Marquis Ito. The fact that quiet reigns in Seoul may be inferred from a message which says that, on the afternoon of the 18th, Marquis Ito went for a ride in the streets of the capital, accompanied by General Hasegawa.

Tuesday, November 21.

The Kokumin Shimbun's Seoul correspondence says that the new Korean convention consists of five articles. The gist of these is alone given.

The first says that Japan will take charge of Korea's foreign relations and that Japanese Ministers and Consuls in foreign countries will represent Korea and look after Korean interests.

The second provides that, as a consequence of the first, Japan will become responsible for the discharge of Korea's treaty obligations and Korea will not enter into any treaty or convention with a foreign Power without previously consulting Japan.

The third article relates to the high commissioner—tokwan is the word used by the Kokumin's correspondence: it signifies a directing official—who shall be appointed by Japan to reside in Seoul, and shall represent the Japanese Government, manage foreign affairs and have the right of private access to the Emperor. (This article apparently limits to foreign affairs the scope of the Commissioner's functions.) In places of importance throughout Korea Japanese riji-kwan (managers) shall be posted, who, under the authority of the Tokwan in Seoul, shall deal with duties hitherto devolving on Consuls as well as with all other matters.

The fourth article provides that, with regard to hitherto existing treaties and conventions, only those not conflicting with the terms of the new convention shall remain in operation.

The fifth article declares that Japan guarantees the preservation of the security and prestige (teishitsu no anzen katsu songen) of the Imperial House of Korea.

With regard to the rumour that the convention contains a clause engaging Japan to restore to Korea the rights of which this arrangement deprives her so soon as she shall have qualified for their exercise, the Kokumin's correspondence speaks of the prevalence of such a rumour but denies its accuracy. What has probably been construed in that sense is a phrase in the exordium of the convention where the words are used "until the reality of Korea's financial competence shall have been recognised (Kankoku no fukyo no jitsu wo mitomeru made). This constitutes Japan arbiter of the situation, and makes the convention's period of operation dependent solely on her discretion.

It will be observed that if this convention be accurately reported, there is one obscure point, and that too a point of much importance, namely, the functions of the Japanese Tokwan who is to be posted in Seoul. The term itself is one of wide significance, but the language actually used would imply the direction of foreign affairs only. Supervision of consular affairs, however, indicates a wider field, and it may be taken for granted, we think, that the document, when published in detail, will be found less ambiguous than this brief summary suggests.

Original from

It is stated that some of the Korean Ministers presented their resignations after the conclusion of the convention, but the Emperor refused to accept them. His Majesty said that what his officials had to do was to apply themselves to giving effect to the Treaty in such a manner as to satisfy Japan of Korea's sincerity. The Prime Minister, however, goes out of office. But we find no confirmation of the rumour that his mind is deranged. What he did was to refuse obstinately to obey the Emperor's injunctions for negotiating with Japan on the above basis. He simply ignored the Imperial commands and set the weight of his official position against the proposed action. It was owing to this obstinacy that the Palace conference on the night of the 17th threatened to be interminably fruitless, and Marquis Ito accompanied by General Hasegawa was obliged to repair thither at a late hour to remain until past midnight. The Emperor not only resented this defiance of his authority but also felt that a want of courtesy had thus been shown towards Japan's Ambassador, and His Majesty accordingly deprived Mr. Han Kyu-hwa of his post and sentenced him to three years' banishment. At Marquis Ito's intervention, however, the latter part of the punishment was subsequently remitted. Mr. Han doubtless obeyed the dictates of duty as he interpreted it, and the public will be disposed to applaud rather than to condemn his procedure. He resolutely refused to promote or take part in an arrangement which impaired his country's sovereignty, and were there among his countrymen many others of like determination, no occasion would have existed for such a convention.

In connexion with the incident it is stated that the members of the opposition, headed by the Prime Minister, are said to have anticipated harsh treatment at Japan's hands, but Marquis Ito's intercession in Mr. Han's behalf has completely re-assured them.

The Emperor has signified his desire to have another meeting with Marquis Ito for the purpose of discussing the course of events subsequent to the operation of the new convention. His Majesty has also issued a proclamation announcing that the interests of the Empire and the welfare of the people demand the acceptance of a Japanese protectorate; that respectful confidence must be placed in Marquis Ito, and that all Korean subjects are to continue their avocations quietly and confidently.

Marquis Ito is to hold a reception on the 27th or 28th instant to which all the Korean high officials and all the prominent Japanese and foreign residents will be invited.

The Foreign Representatives, beginning with the British Minister, are said to have called at the Japanese Legation on the morning of the 19th to learn the course of the negotiations, and it is rumoured that they all signified their intention of offering congratulations so soon as the new Convention should be published.

A Seoul newspaper, called (in Japanese) the Kojo Shimpō, has been suspended and its plant confiscated. This is described as the newspaper that strongly opposed the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and it is now charged with endeavouring to incite the people to rebellion. The Kojo Shimpō is alleged to be under the control of a foreigner but it is not to be identified as the notorious Korea Daily News. The name of the latter is Dai Han Mai-il Shimpō.

There is a rumour (Kokumin Shimbun) that Mr. Li, Minister of Education, has taken poison. This is the official who assumed the lead in advocating compliance with Japan's proposals. The rumour is without confirmation thus far.

Such of the Japanese newspapers as had not already expressed their opinions, now write about the new convention. The gist of what they say is that things have been carried to their natural goal. Japan has proceeded in the most patient, painstaking and regular manner, as all the Western Powers must acknowledge. She has dealt deliberately and circumspectly with this problem which, unsolved, constituted an abiding menace to the peace of the East, and the solution now reached is the least drastic that was to be expected. It means that the greatest danger to international tranquillity has been removed and that the Korean nation may now enter upon a career of confident and tranquil development. Several papers allude to the question of the first Japanese Tōkwan in Seoul. They regard this as a matter of the utmost importance and urge the nomination of one of the best men possessed by Japan. The Asahi emphatically thinks that Marquis Ito is the one suitable person. We ourselves (Japan Mail) are inclined to think that General Baron Kodama would be specially adapted for the post, since a man is required who will exercise military as well as civil authority.

Wednesday, November 22.

The Kokumin Shimbun publishes what purports to be the full text of the new Convention concluded between Japan and Korea. The translation runs as follows:—

The Governments of the Empires of Japan and Korea, desiring to consolidate the community of interests that bind the two Empires together, have concluded a convention containing the following clauses which shall be operative until the prosperity and strength of Korea are recognised.

Art. I.—The Japanese Government, through the Foreign Office in Tokyo, shall manage and direct the relations and the business of Korea with foreign countries, and the Japanese Representatives and Consuls in foreign countries shall protect the subjects of Korea and their interests in those countries.

Art. II.—The Japanese Government shall be responsible for giving full effect to the treaties now actually existing between Korea and foreign countries, and the Korean Government promises not hereafter to make, without the intervention of the Japanese Government, any treaty or promise of a diplomatic nature.

Art. III.—The Japanese Government will appoint as its Representative at the Korean Court a Resident General (Tōkan) who, residing in Seoul, shall manage matters relating to foreign affairs and shall have the right of direct personal audience with the Emperor of Korea. The Japanese Government shall further have the right to post Residents (Riji-kan) at all the open ports in Korea and at such other places as the said Government may consider necessary. These Residents under the directions of the Resident General, shall discharge all functions belonging to the Japanese Consuls hitherto stationed in Korea, and shall further carry out all business necessary for giving full effect to the provisions of this Convention.

Art. IV.—All Treaties and Conventions already existing between Japan and Korea shall continue to have effect in so far as they do not conflict with the provisions of this Convention.

Art. V.—The Japanese Government guarantees the safety and prestige of the Imperial House of Korea.

It will be observed that the term Tōkan—originally sent over the wires in the form of Notoku—about the exact English equivalent of which there was much doubt—is rendered above by "Resident General," and the term Riji-kan by "Resident." We have the authority of the Kokumin Shimbun for these translations. That journal, though of course it prints only the Japanese text of the Convention, adds the English equivalent of these two important words. Thus we learn that so far as her foreign affairs are concerned Korea will henceforth stand towards Japan in the position occupied by the Malay States towards Great Britain or Tunis towards France. On the other hand, the new convention contains no evidence that Japan intends to interfere in the administration of Korea's domestic affairs. Possibly, indeed probably, the influence of this country will be largely exercised in that field also, but so far as the Convention is concerned it provides merely that Korea shall no longer have the right to conduct her own foreign relations, and that, consequently, there shall be an end, once and for all, of the cabals and intrigues which constituted a perpetual danger to the peace of the East. Count Okuma, commenting on the Convention, of which he has evidently seen only the epitomes hitherto published, speaks a good deal of the Article guaranteeing the safety and prestige of the Imperial House. He wittily compares the Emperor of Korea to a poor wandering ghost and Marquis Ito to a great bonze who, by one efficacious prayer, gives rest to the unquiet spirit. He pays a high compliment to Marquis Ito's ability and influence, and considers that the Korean problem is now finally solved.

Seoul has now entered an era of festivities to celebrate the conclusion of this convention. Marquis Ito and Mr. Hayashi are, of course, the principal figures on the social stage.

Marquis Ito is described as adopting every possible measure to re-assure the Koreans as to the meaning and import of the new convention. His Excellency is eminently adapted for such a task.

Japanese newspapers say that the Emperor of Korea has addressed to Marquis Ito a warm message of appreciation in connexion with the conclusion of the Convention, but we suspect that the word "Korea" in this telegram should read "Japan."

Steps are being taken for the removal of the Japanese Legation from Seoul, which means its conversion into a residency general. Telegrams say that the officials are very busy with this work.

In spite of Marquis Ito's endeavours there appears to be much dissatisfaction in Seoul with reference to the new Convention. The politicians who oppose it are endeavouring to incite the people to riot. Full precautions have been adopted by the Japanese military and police.

Thursday, November 23.

Telegrams from Seoul indicate that the new Convention is obtaining the approval of foreign States. The Representatives of England, the United States, France and China have all called on Marquis Ito and offered their congratulations. We miss the German Representative from the list and we trust that his absence may not be significant. These visits were made between the 19th and the 21st. It appears that on the 20th Mr. Hayashi communicated the gist of the Convention to the various Powers.

The Il Ching-hei have issued a manifesto expressing admiration of the Emperor's perspicacity in concluding this Convention and applauding the Ministers of State for leading the country successfully through a difficult crisis in its career. It will be observed that the doings of the Il Ching-hei are prominently reported by Japanese correspondents, but we should probably be ill advised did we accept these reports as conclusive evidence of the state of popular feeling in Korea. Unfortunately there is no supply of news from an entirely impartial source. The only foreign publication in Seoul that lays claim to the status of a newspaper is so greatly and obviously biased that no reliance whatever can be placed on its statements, and the Japanese reporters are necessarily inclined to view matters from their own stand-point only. So far as we can learn, however, the new convention is accepted on the whole with tolerably unanimous resignation. Something more drastic had been anticipated, and, after all, there is not in any nation a very large section which interests itself vividly in the conduct of ordinary foreign affairs, the only domain of administration visibly invaded by the Convention. In Korea those that meddled with such matters belonged largely to the intriguing and self-seeking class. Their metier is now gone, but they have not, it seems, very many sympathisers. The Fiji Shimbun's correspondence, however, says that the Ministers of the Crown are again seeking to obtain release from office and are tendering their resignations. The Emperor, on the other hand, declines to accept them. His Majesty is said to place great reliance on Marquis Ito, and to be anxious that the celebrated statesman should remain as long as possible in Seoul, but the Marquis does not contemplate prolonging his stay later than the end of November. Meanwhile the attitude of the Ministers has more or less embarrassed the conduct of State business. It is essential that some steps should be immediately taken to relieve the financial trouble in Seoul but the failure of the high officials to discharge their functions blocks the way. Mr. Megata is reported to be losing patience, and to have announced that if this policy of abstention be continued, he will adopt the needful steps on his own authority. All the correspondence of Tokyo journals leads us to think that this attitude on the part of the Ministers is purely a matter of form. They shrink from transmitting their names to history as unprotesting parties to the new arrangements. The literati who threatened to foment troublesome agitation have, however, calmed down; the provincials are quite quiet, and when the Ministers find themselves floating in smooth water after all, they will probably recover their breath and their sangfroid.

The Mikado has addressed a message to Marquis Ito and one to Mr. Hayashi applauding their action. The message to the Marquis runs thus:—"Considering it essential that the relations between my empire and Korea should be placed upon a firmer basis, I appointed you to convey to His Majesty the Emperor of Korea a statement of my sincerity in this matter. You have skillfully given effect to my purpose and have fully discharged the duty entrusted to you. I profoundly approve your efforts." No accurate statement is made as to the Imperial message to Mr. Hayashi.

On the 21st instant Marquis Ito dined at the French Legation. The banquet is said to have been very brilliant. On the 22nd His Excellency proceeded by rail to Suwon for purposes of recreation—shooting game is the exact form of sport described, but as we have never previously heard of Marquis Ito indulging in that pastime, we are sceptical about the correctness of the report. It is stated that the Marquis will visit Pyongyang on the 27th and will return to Seoul on the 28th.

The offices of the new Tōkan-fu have been chosen in the compound of the old palace, and steps are being taken for the removal of the Japanese Legation. It may be presumed that the Japanese Government will adequately recognise the great services of Mr. Hayashi, who for many years has conducted his country's relations with Korea in a remarkably able manner under circumstances of great difficulty.

The schools whose students showed signs of commotion on the publication of news about the Convention, have been ordered to discontinue their work for a week. Two Koreans have been apprehended on a charge of having incited some rioters to set fire to the house of the Minister of Education. This confirms the previously received intelligence of such an attempt, as well as the statement that Mr. Li took the lead in advocating consent to Japan's proposals. Nothing more is said, however, of the rumour that he had committed suicide, and probably the story was a mere canard.

The convention was submitted to the Japanese Privy Council on the 22nd instant, and is said to have been unanimously approved.

When the train carrying Marquis Ito and his suite was en route from Suwon to Seoul, stones were thrown at it, and one of these missiles struck the Marquis on the cheek, inflicting a slight wound. One of the throwers has been arrested. Stones are the traditional weapons of the Koreans. They are remarkable for their skill in that kind of ballistics.

Later.

Since the above was in type fuller details have reached us. It appears that the outrage was committed a few minutes after the train had left Anyang. Marquis Ito was not struck by a stone. What happened was that a chip of granite, some 2 inches square, smashed the window beside which the Marquis was seated and the fragments of glass inflicted some slight hurts on his face. There was a little bleeding but it soon ceased. No evil results of any kind were apparent. The Japanese gendarmes arrested four of the stone-throwers and two of them have confessed.

THE NEW CONVENTION BETWEEN JAPAN AND KOREA.

The following is the official version of the new convention. It is identical with the version already translated in these columns, except as to some trivial points of phraseology:—

The Governments of Japan and Korea, desiring to strengthen the principle of solidarity which unites the two Empires, have with that object in view agreed upon and concluded the following stipulations to serve until the moment arrives when it is recognised that Korea has attained national strength:—

Art. I.—The Government of Japan, through the Department of Foreign Affairs at Tokio, will hereafter have control and direction of the external relations and affairs of Korea, and the diplomatic and consular representatives of Japan will have the charge of the subjects and interests of Korea in foreign countries.

Art. II.—The Government of Japan undertake to see to the execution of the treaties actually existing between Korea and other Powers, and the Government of Korea engage not to conclude hereafter any act or engagement having an international character, except through the medium of the Government of Japan.

Art. III.—The Government of Japan shall be represented at the Court of His Majesty the Emperor of Korea by a Resident General, who shall reside at Seoul, primarily for the purpose of taking charge of and directing matters relating to diplomatic affairs. He shall have the right of private and personal audience of His Majesty the Emperor of Korea. The Japanese Government shall also have the right to station Residents at the several open ports and such other places in Korea as they may deem necessary. Such Residents shall, under the direction of the Resident General, exercise the powers and functions hitherto appertaining to Japanese Consuls in Korea and shall perform such duties as may be necessary in order to carry into full effect the provisions of this Agreement.

Art. IV.—The stipulations of all treaties and agreements existing between Japan and Korea not inconsistent with the provisions of this Agreement shall continue in force.

Art. V.—The Government of Japan undertake to maintain the welfare and dignity of the Imperial House of Korea.

In faith whereof, the Undersigned duly authorized by their Governments have signed this Agreement and affixed their seals.

Signed. HAYASHI GONSUKE,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister
Plenipotentiary.

Signed. PAK CHE SOON,
Minister for Foreign Affairs.

JAPANESE MINES.

In answer to a request from the Russian General Staff the Japanese have defined the positions of the mines laid down by them in the neighbourhood of Vladivostok. From the statement we learn this mine-laying operation in the northern seas commenced immediately after the sinking of the Kinsu Maru off Gensan on the 26th of April, 1904. Speaking broadly the Japanese then laid (28th and 29th of April) a field of mines stretching from the north-eastern extremity of Kazakavitchi Island, across Ussuri Bay and stretching southward to Tsivolko Island. These mines partially blocked the two entrances to Vladivostok Bay. Then, nearly a year later and when the Baltic Squadron was on the eve of arrival, a large field of 715 mines was laid right across Peter the Great Bay from Askold Island on the east to Korsakoff Island on the west, a distance of 40 miles. These mines should have completely blocked the path of any ship attempting to reach Vladivostok or to emerge from it, and inasmuch as there were more than 17 mines in every mile of sea—supposing them to have been distributed equally—it is hard to understand how even the Almas reached Vladivostok safely after the Battle in the Sea of Japan. One would suppose too that every vessel attempting to make her way into or out of Vladivostok must do so at deadly risk yet there has not been a single mishap to merchant steamers. A few mines are reported as having drifted ashore at Oki, an inland off the Izumo coast, and we may assume that these were errant from the Vladivostok field; but it is truly remarkable that communications with Vladivostok have been possible at all during the past 7 months, seeing that right across the route of vessels a line of mines lay strewn at an approximate distance of only 100 yards apart. Some idea is thus suggested not only of the comparative innocuousness of this kind of defence, but also of the enormous quantity that must have been strewn in the vicinity of Port Arthur, where not only were a number of war-ships destroyed by them, but also several merchant steamers met the same fate.

A murder took place in Sugamo Jail, Tokyo, on Nov. 22nd. Two convicts named S. Onoda (24) and M. Watanabe quarrelled while working at bamboo-basket making. The latter killed the former with a knife. The murderer was removed to the District Court for trial.

VLADIVOSTOCK.

Friday, November 17.

A telegram has reached Nagasaki from the master of a Norwegian steamer, the Ressler (?) which left that port recently for Vladivostock, to the effect that on arriving at the Russian harbour a great fire was raging in the town which was also the scene of much disturbance, and it was found impossible to land any cargo. Further, a German steamer which left Vladivostock on the 14th and reached Shimonoseki on the 16th, reports that on the 12th an insurrection broke out on a large scale, the troops and sailors pumped kerosene on the buildings and set them on fire. When the vessel steamed away on the 14th, the flames were burning fiercely. All this is difficult to reconcile with the re-assuring statements published a few days ago to the effect that order had been restored. It is on the contrary apparent that order has not been restored, and that things are in a condition which would render it highly perilous to send any large number of prisoners thither. Washington telegrams indicate that several hundreds of persons have been killed or wounded and a great number of houses burned. Certainly Russia's difficulties thicken. A statement is now current that in addition to the disaffected spirit already rife among the prisoners in Manchuria, much discontent has been caused by the Government's routine for recalling the troops. Instead of giving precedence to those who have been longest in the field, the newest arrivals are being withdrawn first. This is probably the order dictated by the manner of the force's distribution in the field, but it is none the less calculated to engender indignation among the men.

An extra published by the Hochi Shimbun yesterday gives the alleged facts of the Vladivostock insurrection. It appears that an outbreak had long been anticipated but the authorities, not suspecting its magnitude, failed to take sufficient precaution. As is not unusual in such matters, the spark that fired the magazine was quite fortuitous. Two Russian soldiers got into an altercation with a Chinese store-keeper about the prices of his goods and drawing their knives, stabbed him to death. A commotion arose and a party of soldiers moved out to restore order. But the men turned on their officers, who had to fly for their lives and thereafter, like fire in stubble, the insurrection spread. The following day (12th) saw many thousands of soldiers and sailors banded together and animated apparently by recklessly destructive propensities. They set fire to the town in many places and whole rows of houses were reduced to ashes, including the principal bank and the store of Kunst & Albers. It is stated that the blue-jackets of the Almas and the Zemichug joined forces with the insurgents, and that the Rossia and the Gromovoi put to sea. A force of some ten thousand men and officers remained true to their colours. They withdrew to a good defensive position and furious fighting was going on at the date of latest advices (14th). For a time it was impossible for any steamer to leave the port as the insurgents trained quick-firers on the exit, but some accident to a gun created an opportunity of which the Arcadia, bringer of this news, availed herself. Rumour says that rebellious manifestoes circulated from Harbin were the proximate cause of the outbreak. If so, Harbin also must be in a state of insurrection.

Saturday, November 18.

The prime origin of the Vladivostock riot is said to have been discontent that sufficient food and clothing were not provided for the troops, and that what was provided could scarcely be used, whereas the officers led lives of ease and luxury, in sharp contrast with the sufferings of the men. Harbin is said to be terribly dissatisfied for the same reason, and the question is whether the outbreak at Vladivostock was not intended to synchronise with one at Harbin. There were persistent rumours that a strike was planned, but before it could be put into operation, the mass of the insurgents had taken the law into their own hands, and were rifling the stores and creating serious disturbances. The worst did not take place until the night of the 12th, when wholesale destruction of property seems to have been the chief aim of the insurgents. A semi-official report, dated the 14th instant, said that some semblance of order had been restored, but that the sounds of firing—rifles and cannon—were still heard continually. It is related that the civilian inhabitants of the town took refuge in 57 steamers and that the war-ships lying in the port made no attempt whatever to assist in restoring order. Rumour alleges that the order for the carriage of the Russian prisoners to Vladivostock has been cancelled and that the Varoslav and the Borodino, which had sailed with loads of prisoners from Kobe, were stopped by signal as they passed Moji and were directed to head for Nagasaki.

Sunday, November 19

The latest news from Vladivostock has been carried by the hospital ship Mongolia which left that place on the 15th and arrived at Moji on the 18th. She reports that the disturbance commenced on the 12th. The soldiers attacked the head-quarters of General Pochiloff and killed some 400 officers and non-commissioned officers. They then dragged artillery into the streets and bombarded the houses, destroying fully one half of the town. They were joined by a party of troops from Harbin who had obtained possession of a train and made the journey on their own account, though this sounds scarcely credible unless Harbin is in a state of complete insurrection. The Japanese residents were not molested but many Chinese were killed. The rioters consisted almost wholly of soldiers and sailors, and the affair was thus of a revolutionary nature. They released the prisoners from the jail. It is estimated that 400 Russians and 500 Chinese were killed and that the damage done represents 50 million yen. By the morning of the 15th things had quieted somewhat.

Monday, November 20.

There is no special news from Vladivostock. Telegraphic communication being cut, intelligence comes only through the medium of ships. A great part of the town appears to have been wrecked. The store of Kunst & Albers seems to have been a special object of attack, probably because of its conspicuous dimensions. It was virtually destroyed. Happily some notice of the danger had been received, and the large staff of foreign employees managed to escape before the storm broke. There are said to be over 50 steamers lying in the port waiting to discharge their cargoes.

Tuesday, November 21.

A Reuter's telegram denies emphatically that there is any disaffection among the troops of Linevitch. But a traveller who reached Chefoo on the 20th from Vladivostock declares that mutiny has broken out at many places in northern Manchuria and gives a most shocking account of Vladivostock. Half of the town, he says, has been burned; the people can not find shelter; hundreds of officers have been assassinated; women and children have been killed in numbers; murder and pillage still reign supreme, and there is no prospect of order being restored. There may be some truth in this story, but it suggests much exaggeration, and is at variance with a detailed account given by the Captain of a German steamer which reached Moji on the evening of the 19th, having left Vladivostock on the 17th. This authority says that by the 14th order was virtually restored. The incendiarism was confined chiefly to big and conspicuous buildings, and although much smoke continued to ascend on the 14th the flames had then been virtually extinguished. As for the statement that the officer in command of the fortress had been killed, the Captain of the Saberas (?) denies it. He says that on the 16th instant when walking through the town he met the commandant and greeted him. Altogether those that were killed and those that committed suicide in the panic totalled some 800. But at this point the narrator declined to speak further unless he were paid a sum of 750 yen. He would not tell of the casualties among the troops or of the proceedings of the insurgents, but he said that though order was temporarily restored, there could be no assurance that the emeute would not break out again at any moment, especially since communications being severed there was no possibility of sending troops from Russia to deal with the situation. All the Chinese had made their escape.

A woman who seems to have come by the same steamer denies emphatically that there is any sign of order being restored, and says that no communication existed between the ships and the shore on the 17th instant. This is confirmed by the captain of the Tiberius (apparently the same steamer as the previously mentioned Saberas) who, according to the Nichi Nichi, gives a very different account from that attributed to him by the correspondent of the Hochi, quoted above. He is made to say that the flames were still quite unsubdued on the morning of the 17th when the steamer left the port; that the commandant was missing; that the place was abandoned to the tender mercies of the rioters who, many of them in a state of intoxication, were working their wild will; and that Admiral Essen, embarking in the Rossia, had escaped with that cruiser and the Gromovoi to Saghalien. Mrs. and Miss Essen are reported to have come to Moji in the Tiberius.

Wednesday, November 22.

The Chinese Commercial Agent at Vladivostock is said to have informed Peking that the losses suffered by Chinese residents during the emeute total ten millions of yen, and has requested that a claim for that amount be presented to the Russian Government.

A telegram from Vladivostock to Nagasaki, sent on the night of the 20th, says that the papers of all the ships in port have been destroyed by fire. These documents were kept in the harbourmaster's office, in default of consulates, and the office was one of the buildings to which the mutineers applied the torch.

We have no news this morning (Wednesday) about the state of affairs in Vladivostock, but the restoration of telegraphic communications is re-assuring. Chefoo wires that four Russian destroyers have set out suddenly for the northern fortress.

General Daniloff arrived at Nagasaki on the morning of the 21st instant, and immediately proceeded to consult with Admiral Rojestvensky.

Thursday, November 23.

The latest news from Vladivostock is brought by a steamer, the Vladimir, which left that place on the 20th and reached Shimomoseki on the 22nd. She carried a number of soldiers (?) who had escaped and about 100 women. According to her report, some kind of order had been restored by the morning of the 17th instant, but there was still a feeling of uneasiness. At Harbin also there had been disturbance, but not of a very serious nature. The buildings on the sea-side and those on the railway had been the chief sufferers at the hands of the mob. There were 36 steamers in the port, together with the Zemichug and two transports.

A Norwegian steamer which left Vladivostock on the 18th carrying 2 captains, 806 Chinese and 51 Europeans, has called at Nagasaki en route for Chefoo. Her people say that on the day before the ship's departure General Mischenko and a body of Cossacks arrived in Vladivostock, and their presence had produced a semblance of tranquillity but it did not seem that the trouble had been really quieted. These people further related that the Ahrens hong had been among the buildings destroyed. Mrs. Ahrens is said to have been a passenger by the steamer. The Russo-Chinese bank had been partially destroyed. Apparently it is true that the Rossia and the Gromozoi left the port on account of the disturbance. They returned on the 18th. From the same source—the officers of the Norwegian steamer—the Kokumini's correspondent learns that Mischenko's Cossacks had not by any means restored order fully; that several conflagrations were still raging on the 18th; that the number of Russians killed was about 300 and that the Chinese victims were almost innumerable, and that the place had not provisions for more than 20 days. It will be observed that these various accounts differ considerably. There is some confirmation of the statement that provisions are scarce, for the Russians are reported to be buying up everything obtainable in Nagasaki.

ADMIRAL KAMIMURA AND THE SATSUMA REBELLION.

Admiral Kamimura has just related a story which deserves to rank with the recital of the adventures of Marquis Ito and Count Inouye on their celebrated expedition to Europe. It appears that just before the Admiral left Tokyo on the eve of the arrival of the Baltic Squadron, General Viscount Takashima, formerly Minister of War, sent him a sword which had long been an heirloom in the Takashima family, and reminded him that now or never the time had come to do or die for the country. Admiral Kamimura, en route for the naval base, called at Viscount Takashima's villa in Kobe to return thanks for this gift, one of the most valued a Japanese samurai can receive. In the absence of Viscount Takashima the admiral was welcomed by the latter's agent, Mr. Okawa, and to him he related the story. It appears that in early Meiji days the great Saigo—Saigo Takamori—selected three lads whom he sent to study at the Naval College in Tokyo—the Heigakuryo as it was called. These three lads were Yamamoto, Togo and Kamimura. Yamamoto is now Admiral Baron Yamamoto, Minister of Marine, and as for Togo and Kamimura, their names alone need be mentioned. At that time the Minister of the Navy was the late Admiral Count Kawamura, a man universally beloved and himself a profoundly attached follower of Saigo Takamori. The three youths applied themselves diligently to study, but in 1875 very disquieting news reached them: news that their patron Saigo had severed his relations with the Government and that a serious collision appeared inevitable. They then took counsel together. It seemed impossible for them, though mere lads, to remain quietly at their studies while such a crisis pended. If Saigo were in the right, then their plain duty was to range themselves on his side and fall or triumph with him. If he were in the wrong, then they would be under no lesser obligation to advise him by sacrificing their lives, according to the traditional custom of loyal samurai. Hence it seemed to them that they had no choice but to hasten to Satsuma and place themselves in direct communication with their patron. Precluded, of course, from taking the authorities into their confidence, they made their escape from the Naval College at night and succeeded in reaching Osaka. There they found that the slender stock of money at their disposal as students was already exhausted, and without a fresh supply it would be impossible to proceed. Their only hope lay in a frank appeal to Godai Tomoatsu, the famous samurai-merchant of Osaka. To him they unbosomed themselves and asked for aid. He refused peremptorily to assist them in any way, and in face of his disfavour they saw themselves placed in extreme difficulties. They could not hope in their penniless condition to accomplish the long journey that still separated them from their destination, while return to Tokyo, equally impossible as a matter of distance, could only mean disgrace and ruin. That evening, as they sat sadly in their inn debating a position which presented no ray of light, the shoji were suddenly drawn partially open and a man's hand threw in a parcel. It contained a sheaf of bank-notes. Godai chose this clandestine method of succouring them: prudence had dictated his curt refusal but his sympathies were with the lads. Their difficulties were now solved so far as the prosecution of their journey was concerned. Taking passage in a little coasting steamer, the Hozui Maru, they reached Kagoshima in due time and repaired at once to the residence of Saigo. There, in an outer room they found his celebrated lieutenant, Hemmi, in close consultation with six or seven comrades. Hemmi, learning their errand, communicated it to Saigo, and they were presently admitted to this presence. He rated them in the strongest terms. "I selected you as promising students," he said, "and sent you to the Naval College, not with any selfish purpose of mine nor yet for your own sakes but because the day will inevitably come when Japan must measure her strength with Russia, and it is incumbent on every true Japanese to prepare vigorously for that crisis. In the Naval College you had only one duty to perform: the duty of applying yourselves earnestly to your tasks and equipping yourselves to serve your country in her time of need. You have absconded from the College in obedience to your own imaginings, thus betraying the trust I reposed in you and forgetting your duty as students. Return at once, and henceforward whatever may happen, even though mountains crumble and rivers run backwards, let nothing induce you to turn from the path of serving Japan with all your might." The three lads were dumbfounded. Next day they turned their feet once more to Tokyo, furnished with letters from Saigo to Kawamura entreating the latter to use his influence so that their sin of insubordination might not terminate their career as naval cadets. How unerringly Saigo selected worthy protégés and how astute was his prescience of Japan's future! In the thirtieth year after this incident at Kagoshima, two of these lads were to earn undying fame by crushing Russia's naval might in the Sea of Japan, and the third was to direct the country's naval administration throughout the course of her life-and-death struggle with the great Northern Power.

ARCHBISHOP O'CONNELL.

A meeting of the Roman Catholic Young Men's Christian Association was held on the 18th instant in the Kanda Hall to welcome His Grace Archbishop O'Connell. The speakers were Mr. Mayeda Chota, Professor Anezaki, the Rev. Arthur Lloyd, Mr. Shimada Saburo and Mr. Ozaki Yukio.

On the 19th instant a high mass was celebrated in the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Tsukiji, His Grace Archbishop Osof and Father Everard officiating. Some 500 converts were present. After the religious service a friendly meeting took place, at which Archbishop O'Connell attended. Mr. Koike, on behalf of the Six Roman Catholic Churches in Tokyo, read an address of welcome and presented some handsome specimens of gold lacquer. Mr. Honjo, formerly a member of the House of Representatives, offered to give to the Church a plot of land measuring 30,000 tsubo (12¼ acres) in Gumma Prefecture among the hills some 7 or 8 miles from Karuizawa. He proposed, though not himself a believer in Christianity, that this place should be made the site of the principal Roman Catholic place of worship in Japan, his object in offering the land being to convey his countrymen's appreciation of the visit of Archbishop O'Connell. Subsequently the Archbishop delivered an address in which he complimented the Japanese on the possession of three valuable qualities, namely, strength of obedience, discerning ability and amiability. He believed that these qualities were the main cause of the Empire's great successes, and he also believed that among a people so dowered the faith he professed must find many followers.

The address from the six parishes was as follows:—

Tokyo, the 19th of November, 1905.

To His Grace, the most Reverend Archbishop O'Connell, D.D., Nuncio of His Holiness Pope Pius X.

We, Catholics of the six parishes of Tokyo, have the honour to welcome your Grace, most respectfully. We are very grateful to His Holiness Pope Pius X., whose paternal love for the Church of Japan has prompted him to send you as Nuncio, to call on our beloved Emperor.

We firmly believe that your present mission will do much for the future development of our Church in this country.

We are also grateful to your Grace and to the reverend gentlemen of your suite for the honour you have done us by accepting our invitation this day. We only regret that want of time and means have prevented us from welcoming you in a more befitting manner.

Poor as this object may be, we beg you, nevertheless, most Reverend Lord, to accept it as a token of our gratitude and as a souvenir of the present meeting.

Once more, we thank your Grace for the honour and pleasure you have done us in deigning to come among us.

THE PRISONERS IN NAGASAKI HARBOUR.

Saturday, November 18.

General Daniloff must be much perplexed how to deal with the prisoners destined originally for Vladivostock. Seven thousand of these men are now on board the Yaroslav and the Borodino—the latter has Admiral Rojestvensky on board—, which ships, having been recalled when en route for the northern port, are now lying in Nagasaki. There is a report that General Daniloff will proceed to Vladivostock to investigate the state of affairs there before deciding upon any course, but it is very possible that the information he receives from refugees now arriving in Japan may suffice for his purpose without a journey northward. At all events the problem of the prisoners has again become complicated. Originally the Russian Government proposed to send them to Odessa, but the disturbed state of that town suggested Vladivostock as a safer destination. Now, however, Vladivostock has shown itself even worse than Odessa, and according to present appearances Japan is the only safe refuge for the prisoners.

Monday, November 20.

The number of Russian prisoners in the harbour at Nagasaki is 3,513 on board the Borodino and 3,500 on the Yaroslav. It is alleged that out of this total, 7,013, no less than 5,000 are disaffected, their ostensible causes of complaint being that they have been turned back from continuing their voyage home and that they are not allowed to land, but at heart they are supposed to sympathise with the Vladivostock insurgents. Four Japanese torpedo-boats are lying in the immediate vicinity of the vessels, and this precaution is said to have checked a mutiny which would otherwise have certainly broken out. It was anticipated that things would culminate during the night of the 19th, and doubtless news will be received before we go to press. The Borodino, on board of which is Admiral Rojestvensky, seems to be the chief seat of disaffection. It is on this ship that a hundred Japanese constables are guarding the Admiral. It is a curious reflection that after nearly five months of tender and kindly treatment at Japanese hands the Admiral should find himself in deadly peril immediately on passing into the hands of his own nationals.

General Fock is said to have divided all his immediate belongings among the Japanese on the eve of his departure. Some of the articles were given to the priests of the temple, including 100 roubles for charitable purposes. Five thousand cigars went to the soldiers who had formed his guard and all the furniture of his apartment was handed over to his interpreter. Japanese newspapers continue to write about the bad relations existing between this officer and Rear-Admiral Wiren, but such subjects, however interesting they may have been at one time, are now stale and unprofitable.

Tuesday, November 21.

General Daniloff is reported to have proceeded to Nagasaki. Rumour says that an insurrectionary spirit is rife among the prisoners at Kokura, Fukuoka, Kurume and Kumamoto, and that when these troops leave Japan they will probably rise in rebellion. We strongly suspect, however, that rumour is as busy as usual with exaggerations. For the news from Nagasaki indicates plainly that the Russian officers have obtained mastery over the disaffected soldiers. Thus it is stated, apparently on good authority, that the Yaroslav has started for Vladivostock, carrying 2,100 men, and that the Borodino (some call her the Voronej) is lying quietly with the remainder of the ex-prisoners. A transfer of the orderly men was made to the former vessel and she was then sent on her way. Rojestvensky remains with the Borodino, but he has intimated that no further assistance is required from the shore authorities. Accordingly, the force of 100 constables has been withdrawn, and the four torpedo-boats which were watching the Russian ships have returned to Saseho. Two things are evident from this. One is that Admiral Rojestvensky must be entirely confident of his own ability to deal with the mutinous men; the other, that the Russian officers must be re-assured as to the state of affairs at Vladivostock since they are sending the Yaroslav thither. But how can they possess any re-assuring information? The telegraph is not working, and the accounts brought by steamers do not suggest that the northern port is in a condition fit for the reception of troops who may possibly join the rioters there. The Hochi affirms—without giving any authority—that the Russians asked Japan to send men-of-war for the purpose of escorting the transports, a request which was naturally refused. In the same journal we read that the trouble has its origin in jealousy between the two services, the Army being persuaded that it owes all its troubles to the incompetence of the Navy.

Thursday, November 23.

It is stated that on the 23rd the Russian prisoners on the Borodino were to be transferred to the Volunteer steamer Kirff, which was then to start for Vladivostock, the Borodino returning to Kobe for another batch of prisoners. Apparently the removal of the prisoners is to be resumed in accordance with the original plan.

MILITARY MATTERS.

It is stated that the railway from Tiehling southward has been working splendidly in connexion with the return of the troops. Over thirty trains have been despatched daily from Tiehling without embarrassment at any time. The steamship service, however, has not proved equal to carrying off this great flow of the troops and it has proved necessary to reduce the number of trains to 24 daily, until the large body of men collected at Tairen (Ta-lien) can be taken off. This may sound strange in the immediate context of the fact that a number of steamers have been released from the public service, but it will be observed that the released steamers were all employed as auxiliary cruisers or hospital ships, and presumably it is considered bad economy to convert them into transports.

Field Marshal Marquis Oyama is to leave Tairen on the 31st instant and will reach Ujina on the 3rd of December. Thence he will proceed to Tokyo via the Shrine of Ise.

General Baron Kuroki and Lieut General Inouye (12th Division) with their staff will set out from Tiehling in the beginning of December.

It is expected that Lieut-General Asada (Guards Division) and his staff will leave Tiehling on the 25th of December. The Guards and the 12th Division belong to the First Army.

Investigations as to the noteworthy acts performed by privates in the Battles of Liaoyang and Mukden, have resulted in the granting of decorations and orders of merit to 1,068 men from first-class gunner Matsushita Tokichi downwards. The plan pursued by the authorities is to determine the rewards of the men first, leaving the cases of the officers and non-commissioned officers for future inquiry.

Major-General Umezawa had a great reception in Tokyo, where he arrived at 3 p.m. on the 23rd instant. This officer had a splendid record, especially at the Battle of the Shaho, where he held Penhsipu against the Russian flanking attack. Umezawa had only one brigade against five times as large a Russian force. It is related that General Ian Hamilton's comment on this action was that with such a brigade (Second Reservists) he could have settled the South African War and would undertake to protect the Indian frontier. At Mukden Umezawa's troops were chiefly engaged in the pursuit. It was they that captured Tiehling.

PLAGUE.

According to a telegram sent from Osaka to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun under date of the 20th instant, the Osaka City Council has decided to appropriate a sum of 107,000 yen for the purpose of adopting measures to check the spread of the plague. This fell disease threatens to get the upper hand. Up to the 19th instant the number of cases reported rose to 31, the greater part of which ended fatally. Moreover, whereas the disease had previously been confined to the west and south wards, it has now suddenly spread to the north ward and to Nishinada. There is said to be considerable consternation and preventive steps are being vigorously taken.

In Kobe also the pest made its appearance on the 10th instant between which time and the 19th there were 12 cases.

Two fresh cases of bubonic plague appeared on Nov. 16th in Kobe. Mr. Anto, an official of the Bureau of Sanitary Affairs, has arrived there via Osaka where he was investigating the origin of the disease.

Two fresh cases of plague are reported in Osaka. One of the patients is a woman 35 years old residing in Chitose-machi, Minami-ku, and the other, a young man, living in Ichiban-cho, North Horicho.

According to the Fiji, plague cases now number thirty from the first appearance in October. There are fears that the disease will further spread. The Osaka Municipality has decided to spend yen 107,000 in carrying out sanitary measures throughout the city.

An official report says that a fresh case of bubonic plague has appeared in Kobe. The patient is a woman who was among the persons undergoing disinfecting measures in a hospital.

Another case is also reported. The patient is a man residing in Nishide-machi, Hyogo.

Since the first appearance on Dec. 10th up to the present time the victims number twelve in all.

A telegram to the Asahi says that a renewed outbreak of the plague has occurred in Newchwang. At the quarantine stations of Tientsin and Taku, steamers from Newchwang are strictly examined.

On Nov. 21st, a fresh case of bubonic plague was reported in Kobe. The patient is a young woman.

A dead rat infected with plague was found on Nov. 20th in Nishimoto-cho, Fukagawa, Tokyo.

An Osaka telegram reports that among dead and live rats in Mido, Kawara-machi, Mingo-machi, Imahashi, Kitahama, and other streets, many which are infected with plague have been found. The city authorities are enforcing the strictest measures throughout these districts.

CHINA.

Friday, November 17.

On the 15th inst.—according to the Kokumin's Peking correspondence—Mr. Uchida entertained Prince Ching and other high Chinese dignitaries at the Japanese Legation at luncheon. Very cordial speeches were interchanged. Mr. Uchida expressed a sincere hope and conviction that the mission of Baron Komura would have the effect of increasing and strengthening the bonds between the neighbouring empires, and Prince Ching, in reply, said that they welcomed most heartily their old friend Baron Komura and they reciprocated frankly the good wishes uttered by Mr. Uchida.

It is stated that on the occasion of Baron Komura's reception at the Chinese Court to present his credentials the Emperor shook hands with him, an unprecedented departure from the traditional etiquette of China. The Asahi's correspondent adds that the front gate of the Palace was thrown open for the Ambassador's entry, and that this too was an unprecedented mark of honour. After the audience Baron Komura, Mr. Uchida and their suite lunched with Prince Ching. The same evening Baron Komura received the members of the Foreign Corps Diplomatique. The first meeting of the Plenipotentiaries was to take place on the 17th instant, thus coinciding with the national holiday in Japan on account of the Imperial act of worship at the Ise shrines.

Saturday, November 18.

The news from Peking this morning may be summed up by saying that the Chinese Government seems to be neglecting nothing that can contribute to good feeling between the neighbouring empires. The story, in fact, still remains at the stage of preliminary courtesies, whence it will presently emerge into the domain of serious business. Baron Komura's audience at court was distinguished by very special marks of honour, and at a reception given by the Baron on the 16th instant after the audience, all the Foreign Representatives were present and the Japanese Plenipotentiary appears to have been welcomed very heartily. The first meeting of the plenipotentiaries took place on the 17th instant, but of course no details are published.

Much attention seems to have been attracted by the opening of the front gate of the Palace to admit Baron Komura, Mr. Uchida and his suite. This gate had never previously been opened for such a purpose, and the event is interpreted as a sign that China has at length recognised the right of foreign countries—or of some of them at any rate—to be classed as her equals.

Sunday, November 19.

At the first meeting of the Plenipotentiaries, which took place on the 17th instant in the afternoon, the only business done was an exchange of credentials and the fixing of the order and hours of conference. Thereafter Baron Komura handed in a written statement of Japan's proposals with regard to Manchuria and the Chinese Plenipotentiaries promised to reply in writing after due examination of the document. It is reported that the attitude of the Plenipotentiaries towards each other was most friendly and that there is every indication of smooth progress.

Mr. Pokotiloff is reported to have stated that Russia will not send any plenipotentiary to Peking in connexion with this business. Should any necessity arise for her association in the matter, she will be represented by M. Pokotiloff.

The five envoys whose expedition to Europe, America and Japan was interrupted by a bomb-thrower, are to resume their journey at the end of this month, it is said. The fact that no light whatever has been thrown on this affair is very singular. It would seem that no one has even identified the remains of the would-be assassin, though they are carefully preserved for the purpose of recognition. Were they identified it can not be doubted that the methods of judicial procedure employed in China would soon lead to the implication of many persons, guilty or innocent. But this seemingly simple clue is not obtainable. The bomb-thrower is still unnamed. A wonderful example of secrecy is furnished.

Monday, November 20.

A telegram to the Kokumin Shinbun from Peking, dated the afternoon of the 18th instant, says that the newspapers of Peking and Tientsin applaud the moderation of Japan's proposals with respect to Manchuria and urge that China should firmly unite with her neighbour to preserve the peace and integrity of Eastern Asia. Another telegram to the same journal, dated the 19th, alleges that the Chinese Plenipotentiaries have debated their answer to Japan's proposals and will commit it to writing immediately. There are reports that a strong feeling exists among an influential section of Chinese statesmen in favour of proposing an offensive and defensive alliance with Japan.

Prince Chin, Viceroy Yuan and Mr. Ku Fun-ki, China's Plenipotentiaries, held a meeting with closed doors on the morning of the 19th. Present indications suggest a speedy and satisfactory settlement.

The Nichi Nichi publishes a telegram in the sense that a rumour having gone abroad as to some territorial demand made by Japan, certain provincial Viceroys and Governors telegraphed to Peking for information, and received an answer that there was no truth in such a story. Probably this is a resurrection of the canard that Japan had offered to give up Liaotung if China agreed to hand over Fuhkien.

The Asahi Shinbun says that it learns on good authority that Japan's proposals are embodied in twelve articles, of which the most important are as follows:—

The transfer of the lease of Liaotung.
The ownership of the East-Chinese Railway.
The concession for a Changchun-Kirin Railway.

The posting of railway guards.
Maintenance of the present system of war-posts and war-telegraphs and their extension within certain limits.

Concessions for railways from Hsinmintun to Mukden and from Wiju to Mukden.
Opening of the principal towns in northern and southern Manchuria.

Priority of mining and forestry rights in Manchuria. There are two or three additional proposals which do not appear to have become known to our contemporary.

Tuesday, November 21.

There is no definite news as to the progress of the negotiations in Peking, nor indeed could any be reasonably expected yet. On the 20th instant the Chinese Plenipotentiaries were to hold a meeting for the purpose of discussing Japan's proposals. These are said to be approved on the whole, but there is an idea that some provision should be introduced recognising more fully the reality of Chinese sovereignty in Manchuria. The Hochi Shinbun's correspondent, however, wires that Prince Ching is considerably perturbed about the problem of the railway south of Changchun. China has not the means to buy it back from Japan, and if she consent to the latter's right of ownership, many dangers will threaten. We do not know how much truth there may be in this rumour, but the same journal alleges that M. Dubail has approached the Waiwupu with a proposal that if China desires to purchase the railway from Japan, France will find the money. Prince Ching is represented as having replied that if the occasion should arise, France will be consulted.

It is further stated that the Chinese Minister in St. Petersburg has telegraphed to his Government advising that if Japan prefers any special demands with regard to Liaotung, they must be considered by the light of China's Sovereignty so as not to provoke protests from other nations. If Mr. Hu spends his country's money upon telegraphing such banalities he can not be highly complimented on his carefulness. But we doubt the story.

In the Nichi Nichi Shinbun it is stated that the Chinese Plenipotentiaries not having made any reply to the Japanese proposals or fixed a date for the second conference, Baron Komura urged greater expedition. Nevertheless up to the 20th there had been no answer. The proposals were submitted on the 17th, so it can not yet be said that any undue delay has occurred.

The Nichi Nichi's Peking correspondence says that the Representatives of Germany and Russia are doing everything in their power to obstruct the appointment of a Japanese officer to the post of director in the newly established Nobles School. M. Mumm is working for the nomination of a certain lieutenant-colonel of his own nationality.

Wednesday, November 22.

On the morning of the 21st, according to the Nichi Nichi Shinbun's Peking correspondence, Baron Komura received the answer of the Chinese Plenipotentiaries to his series of proposals, but nothing is said as to the nature of the reply. The Asahi's correspondent, however, states that China's attitude towards the proposals is excellent and that a settlement may be anticipated without any difficulty or delay.

It is related that the Hunhuts have made their appearance in districts evacuated by the Japanese troops, and that they are plundering extensively. Postal communication has been rendered unsafe, and Sir Robert Hart has asked the Chinese Government to intrust Governor-General Chou to take effective steps.

It is now stated that the quantity of salt which the Chinese Government proposes to present gratis to Japan is 20 million catties. But this, of course, is a mere form. Japan wants salt. China does not wish to relax her legislation against the export of the article. Thus the pretext of a gift is resorted to, but Japan will naturally pay the proper price of the salt.

Thursday, November 23.

The news from Peking refers chiefly to entertainments—banquets and balls. These things are becoming more than ever essential adjuncts and instruments of diplomacy. Up to the afternoon of the 22nd instant the Foreign Office in Tokyo was not in receipt of information as to the day for the second meeting of the Plenipotentiaries having been fixed, but the Jiji Shimpō's correspondent wires that a conference was to take place on the afternoon of the 23rd instant.

The Hochi Shimbun's correspondent wires that the principal points on which the consent of China has hitherto been given are the posting of a Japanese Governor-General in Liaotung and the question of the Customs. It is, however, stated that Mr. Ku Fun-ki entertains views at variance with those of his colleagues and of the Japanese.

When a copy of the Japanese proposals was submitted to the Chinese Throne the Empress Dowager (Hochi Shimbun's correspondence) is said to have directed that the negotiations should be conducted on the basis of due regard for China's sovereignty and prestige, and that the terms should be conveyed to Governor-General Chou, who is well versed in the conditions that exist in Manchuria. The railway problem seems likely to cause some trouble, the Chinese Plenipotentiaries being inspired with the spirit of the time, which not only forbids China to grant any new railway concessions to foreigners, but also prompts her to recover those already granted.

It is stated that Tiehling will be opened on the 1st of December, and Changtu and Kaiyuan on the 10th of that month.

A Hankow dispatch reports that on the morning of Nov. 4th the premises of a large timber merchant in that port suddenly caught fire, which assisted by a high wind then blowing swept that part of the town nearly bare, no less than between four and five thousand houses being destroyed by the conflagration. A large number of lives are also said to have been lost.

News has been received in Shanghai, says the N.-C. Daily News, of the accidental drowning in the river Min at Foochow of Mr. William G. Littlejohns, paymaster of H. M. S. Hecla. It appears that a number of officers left Foochow at night in a steam-launch to return to Pagoda Anchorage, and when they arrived at the anchorage, Mr. Littlejohns was missing, and it was surmised that he must have fallen overboard unperceived. His body had not been found when the steamer left which brought the news.

The Nanfengpao of Shanghai, says that the Chinese commissioner sent to Formosa to study the Japanese management of the opium monopoly has returned, and the system is now to be adopted by China. H. E. Ko Feng-shih, who is in charge of the present taxation in eight provinces, and who is exceedingly unpopular with the Viceroy, has been denounced.

It is stated that the Waiwupu has asked the British Minister to fix a date for the cancelling of the Soochow-Hangchow-Ningpo railway concession.

The China Mail reports that attempts have been made to burn down the premises of the American Baptist Mission at Yingtak on the North River, and believes that all the American missionaries have been recalled from the interior of Kuangtung, and that a telegram has been sent to the members of the English Wesleyan Mission in Shikuan to return.

Prince Pu Lun has presented a scheme for the reorganisation of the Chinese navy; he proposes a central squadron to consist of the existing vessels, and to add seven battleships, two armoured cruisers, ten cruisers, nine gunboats, and fourteen destroyers, the money to be raised by a special fund. The Government has shelved the scheme on the ground that they have no suitable harbour to serve as a base for such a fleet.

On the arrival of the coolie steamer Katharine Park at Hongkong on the 9th, she reported the drowning by the capsizing of a boat, at Chinwangtao, of the chief officer and five European sailors. Signals were made from the steamer to the harbour tug to go to the boat's assistance, but the Captain of the tug is said to have declined on the plea that the sea was so heavy he was afraid of losing his vessel.

It is reported in mandarin circles in Shanghai that there is a rumour in Peking that several members of the Diplomatic Body have lately approached the Japanese and Russian Ministers about detailing certain vessels of their respective navies to clear the derelict mines from the gulf of Pechili and adjacent waters.

The Waiwupu, after consultation with Viceroy Tsên Ch'un-hsuen, of Canton, has notified Mr. Rockhill, the U. S. Minister in Peking, that the Chinese Government will decapitate the persons concerned in the Lienchow murders; severely punish the officials of Lienchow or their inability to give the necessary protection to the missionaries in their city; indemnify the Mission for things taken away by the mob; and reconstruct the hospital and other buildings that were destroyed. A reply is now awaited by the Waiwupu from Minister Rockhill.

Since the drawing up of the Trademark Regulations by the Board of Commerce, the different Ministers at Peking have, says the Nanfengpao, raised many objections against them. With the exception of the Japanese and Russian Ministers, all object to the Regulations on the ground that, according to the latter, any lawsuit, arising out of the trademark dispute, shall be tried, not by the Consul concerned in concert with the local authorities, but by the officials of the Office for the Registration of Trademarks, being thus directly in conflict with the existing powers of the various Consuls as magistrates. Their intention, therefore, is to present this point as a basis for refusing to recognise the whole of the said regulations.

The Russian Government desires to appoint Consuls at Fengtien, Liaoyang, Talienwan, and other places in Manchuria.

Viceroy Tsên has humorously suggested that as the official allowances made to Ministers of State appear to be too small to keep them incorrupt, Kuangtung province shall raise annually Tls. 100,000 to be distributed among the high officials in order that they may keep their hands clean.

Chang Yung, a Chinese Bannerman, or Hanchun, of Mukden, who was arrested on suspicion at Tientsin, on the charge of being connected with the bomb outrage of the 26th of September last, at the Machiapu Railway station, Peking, has been found guilty of being a member of a gang of revolutionaries and sentenced to imprisonment for life. Chang Yung, who is not quite thirty years of age, has been placed as an inmate of the Tientsin Industrial Reformatory, where he is to work out his sentence.

As a result of the late fire at Hankow, which is said to have destroyed over two thousand native houses, H. E. Viceroy Chang Chih-tung has issued instructions to have the fire area surveyed without delay for the laying out of two roads, one road leading to the New Wharf and the other to the Limen-gate of the Native City. This will be a great improvement for the traffic of the place.

It is reported in mandarin circles that Prince Ching recently went to the Grand Council Chamber and informed the Grand Councillors that their Majesties were so eager and earnest in their desire for every kind of reform that showed any prospect of strengthening and enriching the Empire that suggestions in these directions would be welcomed by their Majesties. Furthermore his Highness hoped that no one would feel any timidity in making suggestions to the Throne, for their Majesties had given out that unintentional breaches of etiquette or Court custom by any one proposing any new idea would not be visited by penalties as of yore, and it was hoped that this would be told to the whole country.

THE UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE.

His Excellency Mr. Lloyd Griscom left Japan on Sunday, nominally for a brief furlough but probably not to return unless he be hereafter accredited to the Mikado's Court as Ambassador. The generally accepted reason for his departure is somewhat complicated. It is believed that the late Secretary of State, Mr. John Hay, desired to have Mr. Griscom nominated as Assistant Secretary and that the President approved the nomination, whereupon another diplomat was chosen to succeed Mr. Griscom in Tokyo. Mr. Hay's death interrupted this programme, and his successor, Mr. Root, made his own nomination for Assistant Secretary, so that Mr. Griscom became for the moment virtually without office. This explanation is in part conjectural. It is not positively known, we believe, that any successor to Mr. Griscom has been actually chosen for Japan, and evidently there is a possibility, or even a probability, that a choice made when a legation only was in question may be altered when an embassy has to be filled. Perhaps too the simple explanation is that Mr. Griscom, feeling himself too young for an ambassadorial post, has resolved to anticipate his supersession by going on leave. Whatever be the truth, we fear that there is little hope of his speedy return to Tokyo, and his departure to-day thus becomes an event causing universal regret. The uniform feeling seems to be that not only has Mr. Griscom discharged his diplomatic duties with quite singular tact and ability, but also that he has won such a measure of popularity as never fell to the lot of any of his predecessors, not even excluding Judge Bingham, the late Colonel Buck and Mr. Edwin Dun. There is one thing to be said, of course, namely, that an American representative in Japan now-a-days inherits a large dower of popularity from the record of his Legation and from the mere fact of being American. But even though his career in Tokyo had not started with that advantage, Mr. Griscom's exceptional competence, his winning tact and his unequivocal sympathy with the nation to which he was accredited must have commanded success. During his comparatively brief stay in Tokyo he had to deal with many problems demanding delicate manipulation, and in not one instance could better results have been attained. That such an appreciation can be frankly penned of a man little over thirty years of age is certainly remarkable, and there can be no hesitation in predicting that the long career which lies before this brilliant official will be marked by large achievements with their corresponding rewards. Not an unimportant contributor to the brilliancy of his success is the beautiful and gifted lady who bears his name. Her graceful presence and sunny disposition have lent to the generous hospitality of the United States Legation a charm otherwise quite unattainable, and her departure from Tokyo will be a sensible loss to the society of the capital. We can only wish that fortune may be so kind as soon to restore Mr. and Mrs. Griscom to a scene where they have shown themselves so capable of serving their country's highest interests.

His Excellency the United States Minister and Mrs. Griscom left Tokyo by the 10 a.m. train on the 18th instant. A very large number of Japanese and foreign ladies and gentlemen assembled to bid farewell to these eminently popular Americans, the extent of the esteem in which they are held being evidenced by the composition of the crowd, which included representatives not only of all nationalities but also of all classes and professions. It is doubtful whether the departure of any foreigners from Shimabashi ever elicited a warmer testimony of affection and regret. We express a universally entertained sentiment when we say that few years may elapse before Mr.

Griscom's return to Tokyo in the capacity of Ambassador.

FAREWELL RECEPTION AT YOKOHAMA.

A farewell reception took place from eleven o'clock to noon at the American Consulate-General, Yokohama, where many Americans met to wish bon voyage to Mr. and Mrs. Griscom. Two large American flags were crossed over the private entrance to the Consulate-General and the rooms were decorated with the Stars and Stripes and with flowers and foliage.

Mr. H. B. Miller, Consul-General, and Mrs. Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Scidmore did the honours, and Mr. N. F. Smith, President of the American Asiatic Society of Japan, in an eloquent speech presented to Mr. Griscom an artistically illuminated address which had been prepared and signed by the members as a mark of their esteem for him and of their regret at his departure. The address was enclosed in a silver box of bamboo design elaborately and beautifully fashioned. Mr. Griscom, in a few feeling words, acknowledged the compliment. Mr. Miller, Consul-General, then briefly but in well-chosen words asked Mrs. Griscom's acceptance of a handsome silver vase on a carved pedestal, filled with violets. Mrs. Griscom smilingly and with evident pleasure accepted the gift. Cordial handshaking followed, all joining heartily and sincerely in wishing the departing Minister and Mrs. Griscom a safe and pleasant voyage, and giving expression to regret because of their leaving.

The Illuminated Address ran:—

To His Excellency LLOYD C. GRISCOM,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister
Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Japan.

SIR,—We, the undersigned members of the American Asiatic Association of Japan, on the eve of your departure for America, deem it but fitting that you should bear with you this small tribute recording our great respect for you as our Minister, our admiration for your sterling qualities as a man, and our deep appreciation of you as a friend.

During your administration of the American Legation at Tokyo, which has covered the most critical period in Japan's history, we have been witnesses to the able and faithful manner in which you have discharged the duties incumbent upon your high office, which has not only won you the well-deserved commendation of your fellow-countrymen but also the unbounded respect and confidence of the government to which you were accredited. We therefore have learnt to regard you with pride as embodying the higher types of American personality and as eminently qualified to represent the great Republic which is our home.

This testimonial is but a small token of the measure of our esteem, added to which, we beg to express our most fervent wishes that the future has both happiness and prosperity in store for you, and we emphasise the hope that it may be our privilege in the near future to welcome you back to the "Land of the Rising Sun" as our Ambassador.

Yokohama, Nov. 18th, 1905.

The Address was signed by Mr. N. F. Smith, President; Mr. B. C. Howard, Vice-President; Mr. George H. Scidmore, Secretary of the American Asiatic Association; and by a large number of members.

Mr. and Mrs. Griscom left Yokohama by the P. M. steamer Manchuria on Sunday. Mrs. Griscom's state room, and the dining salon were turned into regular bowers of flowers with the profusion of bouquets and floral baskets given her by her friends as last gifts from the land of Japan.

AN UNFORTUNATE MISUNDERSTANDING.

From the columns of the Fiji Shimpō we gather that publicity has been given to an unfortunate misunderstanding which remains to this day inexplicable and which seems to have caused some umbrage to Sir John See, though when we say that the cause of offence is a supposed act of rudeness on the part of the Japanese it will be at once understood that a misconception must be responsible, for in all their intercourse with foreigners the record of the Japanese has been distinguished by perfect courtesy. The Fiji does not comment on the incident. It merely prints two statements, one attributed to Sir John See, the other to Mr. Kondo Rempai, President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. Sir John says that at the reception in the Foreign Office on the 3rd of November he was introduced by Admiral Kamimura to Mr. Kondo, whereupon the latter, after the usual greetings, stated that the Directors of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha were about to give a banquet to Admiral Togo and his brother Admirals in the Imperial Hotel on the following day, and that they desired the pleasure of Sir John See's presence, promising to place him in the seat of honour on Mr. Kondo's right hand. Sir John gladly accepted, and was therefore not a little astounded and offended when he subsequently received an intimation that there being a difficulty in finding a seat for him, the invitation must be withdrawn. This treatment he describes as very rude, and so it would be if the circumstances described by Sir John were accurate. But Mr. Kondo, approached by a member of the Fiji Shimpō's staff, gives an account which greatly alters the complexion of the affair. He says, in the first place, that he had not thought of inviting Sir John See to the banquet, for the reason that hosts and guests consisted of Japanese alone and that no foreigners whatever were to be included. It was Sir John himself who, on being introduced to Mr. Kondo, alluded to the banquet, of which he had heard, and asked to be included among the invités. Mr. Kondo's reply was what might have been expected from an eminently courteous Japanese. He did not refuse point blank, as he might easily and conveniently have done by merely explaining that no foreigners were to be hidden to the banquet. A refusal on such grounds might possibly have been construed as impolite. He therefore replied that nothing could give him greater pleasure than to welcome Sir John to the dinner, but that he must first consult Admirals Togo and Kamimura, and subsequently ascertain whether a convenient arrangement of seats could be made. The Admirals, on being consulted, were of course agreeable, but then arose the question of how to place the ex-Premier of Australia. The President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha would have liked to give him the seat of honour, not only on account of the high office he had formerly filled, but also because the Japanese custom is to extend the utmost consideration to strangers. But the guests of the evening were the Japanese Admirals. For them the banquet had been prepared, and it would have altered the whole character of the entertainment had a foreigner been brought in at the eleventh hour and given the position of leading guest. Under these circumstances nothing remained but to send a polite message to Sir John See, explaining the difficulty, and expressing a hope that he and his daughters would join the party after dinner and witness the amusements provided for the occasion. That is what was done, and by what miscarriage the procedure assumed a discourteous aspect in Sir John See's eyes, we do not gather. Certainly no one acquainted with the Japanese in general and with Mr. Kondo Rempai in particular, can imagine for an instant that anything intended to be discourteous or reasonably construable as discourteous was deliberately done. It is indeed stated that Mr. Kondo Rempai had planned a special banquet in his own house at which Sir John See would have been the chief guest and the Japanese Admirals would have welcomed him; but owing to the above unfortunate contretemps Sir John left Tokyo without seeing anything more of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's President. The cause of the misunderstanding is, as we have said, quite obscure, but we understand that great regret is felt in Japan, where it is particularly painful to think that any impression of discourtesy has been conveyed, especially in the case of a visitor whom there was every desire and every reason to treat with the utmost hospitality.

DR. BAELZ AND THE "NEW YORK TIMES."

In our correspondence columns will be found a letter from Dr. Baelz emphatically repudiating the statements attributed to him some time ago by the New York Times. These statements appeared among the usual telegraphic despatches in our columns, and though we never for our own part attached any credence to them or supposed that persons acquainted with Dr. Baelz could attach any credence to them, the general public were not in a position to discriminate, and Dr. Baelz is consequently well advised when he makes this most uncompromising disavowal. He says that the whole of the New York Times's allegation "from the first to the last word is a baseless and impertinent fraud." The trouble is that such frauds are becoming quite a common feature of up-to-date journalism. Correspondents of sensational and semi-sensational newspapers do not hesitate for a moment to manufacture tales out of whole cloth and send them to the journals they represent. It becomes almost comical in this context to read the charges of mendacity preferred occasionally by some foreign critics against the Japanese. The fact is that Europe and America can give the Japanese many points in the art of artistic and literary lying. Here is a case of a gentleman of the highest repute who, since his return to Europe from Japan, "has never talked to a reporter of the New York Times or of any other newspaper," yet a Berlin reporter deliberately invents and puts into his mouth a statement of the most striking character and eminently calculated to bring upon Dr. Baelz the odium of his nationals. There is nothing to be said of such a reporter except that he is a criminal liar and that he ought to be walking a treadmill instead of penning falsehoods to American newspapers. The trouble of the thing is that these lies stick. They are not like the Scotch "flea in the wall." For one person that reads and is persuaded by Dr. Baelz's denial, half-a-dozen will have read and been persuaded by the Berlin reporter's unscrupulous lie, and thus a gross falsehood will have done duty for a clever piece of reporting. One does not see where the remedy may be found. Will the New York Times strike the name of this reporter with ignominy off its list of correspondents and employees? Not a bit of it. He will be considered to have done a smart stroke of work, and if he was "mistaken" in his facts, the "interest" of his telegram will cover the whole sin. That is the way of it. Dr. Baelz has been the victim this time. It will be somebody else next time, and so the villainous system of fraudulent journalism will flourish and prosper. It is a fine product of civilization.

Mr. Ishii, President of the Kyoto District Court, who was recently promoted to succeed Mr. Watanabe, President of the Yokohama District Court, arrived in Yokohama by the 8 a.m. train on Thursday.

GARDEN PARTIES IN TOKYO.

The garden parties given in the spring and autumn by Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda in the beautiful park of their Azabu residence have come to be counted among the most fashionable and the most popular fetes in Tokyo. On the 16th instant the weather was peculiarly favourable; a fine sunny day sandwiched between a predecessor of gloom and a successor of heavy rain. The park looked most attractive in its autumnal garments of, bright tints. Some of the great people of Tokyo were absent from the capital in the Emperor's suite, but with their exception all the notables appeared among the guests, including Admiral Togo and his brother commanders. A very interesting feature of the entertainment was the singing of a naval war song by the little children, boys and girls, of the Shirokane Primary School, who were duly marshalled for the purpose. The Admirals placed themselves before the line of lads and lasses and were received as a preface to the song by several rounds of banzais given most vigorously in the clear treble of the sweet young voices. It was easy to see that the distinguished officers were profoundly pleased by this ovation. They treated it with a combination of gravity and kindness which exactly suited the occasion, and it must be confessed that the benignity which is a prominent characteristic of Admiral Togo's countenance seemed perfectly compatible with this greeting from representatives of the infant world. One finds difficulty, indeed, in reading into that particularly sweet face any indications of the might in battle that has made him one of the most renowned naval captains of all ages. The Yokosuka naval band played at intervals throughout the afternoon and a sumptuous cold collation was served partly in the open air and partly under marquees. At the close of the entertainment the students of the Jishusha (Count Inouye's school) entered the park, moving to the music of a stirring march, and after cheering lustily, raised Admiral Togo and Mr. Sonoda shoulder high and carried them round in triumph. Altogether a more enjoyable party has seldom been given in Tokyo.

The Chrysanthemum party given every autumn by the Minister of State for Finance was held on the 20th instant at Baron Sone's official residence in most delightful weather—calm, bright and balmy. A great variety of very beautiful flowers were shown, the main part being ranged in pots within the salons and only a small portion under mat sheds in the garden. Japanese gardeners pursue a different ideal from that which their English confreres propose to themselves. The latter aim chiefly at size and magnificence of blossom, but the former attach scarcely any importance to such features, their object being rather to cultivate flowers of curious shape, colour and character. It is an absolute essential in Japan that a fleecy curly-petalled aspect should be present. Without it a chrysanthemum is counted common-place and vulgar. Many cunning devices are employed to develop these characteristics, and the result is an enormous variety of flowers some of which look almost artificial so strange is the structure of the blossom, while others are scarcely recognisable as chrysanthemums. At Baron Sone's party the attention of such guests as possessed any title to connoisseurship was mainly concentrated on a collection of cut flowers ranged in the southern salon. Each blossom represented the chef d'œuvre of a particular cultivator, and the series thus assumed a competitive character, constituting one of the most remarkable assemblages of chrysanthemums ever brought together. An idea of the extent to which the art of cultivation is carried in Japan may be gathered from the fact that among the great multitude of flowers claiming any title to distinction, there is not one without its own special name. About thirteen hundred guests responded to Baron Sone's invitation and the party was altogether eminently successful.

THE CASE OF THE "NEGRETIA."

The Court of Appeal has given judgment in the case of the British steamer Negretia whose seizure by the war-ship Tsushima in Tsushima straits on the 19th of December, 1904, caused considerable interest, inasmuch as her liability to confiscation arose from carrying contraband persons not contraband goods. She had been chartered by a Russian subject Alexander Selbrenik (?) and her cargo consisted of 70,000 cases of kerosene oil. These facts would not necessarily have incriminated her, but when her captors examined her they found on board Lieut. Commander Paul Mikhailovitch Buren, of the Russian destroyer Rastropin, which, it will be remembered, left Port Arthur and running into Chefoo, was there sunk by her crew. This officer was travelling as a German under the assumed name of Frederick Pilsena(?). The ship carried also Second Lieutenant Sheverioff, belonging to the same destroyer, who called himself Ivan Gorshaluket(?), a German, and Serge Poletik, another Russian. Sheverioff claimed to be a clerk and Poletik to be the supercargo. These officers were in reality attempting to effect their escape to Vladivostok and the cargo was their property. In view of these facts the Sasebo prize court, on the 17th of April, declared the ship lawful prize of war. An appeal was lodged which, after careful hearing, was rejected on the 2nd instant, the sentence of the lower tribunal being confirmed.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

In September and early October Mr. W. T. Stead paid a visit to Russia, a country of which he has always constituted himself in some sort a champion. One of the results of his visit was a remarkable letter to The Times, in which he ventured to formulate opinions which are thus epitomized by The Times—

In the long letter from Moscow which we publish to-day Mr. Stead appears as a prophet and more than a prophet, for he disdains the ambiguities and the equivocations in which political seers too often seek a dubious security. He foretells smooth things with an intrepidity of conviction which, we imagine, may cause some amazement in St. Petersburg and more in Moscow, not unmingled possibly with amusement. He is quite confident that the extremely grave and complex domestic crisis, which lowers over Russia, will be quickly and easily solved, and he is not less confident that he knows how the solution will be wrought. It is all quite simple. The one thing needful is the "emancipation of the Tsar"—his emancipation, that is, from the toils of the bureaucracy who keep him chained day and night to the administrative machine, and separated and estranged from his loving subjects. The emancipation, we are given to understand, is at the doors. Once a freely elected Duma comes together, the bonds will drop from the limbs of the liberated autocrat. For the first time in his reign, he and his people will see each other face to face, and there will be many pleasant surprises upon both sides. Mr. Stead confesses that there are sceptics even amongst the Reformers, who jeer at the notion that the breach between the Throne and the people can be so lightly healed, but he scorns their little faith.

Needless to say, The Times did not for one instant endorse these pleasant predictions. It adhered to its habitually cominuous views of the immediate outlook in the distraught empire. How singularly events have justified The Times and confounded Mr. W. T. Stead! It may well be doubted whether there exists any recorded instance of such a very flagrant error of vaticination by a prominent publicist. Mr. Stead's judgment as to Russia and things Russian most now be pronounced ludicrously fallacious, and since he has always posed as an almost unique authority on that subject, as on many others, the faith of his followers must now receive a rude shock.

The movement in favour of abolishing the system of Metropolitan Police in Tokyo gathers force. Meetings are being held to promote that object, and it will evidently become one of the burning questions of the near future. The citizens of Tokyo desire to have their police system placed on the same basis as that of all other Japanese cities, but the Government has always maintained that a special system is necessary.

It is confidently affirmed that arrangements have been virtually concluded for floating a new Japanese loan of 50 millions sterling. Paris is said to have taken 30 millions and London and New York the remainder. The terms are said to be 4 per cent. at 90. As to the manner of disposing of this money there is much doubt. The general belief seems to be that a great part of the proceeds will be devoted to consolidation purposes, but against this theory has to be set the fact that none of the debts contracted abroad by Japan during the war matures for redemption before 1907, and it would be very doubtful economy for the Government to undertake the enterprise of redeeming by purchase at the high rates now ruling in Europe and America. Apparently, however, some idea is entertained in Europe that such is Japan's purpose, for quotations for her securities have suddenly taken an upward leap not easily accounted for on any other hypothesis. If the Treasury intends to deal with domestic debts bearing high rates of interest, the situation would be easily comprehensible, for the service of these latter is not governed by restrictions of the nature existing in the case of the country's foreign loans. On the other hand this device of redeeming high-interest home debts with low-interest foreign money is not approved in some quarters. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun condemned it some time ago, and the Jiji Shimpō now takes virtually the same line, namely, that any large redemption of domestic bonds at this moment of national elation would certainly encourage speculative enterprises, raise the price of commodities and encourage imports to a dangerous extent. It is evident, however, that all the critics labour under the disadvantage of being without any intimate knowledge of the Treasury's plans; they are obliged to argue on a foundation of guess-work.

It is announced that a step of official rank has been granted to Kamo Mabuchi and Motoori Norinaga, in connexion with the Emperor's visit to Yamada in Ise. These are two of the great trio of Japanese Koku-gaku-sha, the third being Kada Azuma Maro. Mabuchi died in 1769 and Motoori in 1801. Both were raised to the First Grade of the Fourth Rank in 1883, and they are now raised to the Second Grade of the Third Rank.

The Government has released from public service the following vessels, namely, the auxiliary cruisers Nikko Maru, Kasuga Maru, Kumano Maru, Taichu Maru, Tainan Maru, Yawata Maru, Nippon Maru and Hongkong Maru; and the hospital ships Kobe Maru and Saikyo Maru.

An incident has just occurred which seems to indicate that the Russians adhered to their destructive methods of warfare up to the very end. On the 7th of October they sunk the little sailing schooner Ryoun Maru at a point 6 nautical leagues off the coast of the Maritime Province. The vessel had no contraband of any kind on board: she was laden with salmon and salt. Indeed the Russians—they were cruising in the Volunteer Fleet's steamer Yakodo—appear to have made no quest whatever for contraband. They signalled the schooner to stop, ordered her crew of 30 men to transfer themselves to the Yakodo, and at once set fire to the Ryoun, which they left burning, and shaped their course for Imperatorsky. The Japanese were closely confined on board the Yakodo, armed sentries being placed over them. From Imperatorsky the Yakodo steamed to Vladivostock, and there, for the first time, the master of the Ryoun, on the 25th of October, was questioned about his ship, her cargo and her value. He and his men were still kept in confinement and not until the 13th of November were they allowed to proceed to Japan by the Arcadia. It is true that the notifications of the peace treaty did not take place until October 16th, but the conclusion of the treaty had been effected more than a month previously and the Russians might at least have refrained from their barbarous habit of destroying private property. When it is observed that the Japanese released no less than 6 steamers which had been seized by their cruisers subsequently to the conclusion of the convention (Sept. 5th), the contrast between their method of warfare and that of the Russians seems very flagrant.

Miss Roosevelt was naturally the cynosure of all eyes on her arrival at San Francisco after her trip in the Far East, and had to submit to the inevitable interview. This is what she is supposed to have said:—

"You may say for me, that I am more than ever convinced that there is no country like our own. The things that I have seen on this trip have been very interesting, of course, and instructive as well. We were everywhere shown every attention and courtesy, and not a single disagreeable incident marred our pleasure. The gifts with which I was presented in the various places we visited I accepted as a compliment to my country, and not in the nature of a personal tribute to myself. Please deny for me, however, that they represent any such value or are of the fabulous character reported in the newspapers. There is also absolutely no foundation for the absurd story that I took a dive into a tank on board ship with all my ordinary clothing on the result of a date with Congressman Longworth. Neither did I receive an offer of marriage from the Sultan of Sulu. The circulation of such nonsensical stories is the only outcome of my whole trip that I have to regret. I have had an exceptionally enjoyable time from its very inception, and have been in the best of health and spirits throughout. I am going directly to the White House."

Another of the destroyers included in the last naval-increment programme, the Yugure (375 tons) was launched at Sasebo on the 17th instant. Another, the Wakaba, will be launched at Yokosuka on the 25th.

There appears to be much difficulty in dealing with the horses and cattle released by the Russians in south Saghalien. Some 3,000 of these animals are said to be wandering about without any shelter, and it is plain that they must all perish if exposed to the rigours of winter. The Japanese authorities issued a proclamation promising that if any one caught the animals and brought them to appointed places, public sales would be held and one half of the proceeds should go to the captors. This led to the arrival of numerous horses and cattle at the nominated localities, but no adequate means of dealing with them were available and the quandary became more acute than ever. Finally they had to be restored to their captors, and these, having no means of keeping them, set them loose again. Numbers are already perishing. We read that the Authorities, by strenuous exertions, hope to be able to save about a thousand of the best.

The organization of the Consolidation Office of Special National Debts has now been officially announced. It is to discharge duties connected with the consolidation of the special national debts under the superintendence of the Minister of State for Finance. There will be a chief of chokunin rank, 2 secretaries of somin rank and 25 hannin employees.

There is also to be a Council for the Consolidation of Special National Debts. It will consist of the president and 5 members, over-seen by the Minister of Finance, who will be president, the members being the Vice-Minister of Finance, the Chief of the Accounts Bureau in the Finance Department, the Chief of the Bureau of Economics, the Chief of the Consolidation Office and the President of the Bank of Japan, with two Secretaries. Extraordinary members may be appointed if necessary.

On the 20th instant the Red Cross Society of Japan held its thirteenth general meeting in Ueno Park. How many were present it is not possible to estimate, but there were 109,500 applications for invitations, and as the day was exceptionally fine at least half of that number probably attended. The Empress, having a cold, was unable to be present, and Her Imperial Highness Princess Higashi-Fushimi officiated in Her Majesty's stead. We read in the Kokumin Shinbun that the Red Cross Society of Japan has now a membership of 113,721 and that its capital fund amounts to 5,200,000 yen. During the war it expended a sum of 4,400,000 yen. It had two hospital ships in constant use, the Hakuai Maru and the Kosui Maru, and it employed 78 bands of nurses in Japan, sending 32 others to the front, 38 to the Army hospitals, one to the medical stores department, and one to the sick transport corps, making 150 in all, besides which the Society organized extraordinary nursing stations at 13 places, the total number of nurses being 5,200. By these nurses 821,239 patients were tended—this number includes, of course, re-admissions to hospitals as well as original admissions—and among them were 25,593 prisoners. It is a very fine record and the Society may justly be proud of it.

It appears that some 2,000 Japanese subjects who are held prisoners in Russia in Europe, will be handed over in the middle of December. Lieut.-Colonel Oi, Military Attaché of the Japanese Legation in Berlin, will take them over. Nothing has yet been said about the prisoners held by Russia outside Europe, namely, in Harbin.

We have received further letters of thanks from recipients of the sum subscribed by foreign residents for the families of the sufferers in the Kinjo Maru disaster. The writers are Mr. Sekiya Katsuei, of Imagawa Koji in Tokyo, whose son Seiichi, a second-class surgeon, was among the sufferers; Mr.

Izumimoto Tsunesaburo, of Yehime Prefecture, whose son Yokichi, a first-class private of artillery, lost his life; and from Mrs. Kameda of Hakodate who lost her husband in the catastrophe.

Japanese papers relate a curious incident at Nagasaki. We can not exactly discern the facts. What is stated is that a passenger of an American steamer insulted a Russian Colonel in the Nagasaki hotel, and a personal encounter was with difficulty prevented by the intervention of the Hotel officials. The American is said to have seized a chair as a weapon of assault. That evening a mixed group of Americans and Russians, some 30 in number, assembled outside the Hotel and seemed disposed to come to blows, but the Japanese police were on the alert, and nothing occurred.

The Prince Imperial is to leave Tokyo on the 25th instant for the Shrines of Ise. His Imperial Highness will devote only one day, the 27th, to the ceremony of worship, and will return to Tokyo on the 29th.

A NEW GEOGRAPHY OF JAPAN.

Mr. C. B. Bruce-Mitford, head master of the Yokohama Modern School, has done good service to the scholastic world in compiling "A New Geography of Japan, for the upper forms of schools and colleges." The book, which is supplied with maps, illustrations and historical notes, is printed by the Japan Gazette office and is a very creditable piece of printer's work. In a foreword the Publishers say:—

The place which Japan has lately won among the nations, and the special relation which exists between the Island Empire of the East and that of the West, calls for a fuller description of the country and its people than has yet appeared in educational textbooks. This is the immediate occasion of the "New Geography of Japan."

The text is based upon the works of the most reliable authorities, and is designed to possess sufficient definiteness and readableness to serve both the purpose of the student and the examination room, and that of the general reading public."

More than the usual amount of space has been devoted to the Physiography of the Main Islands and to those natural phenomena—the manifestations of internal force—which render the Geography of Japan of special interest. In this respect the illustrations, the majority of which are from original photographs, will enhance the value of the book.

This new geography should appeal to a wider field than that comprised within the four walls of schools and classrooms, for it has gathered within its covers much information to seek which the reader and inquirer had, previous to its appearance, to turn to many, and in some cases costly, books. The beautiful illustrations which are freely introduced, will also attract more than passing interest. Altogether the book deserves a wide circulation.

KOREA.

IN the absence of any official statement it is not possible to speak with certainty, but we may fairly conclude that the Korean problem has been at length solved. The arrangement appears to be very simple, namely, the transfer of the country's foreign affairs to Japanese management and the establishment of a Japanese controller-general in Seoul with subordinates at all the open ports. Thus on the whole Korea may be said to have become a dependency of Japan and to have been brought under a system very similar to that of Annam vis-à-vis France. There is said to be in the convention a clause which guarantees the "dignity and prestige"—such is the full significance of the ideographs used—of the Imperial House, but obviously this condition would not be violated though the EMPEROR were relegated to the place occupied by KING THANH THAI in Hue or the KHEIVIE ABBAS HILMI in Cairo. It is not to be supposed that the SOVEREIGN and his Ministers were readily induced to accede to this arrangement. In the first place they can scarcely have understood it, and they certainly would never have understood it had not an exponent so able, patient and authoritative as Marquis Ito been on the spot to offer explanations. In the second place, whatever tinsel was used to gild the pill, it must have seemed a very disagreeable dose; for a country that receives an alien, in the capacity of controller-general and has to surrender the direction of its foreign politics to alien hands, necessarily feels that much of the substance of independence has been taken from it. Even to outsiders the spectacle does not wear an agreeable aspect. A certain sense of outrage is provoked by the sight of a little State being compelled to surrender a part of its autonomy. But from the point of view of international expediency no event more fortunate has occurred in the Far East since the opening of Japan. Korea during the past twenty-five years has been the storm-centre of the Orient. In the affairs of the peninsula may be found the proximate cause of almost every complication involving Japan throughout that interval. Korea has been responsible for two great wars fought by Japan and assuredly she would be responsible for a third were she left to her own devices. Her people may have many excellent qualities, but they have not the faculty of self-government. They appear to imagine that the chief use of independence is to intrigue, and the fact that intrigue must endanger their independence seems to be entirely hidden from them. It is fair to say that no European Power circumstanced as Japan is would have dealt with the Korean problem so delicately and so patiently as she has done. We are very sure that England, had she been in Japan's place, would have reduced the peninsula to a second Egypt years ago and very wise she would have been to do so. But, as has often been remarked, this country has to live up to a standard which is not used to measure the acts of States that enjoy the sanction of a Christian reputation. The Tokyo statesmen have been obliged to move with exceeding circumspection and it does great credit to their tact and astuteness that they have been able to find a safe exit from the Korean labyrinth. A leading Tokyo journal recently wrote in an almost contemptuous strain of its country's diplomacy. But in what annals are any errors recorded against Japan's diplomacy? Is it not true, on the contrary, that from all her complications with Western States she has emerged at least without loss. This Korean problem itself is a conspicuous example: To obtain the acquiescence of the peninsular SOVEREIGN and his Ministers to any administrative arrangement was not a signal feat for a Power possessing Japan's potentialities. But to obtain the acquiescence of Western States to an arrangement such as has now been made, is unquestionably a diplomatic triumph that would not have been thought possible a few years ago. Negotiations and pourparlers to that end must have preceded the final conference in Seoul, and these preliminaries were evidently managed with not less judgment than the final coup. All lovers of peace and of human happiness must heartily welcome a consummation which finally terminates the mischievous potentialities of Korean intrigue and ineptitude, and adds the Korean nation to the list of prosperously progressive peoples.

CIVILIZED WAR.

THE German General Staff recently issued a pamphlet entitled "The Usages of War in Land Warfare." Colonel PICQUART received it, and the Paris correspondent of The Times, writing under date of October 6th, gives the following epitome of PICQUART's synopsis:—

This publication of the German General Staff admits the legitimacy of shooting prisoners of war, not merely in case of rebellion, attempts to escape, &c., but also as a measure of reprisal, either in retaliation for a practice of the same sort or when the enemy indulges in other excesses. Secondly, it sanctions the shooting of prisoners in pressing circumstances when it is impossible to feed or keep them without compromising one's own security. The author, however, thinks that the latter case is not likely to arise in the future, owing to the facility with which European armies can be provisioned and the prisoners removed. Colonel Picquart comments on the admission of this principle as follows:—"Any one with a little experience of war and even of life will readily admit that a very dangerous weapon is thus put into the hands of a chief wanting in sang-froid or in scrupulousness. Moreover, this principle is a flagrant violation of the suggestions adopted at The Hague." Another "utterly revolting" principle admitted, says Colonel Picquart, by the German General Staff in direct contradiction with The Hague Conventions, is that which lays down that a person who is not even a belligerent may be forced to give information as to the troops of his own country and as to their movements and their military secrets. The Prussian General Staff admits that this system is condemned by the majority of authors, but declares that the exigencies of war will often render it necessary. The book, however, does not indicate the means of coercion that are to be employed. In presence of this omission, the young officers, suggests Colonel Picquart, will have recourse to military history, and naturally will not forget the lessons of the Great Frederick, who in Article 12 of his "General Principles of War" relates cynically the method employed by him at the camp of Chlum to obtain information.

During the delirium of battle or in the presence of bloodshed and mutilations men frequently break away from all the restraints of humanity and revert to a state of elementary savagery. Experience seems to indicate that such things are inevitable. But it is a novel shock to find the German General Staff laying down in cold blood such precepts as the above. It was in Germany, we recall, that the hardest things were said and written about England's conduct in the South-African campaign—most unjustly said and most unjustly written. Not in Germany, therefore, does one expect to find the highest sanction given to these terrible methods of conducting warfare. It will be argued, of course, that in war alone does the principle hold good, "the end justifies the means." There is much truth in the plea, and we have no doubt that it weighed with the compilers of "The Usages of War" against the dictates of their humane sentiments. But is the justification sufficient? We can not think that under any circumstances whatever it is permissible to subject non-combatants to torture in order to extract from them information tending to the slaughter of their countrymen and the destruction of their country. Every instinct of humanity rebels against such a notion. The great authority of German Generals and the fine civilization of the German nation tend largely to disarm criticism of any doctrines deliberately enunciated by German Authorities. None the less this treatment of non-combatants is wholly revolting and even German sanction can not blind the civilized world to the true character of such acts. Where is the line to be drawn? If non-combatants are properly subject to treatment of the kind indicated, then women and children are subject to it. There is no limit. Once admit so terrible a doctrine and discrimination in its practice ceases to be possible. The shooting of prisoners by way of reprisal for an enemy's excesses is less abominable but it is bad enough in all conscience. How would such a principle have worked in the recent war, where numerous instances occurred of the mutilation and murder of wounded Japanese by the Russians? Marshal OYAMA, according to "The Usages of War" would have been justified in ordering the fusillade of all the Russian prisoners then in his hands, and Admiral KAMIMURA would have been justified in abandoning to their fate the officers and men of the Rurik who, a short time previously, had been engaged in the wanton slaughter of Japanese non-combatants and helpless combatants. Japan adopted a very different canon of conduct, and nothing in the whole campaign on sea and on land stands so strongly to her credit. Imagine what an outcry there would have been in Europe and America, nay above all—to their honour be it said—among the Germans themselves, had she behaved in accordance with the dicta of this new German manual, and imagine what the world would say had such a collection of precepts emanated from the Japanese General Staff.

A PREP AT ENGLISH LIFE AFTER XXII. YEARS' ABSENCE.

(CONTRIBUTED.)

Perhaps the truest of all the descriptions that have been penned concerning the English people is that which represents them as devoted to two things—business and sport. The notion that the love of sport is confined to the leisured classes is not borne out by facts. The number of Birmingham mechanics who spend their Sundays in fishing all through the summer is astonishingly large. Some of these crowd the Sunday trains, but there are others who trudge through Saturday night to the bank of some distant river and begin to fish at 4 on Sunday morning, keeping at it till dark, and not reaching their homes till Monday morning. One has only to listen to the conversation of railway passengers to perceive how great a part in English life devotion to sport plays. The amount of toil and apparent inconvenience and hardship men and women in England will go through for a few hours recreation is perfectly marvellous. Those who neglect business, however, for the sake of play, are very few. The competition and rush of modern life demand the most assiduous application of the mind to business during business hours, but once out of office the business man usually banishes all its cares and enters into his pleasures with the most thorough abandon. It is a love of physical exercise and fresh air in all weathers and all seasons of the year that keeps the inhabitants of our big English towns in a state of remarkable "fitness." Everywhere one sees evidences that as a nation the Gospel of Englishmen and Englishwomen is a Gospel of Energy. Walking, riding, rowing, and swimming feats attract more attention in England than in any other European country.

Railway travelling in England, with very few exceptions, is no cheaper than it was 25 years ago. Nor are the carriages more comfortable. The prejudice of the English against corridor carriages astonishes continentals. The number of murders which the English system of separate, locked carriages has rendered possible is now so large and the last case recorded, that of the cruel butchery of Miss Money in Merstham tunnel in September last, created such a sensation throughout Great Britain that it looks as though the use of the old-fashioned carriages with their locked doors would no longer be permitted. It is a fact that one of the great English Railway Companies (the Great Western) has rescinded all its orders for such carriages. It is not, however, as some people seem to suppose, the privacy of these carriages that has rendered them so popular, but the ventilation of which they are capable as compared with certain corridor carriages. As regards ventilation the carriages in use in Germany, France and Switzerland differ greatly, some having magnificently large windows and others very small inadequate ones. Continental travellers usually dislike fresh air and huddle together at night with closed windows in a manner that to an Englishman is most offensive. The corridor carriages in use in England are not so well ventilated and certainly not so well lighted in the day time as the old-fashioned cars and for this reason not a few men stand in the passages for hours together rather than enter the stuffy carriages.

London is a world in itself and a fascinating world too to the student of English life. The tremendous bustle during the business part of the day and the pleasure-seeking hours of the night have great charms for active-minded people, and we can quite understand their getting to think that life out of London for any length of time is comparatively mere existence. All attempts to deal with the ever growing traffic of the world's great metropolis seems to be doomed to failure. The buses, the trains, the river boats are all alike overcrowded at certain hours of the day. As regards land traffic it becomes congested between 7.30 and 9.30 in the morning and between 4.30 and 6.30 p.m., when people are going to and returning from business and between 11 and 12 at night, when people crowd out of the theatres and other places of amusement in such numbers that some have to wait a whole hour for a seat on a bus. Notwithstanding the numerous new electric trains the District Railway Company has put on, the daily overcrowding of the cars is still something tremendous. Cases of 30 and 40 persons standing in one car are quite common, and one often sees as many as 20 ladies standing. The company seems to expect this kind of thing, for in each car that has a seating accommodation for 48 persons there are 72 leather straps, 36 on each side, placed about a foot apart, hanging from the roof for the use of people standing. The Daily Mail recently reported a case of 61 passengers standing in one car. The Tube Railway from Shepherd's Bush to the City is equally crowded at certain hours of the day. The motor buses now so popular in certain parts of London have not yet been run through a winter and it is confidently predicted by certain people that the rubber tires now in use on these buses will slip about so much in the frosty weather as to render these vehicles quite uncontrollable. In connection with this it is a significant fact that that gigantic concern the General Omnibus Company of London still holds on to its horse buses. It has made preparations for the big change to motors should the experiments now being tried by a rival company, the Vanguard, of running motor buses through an English winter be successful. When it is remembered that the General Omnibus Company own no less than eighteen hundred thousand horses, which by growing their own stuff they keep at 8d. a day per head, and that for each of these horses they are paid half a guinea a year by the Government on the condition that in case of necessity they may be all commandeered for military service, the Company's caution in making a sweeping change is seen to be natural. The Vanguard Company horse and motor buses run through the streets with the English flag flying. This is their way of drawing attention to the fact that many of the early shareholders of the General Omnibus Company were Frenchmen. That Company, however, is entirely managed by Englishmen and is as English as the Vanguard Company. Its capital is so enormous that it will certainly swamp the Vanguard Company if it decides to adopt the motor bus. It is said that in order to have a certain number of horses to fall back on in time of war, and for other reasons the use of horse buses within a radius of 3 miles from the centre of the city will be enforced by the Government. Private motor cars are by no means less expensive than horse carriages. Doctors now use them very extensively on account of their speed, but a doctor with a large practice in Birmingham informed the present writer that his 6 horse power car cost him more per month than a carriage and pair of horses would do. The motors seem to constantly get out of order, to wear out quickly and to require a lot of oil. The number of motors that get stuck in every part of the country is astonishing. Motor buses are constantly to be seen with a crowd of passengers on them anxiously waiting for the machinery to move. The drivers are jeered by cabbies and horse-bus drivers, who offer the use of their horses for the occasion. The cases of motors being pushed along the road ignominiously having been rather frequent, their chauffeurs have been dubbed Shovaneers.

The number of really good new theatres that have been opened in the Strand and other parts of London is very large. Notwithstanding this the old houses are as crowded as ever and people who have been hard at work all day will gladly stand in a crowd for an hour and a half or two hours in the open air in all weathers for the privilege of entering the pit at 2s. 6d. a ticket. It seems to be the general opinion of theatre-goers in London that musical comedy has been overdone. Stage dancing fails to interest people who have watched it for years. The musical comedy has been somewhat severely described as "all legs and no music." The music in many cases is certainly very poor. Taking advantage of the public's satiety in respect of musical comedies, the managers of Wyndham's Theatre scored a big success last August and September with a very amusing play called "What the Butler Saw," written by Judge Parry and Mr. Mouillot. The play went on at Wyndham's up to the end of September. On Oct. 2nd it was shifted to the Savoy, where as an extra attraction it was preceded by a curtain raiser entitled Hare-kiri, performed by a troupe of Japanese players.

English family life has certainly very much changed during the past 30 years. In days gone by the parents used to run the children. The children now usually run themselves and their parents too. The young people of to-day are characterized by ever increasing independence. The family occasionally meets for meals, hardly ever for family prayers even among church and chapel goers. In many families the meals are most irregular, each member dropping in just when it suits him or her. The servants are not of course expected to wait on each member at any time of day or night. Sons and daughters have had to get into the way of waiting on themselves. It is one of the penalties they have to pay for the freedom from rules and conventionalities which the modern young man and young woman so dearly loves. But then independent sons and daughters are interesting to watch and to talk to. They each have their own friends, interests, recreations, tastes and ideals. The parents are respected and loved, but regarded as belonging to a world which the younger people have outgrown. Their eccentricities, weaknesses, superstitions, constantly form the subject of conversation among their grown up children. To understand, sympathize with and encourage grown up sons and daughters living in the house is successfully attempted by certain parents. By others the task is deemed too difficult to be essayed, and they are content to allow their children to revolve around their own suns while they themselves keep to their well traversed spheres. One thing cannot but strike a stranger visiting England and that is the tremendous energy, and pluck of the modern English girl. Along with her great independence of spirit there goes the most astonishing activity. Her life is one continuous bustle. There are few things that men do that she does not do equally well. She is to be seen cycling through the city traffic chaos at a rapid rate, passing almost under the noses of horses and within an inch of the wheels of vehicles with no sign of nervousness; she drives her motor through crowded streets at the highest speed allowed, managing the machine with consummate skill; she golfs, she boats, and if she be lucky enough to get the use of a horse for any length of time, she rides as well as any man. There is no jump in cross-country riding that she will not go for with dash and determination—not many weeks ago a young lady at Birmingham carried off the second prize for jumping at a meeting of two Hunting Clubs. She is an essential lover of motion and fresh air week in and week out. This energy is infectious. In many cases it keeps the male part of the population from flagging and it furnishes a crushing reply to the pessimists who tell us that England's best days are past, that national senility has overtaken her. The men who loaf around clubs, bored to death and too lazy to exert themselves in any way are a very small minority. The nation ignores and despises them. The toiling millions on whom England's prosperity depends are living for the most part a natural, and a healthy life. Vice is to be found everywhere, but the English people as a whole maintain a high standard of virtue. Girls do things nowadays which seem shocking to their grandparents and perhaps even to their aunts and parents, but they keep out of danger's way nevertheless. The modern English girl may be said to have been Americanized, that is, she has learnt how to go about the world without chaperons or male protectors and yet to reach her home unscathed. The girl in England who can't travel alone and take care of herself day and night is regarded as antiquated, as born in the wrong century. Even the stage is no longer considered to be an unfit place for pretty and talented young girls who belong to good families. There are numbers of clergymen who have allowed their daughters to go on the stage under assumed names and they have no anxiety whatever in doing this. A girl of character nowadays can hold her own anywhere. Stage managers are naturally desirous of obtaining as many real ladies and gentlemen employees as possible and they do everything that is necessary to prevent improprieties of any kind behind the scenes. The standard of morals on the stage has certainly risen considerably during the past 30 or 40 years.

* * *

Perhaps it is true to say that the conservatism of England has its centres in the cathedral towns and in rural districts, where people seem to be impervious to the influence of advancing public opinion. More sleepy places than towns like Exeter and Salisbury it would be hard to find. The people there seem to think, talk and act just as they did 25 years ago or even 50 years ago. The gloomy cathedral bells and the still more gloomy faces of the old ladies and gentlemen who frequent the daily services at these historic spots form a striking contrast to the cheerful vivacity and bustle of great commercial towns like Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham. Except on market days the streets of these cathedral towns seem to be half-deserted. Smaller country towns appear in many instances to be on the road to decay. In town after town in Devonshire evidences are to be seen of this. As places of residence or for purposes of business small country towns are growing every day more unpopular. People pine for more life and excitement than they can get in these places. The word "depressing" describes best what the general public feels about these towns. Life without pleasure is unbearable. The English people know well what kind of pleasures they desire and these they mean to have. They are not to be had as a rule in the country—hence the rapid growth of great towns and their delightful suburbs, where the advantages of both town and country life are enjoyed.

In the musical world of England one of the many modern wonders is the great band contests which have been going on at the Crystal Palace; and the great concert of the massed bands, on Sept. 30th, consisting of 5,000 instrumentalists conducted by the boy musical genius, Max Darewski, the youngest composer-conductor in the world was an unprecedented musical tour de force. Interviewed before the performance, the 10 year old conductor said: "To-morrow evening at the Crystal Palace I am going to conduct five thousand instrumentalists through Mendelssohn's 'Heroes March.' We are only going to have one rehearsal at 11 o'clock on Saturday; but I know everything will be all right, for each man is himself a thorough artist. Though my own performance will only last about five minutes, that is, if the audience do not ask for any encores, it will be the greatest thing I have ever done, although I commenced conducting when eighteen months old.....I do not feel at all nervous when I am conducting. I always know the parts so well that I conduct without a score. What worries me sometimes is that the performers lose their parts or get them mixed up. I have personally to see beforehand that each man has got his part, or I find when I get up to conduct that the "cornet" has got the "violin's" part and that the "clarinet" has not got a part at all.....I do not really know why I can conduct; for I have never been taught at all and so I do not think there is anything more I can say about how I do it."

Year after year the Crystal Palace provides new sensational surprises for the public. To the Londoner the Crystal Palace is a perpetual delight because of the immense variety of the side shows which can be attended in a single day. Its Saturday fetes during last September have never been surpassed, in the opinion of veteran sight-seers. Whatever be one's tastes London life has charms for an Englishman not to be found anywhere else. The present writer returns to the East with the conviction that here we exist, but in London people live.

WEDDINGS IN YOKOHAMA.

On Thursday in most propitious weather the wedding took place of Miss Mabel Thirkell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Sharp and Mr. H. H. Read of Shanghai. The ceremony was celebrated in Christ Church, the officiating clergyman being Rev. W. P. G. Field. The service was fully choral and Mr. W. K. Vincent was the organ.

The church was beautifully decorated with feathery bamboos and white flowers of all available kinds—roses, chrysanthemums, azaleas, violets, etc. At the entrance of the aisle the wedding party passed under a prettily festooned arch of white flowers, and for the occasion white drill had been laid down for them to walk upon. The chancel was a mass of white blooms and the pulpit, the reading desk, and the rails of the altar were decorated in unison.

At the appointed hour the bride, conducted by her father, Mr. H. J. Sharp, entered the church. She presented a very charming appearance, being dressed in ivory satin, with a full court train, and the berthe of lace, which decorated the corsage, was worn by her mother on the occasion of her wedding, as were also the wreath of orange blossom and the silver ornaments that adorned the shoes. A spray of orange blossoms lay across the corsage, being caught up by a very handsome sunburst of diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom. The bride's only other ornaments were a locket and chain, an heirloom, given to her by her mother. Her shower bouquet was of white roses and violets.

Attending the bride was little nine-year-old Winnie Sharp, train-bearer, dressed in mousseline de soie, wearing a hat of the same material, and presenting a very pretty picture as she tripped up the aisle; and following her came the bridesmaids, Trixie, the bride's sister and her cousin Fanny. These wore white crêpe de chine with satin spot, and satin and chiffon hats to match. They carried shepherd crooks, heavily festooned with white flowers, from each of which was suspended a boat-shaped basket trimmed with pure white blossoms. They wore curb-chain bracelets, presented to them by the bridegroom.

Mrs. Sharp, who was conducted down the church by Dr. Wheeler, wore a rich French brocade, on a cream foundation, with heliotrope sprays and a cream toque to match, and carried a bouquet of white violets and other blooms.

The company were received in the church by the following ushers: Messrs. Bertie Poole, J. A. Harmssen, Chester Poole, L. Wilson, L. S. Hudson, and H. W. Kilby, and the bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. Johnstone McClure as his best man.

As the bride entered the church, leaning on the arm of Mr. Sharp, "The Voice that Breathed o'er Eden" was sung by the choir, and after the ceremony, in which Mr. Sharp gave away the bride, and while the party were signing the register, Mrs. James Walter rendered most impressively "O, Blessed Redeemer." The bride and bridegroom left the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

A reception was afterwards held at the Oriental Palace Hotel which was very largely attended. The wedding presents were very numerous and handsome and it may be noted that in no fewer than a dozen cases friends had adopted the highly sensible course of presenting cheques.

At the reception the usual toasts were honoured and responded to. Dr. Wheeler proposed the bride's health and the bridegroom replied, afterwards giving the health of the bridesmaids, which Mr. Johnstone McClure acknowledged on their behalf.

The bride's going-away dress was of white serge embroidered with white panne velvet, over which she wore a long white serge coat richly trimmed with brocade.

The happy couple left on Thursday evening for Tokyo, intending to depart the following day and pass the honeymoon at Miyanosita.

The wedding took place on Thursday of Miss Margerita Henrietta Catrina, daughter of Mr. L. Stornebrink, and Mr. Albert Louis Mottu, son of the late Mr. A. Mottu. The civil ceremony took place at the Swiss Consulate, the marriage service being afterwards performed at the residence of the bride's parents, the Rev. Father Pettier officiating.

The bride wore a charming dress of white silk, and was given away by her father, and the groom had as his best man Mr. Baumgartner. The bride's two sisters acted as bridesmaids, and wore white and pink silk dresses respectively.

After the ceremony a reception was held at No. 184 Bluff, the residence of the bride's parents, where a large number of friends of the happy pair assembled to tender their congratulations. The presents received were both numerous and valuable.

ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

A general meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held at the home of Professor A. Lloyd, 13 Jigura, Rokuchome, Azabu, Tokyo, on Wednesday, November 15, at four o'clock. The weather being damp and cold, those present warmly appreciated the refreshments and the cosy rooms provided for the meeting by the host.

After announcing that the minutes of the last meeting had been published and that there was no other business for consideration by the Society, the President said that he would at once proceed to read the paper prepared by himself on "Village Life in Japan."

In commencing his paper, Mr. Lloyd said that it must not be considered as being in a proper state for final presentation to the Society with a view to being included in the next volume of the Transactions. Before presenting it he hoped to work over the subject once more. In the meantime, "I present it to the Society as a plea for the encouragement of further study along lines which are full of interest. I hope it may be accepted in the light of an appeal to our members, especially those living in the country, to use eyes, ears, and hands, to see, hear, and jot down the things which are going on around them."

Mr. Lloyd then proceeded to give a sketch of the village constitution in the feudal times, of the nanushi and kumigashira and their relations to the other villagers as well as to the local daimyo, and thus passed on to the changes made during Marquis Yamagata's régime which divided the country into prefectures, and gave to each village an elective son kuai and son cho to take the place of the kumigashira and nanushi of feudal days.

In discussing village finance he pointed out that the pressure of taxation was gradually driving the small peasant proprietors out of the field, their place being taken by the money-lending capitalists, who were gradually developing into a new class of landed gentry, on the one hand, and the small tenant farmers on the other.

Mr. Lloyd then gave a rapid review of the village life, the different classes of persons to be found in a village, artisans, labourers, servants, shopkeepers, doctors, priests, and devoted the concluding portion of his paper to a description of some of the more noteworthy feasts and festivals of the Japanese village, notably New Year and the O-bon.

The paper was confessedly incomplete, and the lecturer in conclusion expressed a desire to hear from any members of the Society, or others, living in the country, about any interesting or peculiar customs which may come under their notice. Many a person who does not feel himself competent to present a paper to the Society may be able in this way to contribute something towards the objects for which the Society exists.

Several members of the Society made remarks concerning their observations and experiences in the rural regions of Japan. The Secretary, Mr. Vickers, then said that, as the paper was read by the President, it seemed incumbent on the Secretary on behalf of the auditors to thank Mr. Lloyd for his interesting and suggestive paper, and also for his hospitality in entertaining the Society.

THE RED CROSS SOCIETY.

The general meeting of the Japan Red Cross Society was held on Monday, Nov. 20th, in Ueno Park, Tokyo. Owing to the fine weather, no obstacle prevented the promoters from carrying out the programme which had been drawn up. It is estimated that about two hundred thousand members were present. The Empress was unable to be present, as she is suffering from a cold, but Princess Higashi Fushimi appeared as Her Majesty's representative and was welcomed by Prince Kan-in, President of the Society, Princess Kan-in, President of the Ladies' Nurse Society, and other distinguished persons, including Marchioness Nabeshima, Baronesses Senke, Tanaka, Hanabusa, Matsudaira, and Yanagiya, Countess Matsukata, Viscount Uramatsu, Princess Mori, etc. Princess Higashi Fushimi was immediately conducted to a hall where she rested. RETURN OF THE EMPEROR.

The Emperor left Shizuoka at 10.30 a.m. by a special train for Tokyo and passed Hiranuma station at 3.14 p.m. on Sunday. The citizens were specially enthusiastic in their welcome. The warships and various merchantmen in the harbour were fully dressed and the streets were largely decorated with flags. The Hiranuma Railway station was crowded with people, the number being almost ten times that of those who saw His Majesty off, the reason being in part the fine weather and the day being Sunday. The officials of the Kencho, City Office, Customs, District and Local Courts and other local government offices, the presidents of the Prefectural and City Assemblies, Chamber of Commerce, leading traders, etc. were present on the platform. The train passed the station at the usual speed. It consisted of carriages in order similar to that of the Emperor's departure. Meanwhile, the cruisers Takachiho and Naniwa saluted with twenty-one guns each to celebrate his Majesty's triumphal return. At 3.20 p.m., the Imperial train passed Kanagawa Station also at the usual speed. There also many people were assembled to welcome and see the Emperor off.

His Majesty arrived at Shimbashi at 3.50 p.m.

The large triumphal arch in front of the Shimbashi Railway Station, which was erected on the occasion of the returning of Admiral Togo, was handsomely ornamented with evergreens and flowers together with national flags. Another large arch was erected at Sakurada-mon near Shimbashi in honour of the occasion. Two hundred fine fireworks were displayed in the Hibiya Park, commencing at 3 p.m. and lasting till the evening. The whole city was decorated in honour of the occasion.

Previous to the departure of the Emperor from Ise Baron Yamamoto, and other army and naval officers among the Imperial party left Ise on Nov. 18th for Tokyo.

The squadron under Vice-Admiral Uryu, which had been in Ise Bay as naval guard to the Emperor, left on Sunday for Shinagawa.

CLAY MACCAULEY MEMORIAL LANTERN.

The ceremony attending the dedication of a stone lantern or tōro to Dr. Clay MacCauley at the Unity Hall, Mita, Shiba, Tokyo, took place at 3 p.m. on Saturday, with the ceremony being combined a reception in honour of the doctor's second visit (or return) to Japan.

Among those present were Capt. J. M. James, of Shinagawa, Mr. W. B. Mason, of Yokohama, Prof. E. H. Vickers, of Keiojuku University, and I. W. Cate of the Universalists Mission in Tokyo.

The programme of the ceremony began with the removal of Dr. MacCauley's portrait from the interior of the building to the garden where the tōro stands. The latter, it may be said, is of granite; it weighs 2½ tons and is 12 feet in height from base to top, being superposed on a mound about 3 feet in height. As adjuncts to the memorial there have been planted a large and venerable shii tree and a number of azalea bushes. In the hall there followed a musical number; a Bible reading, Psalm I. and Luke X., by Rev. J. Saji, pastor of the Japanese Unitarian Church; a hymn; the opening address in Japanese by Mr. S. Kanda, Secretary of the Mission; a reception address in English by Mr. T. Hiroi, representative of the Board of the Japanese Unitarian Association; chorus "Iphigenia" (Gluck) by the members of the Unity Club; a reception address in Japanese by Mr. S. Kuroima, a member of the church; a chorus by the Unity Club; a reception address by Mr. S. Arakawa, a church member, and one of Dr. MacCauley's old friends; an address in reply by Dr. MacCauley and finally a chorus of Beethoven by the Unity Club.

Thereafter the whole company went into the garden, where Dr. MacCauley lighted the tōro and three bansai were given.

At 7 p.m. 42 persons sat down to a Japanese dinner given in the hall, in which speeches were made in Japanese and English, among the speakers being Messrs. Y. Iitsuka, J. Yamagata, T. Shiba.

Both ceremony and dinner passed off very enjoyably and successfully.

JAPAN AND THE TREATY OF PORTSMOUTH.

More than a conqueror now she stands revealed.

He, that bath read war's rueful histories,

In this, Japan, thy sole surrender, sees

Thy crowning triumph; who, by flood and field

Victor, to no base idol having knelt

Of greed or glory, didst with seeming ease,

The golden mean accounting more than these,

On the full tide of fortune pause, and yield.

Thy loss herein were universal gain,

Would but thy Western teachers learn of thee

The strength, in strength, which can itself restrain,

Nor for pride only, or mere aims of State,

But, in humanest magnanimity,

Cares for the sake of greatness to be great.

JAMES RHODES.

FIRES.

Fire broke out at 3.30 p.m. on Nov. 15th at Komatsu-machi, near Kanazawa, destroying sixty-two houses including a post office.

At 1.50 a.m. on Friday (Nov. 17th), fire broke out in the kitchen of the Miyakawa-kwan hotel, No. 92, Fukutomicho, Sanchome, Yokohama, the proprietress of which is Toku Mimura. The flames immediately spread through the building, which is very spacious, with second and third stories. The result was that the house and eleven adjoining small houses were destroyed. K. Nakayama (33) a tailor who put up in the hotel a few days ago, having come from Odawara, fell from one of the second story rooms and sustained severe injuries while struggling to escape from the flames. He was removed to the Naniwa Hospital belonging to Dr. Kagami. His state is reported by the Isezaki-cho police to be very serious.

An outbreak of fire occurred at 8.30 p.m. on Nov. 16th on board a lighter which had a few hours previously arrived in the vicinity of Yanagi bridge, in the neighbourhood of the Yokohama Railway Station with three hundred and thirty-six cases of kerosene oil from the Explosives Magazine, Ishikawa, Nakamura. The boat was destroyed with the whole of the contents. Two other boats received slight damage by the flames. A sendo named Suzuki sustained severe injuries on the face and hands. The cause is believed to be tobacco ashes.

Fire broke out at 1.25 a.m. on Nov. 18th in a goods-car attached to an express train while running on the section between Nagoya and Ichino-miya, having left Shimbashi at 12.30 p.m. the previous day for Kobe. Twenty packages out of a hundred and thirty were destroyed and the car was greatly damaged. The fire originated in the falling of a lamp.

Fire broke out on the evening of Nov. 16th, in the factory of the Kyoeyki Perfect Manure Company, in the village of Oku, near Tokyo, destroying seven buildings covering 367 tsudo, including the engine room. The damage is estimated at about thirty-three thousand yen. The place and its contents were insured with the Yokohama Fire Insurance Co. for thirty thousand yen.

About 6.30 p.m., on Sunday, Nov. 19th, fire broke out in the residence of Mr. Rud. Witschi, No. 139, Bluff, Yokohama. According to the Bluff police, the outbreak occurred in the wardrobe of the children's sleeping-room which has no connection with a stove and in which no inflammable materials were kept. The flames were put out before spreading far, the damage being limited to the walls and ceiling of the room and a part of the roof. No one was injured.

Two fires broke out in Yokohama on the evening of Nov. 20th. One took place in Ueno-machi near the German Naval Hospital, on the Bluff. It originated in a shed belonging to a merchant. The flames were put out before spreading to the adjoining houses. Incendiarism is believed to be the cause.

Another fire occurred at 8.30 p.m. in the testing room of the Yokohama Hygienic Laboratory, Honcho, Gochome. The flames were put out before severe damage was sustained. The cause is not yet known but is reported to be an explosion of some chemicals.

Early on the morning of Nov. 22nd, fire broke out in the Gomei theatre in Osu-machi, Nagoya. Owing to the strong wind, the flames immediately spread to the adjoining buildings. Ten large houses were destroyed, including, Hoshu theatre the Hoshu-kwan bazaar and the Meiji-kwan tea-house.

An outbreak of fire occurred about 2.30 a.m. on Nov. 22nd in the Nippon Red Cross Society's offices, Iida-machi, Koji-machi, Tokyo. It was put out before the flames could spread, and the damage was consequently slight.

Admirals Togo, Kataoka, Kamimura, Dewa and other commanders will leave Tokyo on Nov. 24th for Kyoto by the 12.30 p.m. train. They are ordered by the Emperor to worship at the tombs of previous Emperors.

HONORARY TREASURER:—T. C. Anderson, Esq.

SECRETARY:—Geo. Hood, No. 72.

The third day of the Autumn Meeting opened under about as unfavourable conditions as it would be possible to imagine for the royal sport. The course was a swamp and the enclosure a quagmire, while a steady rain descended until about 2.30 p.m. and a bleak northerly wind added considerably to the discomfort of riders and spectators alike. Under the circumstances it was only natural that the attendance of visitors generally was far below the average, while the number of ladies who braved the inclement weather could be counted on the fingers of one's hands. The state of the course gave a good chance to some of the slow but strong animals and the mudlarks, as the floundering through the swamp could scarcely be called racing; consequently no times were officially given out even if they were taken. It was a surprise indeed that so many horses and ponies were turned out in some of the contests. The Band was in attendance during the afternoon and took up a position on the upper floor of the grand stand, out of the rain, and towards the end tried to raise the spirits of the visitors by some lively strains. The events were as follow:—

PARI MUTUEL—Paid yen 5.50.

FOURTH DAY, SATURDAY, NOV. 18TH.

The fourth and last day of the Autumn Meeting was favoured with bright, sunny weather, a delightful contrast to that of the preceding day, and consequently there was a large gathering of visitors on the Stands and compound. The wind of the previous night and the bright sunshine of the morning had served to dry up to a considerable extent the thoroughly soaked course, so that the going was much better than might have been expected and several of the events of the last day produced as keen and sporting contests as any during the meeting. As a rule the favourites held their own and justified the confidence of their backers, so that there were no sensational scoops by outsiders. The fields were not so large as on some of the previous days of the meeting but the character of the races, which were all handicaps or consolations, accounted for this. The events were as follow:—

1.—THE CHINA GRIFFIN WINNERS' HANDICAP, value yen 450. For China Subscription Ponies of Autumn 1905; forced entry for winners at the meeting. One Mile and a Furlong.

Mr. Duplex's Aeolus, 145lb. (Mr. Dietrich) 1

Mr. Star's Kintaro, 146lb. (Rikizo) 3
Capt. Leader's Bonnie Morn, 136lb. (Sugiyama) 4
Major Trick's Voltigeur, 150lb. (Hakodate) 5

Aeolus was first favourite and Kintaro second in favour. Bonnie Morn made the running from the start and led for nearly half a mile when he was displaced by Aeolus, who kept the lead to the finish, winning by half a dozen lengths from Duhalow, who had run into second place on passing the Trees, and Kintaro a poor third. Time, 2.45.

PARI MUTUEL—Paid yen 12.50.

2.—THE AUSTRALIAN GRIFFIN WINNERS' HANDICAP, value yen 600. For Australian Subscription Horses of Autumn 1905; forced entry for winners at the meeting. One Mile and a Furlong.

Mr. Cotton's Yahagi, 125lb. (Omino) 4

Lola started first favourite. Yahagi got away the best and led to the rise from the Dip, with Dekimasho next. At the Shakespeare Princess took second place and Yahagi dropped behind leaving Dekimasho in first place. In the straight the latter kept her lead and won by three lengths from Princess, the favourite finishing third about four lengths behind Princess. Time 2.17½.

PARI MUTUEL—Paid yen 14.

3.—THE CHINA WINNERS' HANDICAP, value yen 600. For All China Ponies; (Subscription Ponies of Autumn 1905 excluded); forced entry for winners at the meeting. One mile and a Furlong.

Mr. Burghdunum's The Miller, 133lb. (Omino) 5
Mr. R. Loonen's Charmeur (late Wakashima), 144lb. (Mr. Mottu) 6

This looked to be a very open event and several of the starters were almost equally backed. The Miller made the running for the first quarter mile and then fell behind, C.O.D. taking the lead with Empereur close up. At the Trees the latter drew up with C.O.D. and Raubgraff ran into third place. Turning the corner into the straight Petit Canard came away and challenged Empereur and a fine race home ensued, the latter winning cleverly by half a length, C.O.D. third, three lengths behind. Time 2.41½.

PARI MUTUEL—Paid yen 13 on the stable, Empereur and Charmeur.

4.—The AUSTRALIAN AND COUNTRY BREDS. WINNERS' HANDICAP, value yen 750. For Australian Subscription Horses and Country Breds; (Subscription Horses of Autumn 1905 excluded; forced entry for winners at the meeting. One mile and a Furlong. Mr. Tatsuta's Suma, 138lb.(Takahashi) 1

Mr. Sport's Dekimas, 130lb.(Mr. Catto) 0

Hitachi was first favourite. May-mie got away with a slight lead, with Ohgon next, but at the top of the hill Patricia obtained the lead and was soon after joined by Hitachi. At the corner entering the straight Suma came to the front at a great pace and passing Hitachi and Patricia won by three lengths from the former, who finished second about the same distance ahead of Patricia. Time 2.15 3/4.

PARI MUTUEL.—Paid yen 40.

Mr. Swarby's Mark, 150lb.(Takahashi) 0
Mr. R. Loonen's Finaisseur, 150lb.(Fujisaki) 0

Mr. Friends' Daybreak, 137lb.(Hakodate) 3
Mr. Cotton's Alabama, 137lb.(Aoki) 0

Kachidoki carried nearly all the public's money. Capricieuse and Alabama showed in front for nearly half the distance when the favourite took the lead and increasing it from the Trees and down the straight won as she liked by ten or a dozen lengths from Capricieuse, with Daybreak third, three lengths behind. Time 2.34 1/4.

Mr. Green's Ruby, 137lb.(Rikizo) 0
Mr. Tatsuta's Akagi, 137lb.(Yakahashi) 0

Genji was made first favourite and justified the confidence placed in her, as she went to the front at the start and led all the way round, beating Toun for the prize, by a head, Susan, who also ran well, finishing a good third. Time 1.29 3/4.

PARI MUTUEL.—Paid yen 9.

8.—The CHINA GRIFFIN'S SOLACE, value yen 250, the second to receive yen 100 and the third yen 50. For China Subscription Ponies of Autumn 1905 that have started at the meeting and not won a race; weight as per scale. One Mile.

* Dead Heat.

A lot of trouble was given by one pony and another at the start, of which Haruna got the best with Grenadier next. At the Shakespeare Enjoleur ran to the front and was soon after joined by Daijobu and Batailleur. After a fine race down the Straight between these three, Daijobu and Enjoleur finished on the post a dead heat, with the latter's stable companion Batailleur, about a length behind. Time, 2.24 3/4.

PARI MUTUEL.—Paid yen 8.50 on Mr. Loonen's stable; (Enjoleur and Batailleur) and 5.50 on Daijobu.

Afterwards the dead heat was run off, when, after running neck and neck all round, Enjoleur, hard ridden, just succeeded in beating Daijobu by half a head.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

An Onomichi (Bungo province) telegram says that the Mitsu Bishi Kaisha's steamer Wakamatsu Maru (2,000 tons) went ashore early on the morning of Nov. 16th in the neighbourhood of Inoshima. Attempts are being made to float her.

The Chugoku Maru (895 tons), chartered by the Osaka Shosen Kaisha from M. Ikeda, of Bingo province, ran ashore on the evening of Nov. 16th in the neighbourhood of an island forty miles south-east of Chemulpo, Korea. The crew and passengers were saved by the Kishin Maru and Zuiyo Maru. The ship is in a dangerous state. The Jiji says that the hull is insured with the Nippon Marine Insurance Co., Osaka, for fifty-seven thousand yen.

It is reported from Sapporo that owing to a gale, the steamer Hakosaki Maru sank on the morning of Nov. 21st in the harbour of Wakana. The crew were saved.

During a storm the captured ship Romulus sank on her way from Misawa in the district of Kamikita, Aomori prefecture, to Hakodate, being then in tow of the Higo Maru. It may be remembered that the German steamer Romulus (2,630 gross tons) was seized on Feb. 26th by the Iwate in Tsugaru Strait on her way to Vladivostok with thirty-four hundred tons of Cardiff coal. Subsequently, she went ashore off Kamikita on her way from Hakodate to Yokosuka under the escort of a Japanese warship, and she has been there since. The Yokosuka Prize Court gave a decision on May 16th confiscating her hull and cargo. As there was no protest against the judgment, the confiscation was confirmed after the usual days of grace. The hull was sold by auction, Mr. T. Hasegawa, transportation agent of Hachinohe, purchasing her for some seventy thousand yen. The purchaser floated her.

FOOTBALL.

A game of Rugby football was played on Saturday afternoon on the grounds of the Y. C. & A. C. Despite the attractions of the races thirteen a side turned up and a good fast game resulted. Whites proved much too strong for Colours and the game resulted: 3 goals and 1 try to 2 tries.

The election of Captains of Rugby and Association football was to have been held later but owing to the paucity of the attendance it was decided to postpone the business until a date to be afterwards announced.

Next Saturday it is hoped to be able to play Born in Japan against the World.

THE LAW COURTS.

THE TOKYO DISTURBANCES.

Y. Emuda, a policeman belonging to the Honjo Station, who was undergoing preliminary examination in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of having assaulted a jinrikisha coolie named K. Miyamoto, and inflicted severe injuries with a sword, during the disturbance on Sept. 5th in Tokyo, was committed for trial on Nov. 20th in accordance with Art. 301 of the Penal Code and Art. 167 of Penal Procedure. According to the facts set out in the judgment the accused met the jinrikisha man, who was wearing matting instead of a water-proof coat. Thinking from his curious attire that the coolie was one of the mob who were setting fire to the police-boxes, the accused attacked him without making any enquiry. The accused was released on bail of yen 30.

The Kobe Herald has been informed that a telegram received by Messrs. E. Pahaney, of Kobe, states that the Prince of Wales conferred the honour of knighthood on Mr. Ibrahim Currimhoy, senior partner of that firm, at Bombay, on the 11th inst. It will be remembered that Mr. Ibrahim Pahaney recently made a munificent gift to the fund for the foundation of a Queen Victoria Memorial Museum at Bombay.

A tragedy took place on Saturday evening in the Mikazuki-ro, Yairaku-cho, Yokohama. Y. Terao (26), a merchant residing in Bandai-cho, attempted to murder Masa Meguro, attacking her with a large knife. He inflicted severe injuries on her throat and on her face and hands. The man attempted to commit suicide by cutting his own throat with the same weapon. Meanwhile, the affair was reported by the keeper of the house by telephone to the Kotobukicho Police Office. Subsequently, Preliminary Examination Judge Danno, and a Public Procurator of the Yokohama District Court, and Dr. Fujii appeared on the scene. Both man and woman are in a serious state. According to the statement of witnesses both were drinking in a room when a slight dispute arose, the nature of which is not known.

It was at a fete given to working girls of the East End of London, and the Bishop was going round among the guests and endeavouring to put them at their ease. His kindly smile shone on all alike. His tactful remarks were not for one, but for the whole strength of the company. This attitude was not lost upon the guests. As he was moving through their ranks, a thin, penetrating voice made itself heard. "Oh, my!" said the voice; "ain't the Bishop a flirt!"

A wild-duck hunt was held on Nov. 21st in the Imperial estate at Nihama. The distinguished persons present included Princesses Yamashina and Kuni, the ministers of various departments and their wives, the British Ambassador, the French, Spanish, Chinese and Italian Ministers and their staffs. On Nov. 28th, a further hunt will be held at the same place when the American, German, Austro-Hungarian, Siamese, and Mexican Ministers and staffs and wives will be invited.

A bye-election for a member of the Diet took place on Nov. 19th in Aichi prefecture, the result being as follows:—

Mr. M. Nagai, a merchant	4,839
Mr. J. Shimidzu, a lawyer of Tokyo.....	4,530
Mr. S. Shiga, a professor of Waseda College	1,709

Mr. Naito, who was elected, is well known in connexion with the attempted assassination of Count Itagaki at Gifu.

The prisoners in Japan at the end of October numbered as follows:—

Russians	61,475
Jews	1,739
Tartars	929
Poles	5,722

Besides the above 946 were released before the restoration of peace in consequence of being crippled and for other reasons, and 366 died in the various hospitals.

Early on the morning of Nov. 20th, a man armed with an iron-stick broke into the residence of T. Tamii, a pawnbroker, Miyoshi-cho, Yokohama. Asking for money, the intruder attacked the broker, inflicting injuries on the head and face with the iron stick. The occupant, however, without flinching grappled with the intruder intending to take him to a police station. Meantime Tora, the wife of the pawn-broker, went out for the police. Subsequently, two police appeared on the scene and arrested the would-be robber. The man is named Y. Suzuki (62) who was released on Nov. 3rd from Negishi Jail where he was detained on a charge of theft. He was still under police surveillance.

The Sanyo Railway Company intends to raise in London a loan of twenty million yen. For their purpose Mr. T. Ushiba, President of the Company, recently arrived in Tokyo and is conducting negotiations with a prominent British firm in Yokohama, which is representing a syndicate. The contract, it is said, will be concluded within a few days.

According to Tokyo papers, the Osaka Shosen has concluded a contract with a foreign firm in Yokohama for a loan of ten million yen for which Mr. T. Nakahashi, President of the company, conducted negotiations in Tokyo. The terms in both cases are similar to those in the case of the Kwansai Railway Co.

We regret to say that the telegraphs branch of the Department of Communications seems to be under suspicion of inefficiency. A case that brings this impression to our mind is that of a Reuter's telegram of twenty-four words, inclusive of the address, in which there were no fewer than seven mistakes. "German" figured as "Gegman," "torpedoer" as "torpedocay,"

"Storthing" as "Stowthing," "elected" as "eleyted," "Charles" as "Chagges," "King" as "Kino," and "unanimously" as "umanimously." It would be useful if the authorities could find time to ascertain whether messages like the above (and such mutilations have been increasing for years) reach Japan in their mutilated form or are ill-treated by the domestic operators.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY AND THE WAR.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Among the various agencies for ministering to the welfare of the Japanese soldiers during the recent war the American Bible Society has endeavoured to have a share. Experience has shown that the condition of the mind has a very important influence upon the body, and whatever ministers to the spiritual as well as the bodily comfort of the soldiers adds much to their prospect of recovery from wounds or sickness, and also to their efficiency in the service.

For the supply of the men in the army and navy special editions of the Scriptures and Tracts have been published; and, with approval of the officials, as well as their assistance, distributed to the soldiers on their way to the front, and Comfort Bags have been sent to the army in the field, to the Y.M.C.A. representatives in Manchuria, to the sick and wounded in the hospitals and on board of the transports, and to the various ships in the navy.

Up to the present date (Nov. 15th) there have been distributed in this way 722 Bibles, 15,473 Testaments, 283,792 Portions of Gospels, and 187,751 Tracts; at a cost of 4,772 yen (not including freight and postage). For a few of these a part of the cost was received but the most of them have been donated.

That these contributions have been appreciated and useful is evident from the many testimonials that have been received to that effect. Among such expressions of gratitude and assurances of benefit derived we select a few samples.

A soldier at the front writes, "I thank you very much for sending me the books of God's word, the Gospels of Matthew and Luke. I have nothing here to comfort me but these Gospels which are my dearest friends; and I am doing my best to follow the instructions they contain."

A converted Buddhist priest, now a soldier at the front, writes, "Throughout the whole of the war the Bible has been eagerly read. Think of the great assistance which has been rendered by the books sent by you. They are indeed the most effectual spiritual medicine on the field of battle. My greatest pleasure is to read the Bible, to read it practically; I hope the day will come when I will be able to circulate and teach the Bible."

A soldier, who had lost both of his eyes at the siege of Port Arthur, was so much disheartened at first that he resolved to commit suicide; but when he had received a copy of one of the Gospels in raised characters for the use of the blind, and learned what it contained, he said, "I can hardly take time to sleep, it is so fascinating. Although I have lost the eyes of my flesh I have been more than compensated by being given the eyes of faith, which enable me to see the true God by whose blessing I have obtained this joy and peace of heart." One who has visited the hospital writes, "He is the happiest man in the building; and a comfort and help to every man in the ward."

Of another man with a slashed face a missionary writes: "Some time ago this man wrote of three men who would like to have Testaments at once. We sent them by a special messenger; and afterwards had a letter from one of the men, who said his reneched him just before he started for the Hokkaido. When he had it in his hands he wept for joy to think that the treasure was really his. He will soon be off to the front again and will carry the Testament with him as his most valued possession."

Another missionary writes, "Thank you for the precious Gospels. 'Have you any Testaments?' is the one question; and 'No' will not satisfy. 'How can I get one? Where? When? Will you come to-morrow?' It is now just a week since my first visit to the hospital since vacation and I have had personal requests and have put into the hands of soldiers more than a hundred Testaments."

Another missionary writes, "Many letters and cards are coming from those who have gone to their homes and seem to have found great comfort in the Bible. One man writes, 'Truly, it is the light of life.' 'One man, who has entirely recovered, and gone back to fight again, called while en route to the battlefield to thank us for the Bible saying, I have had a pocket made expressly for it and I think I will be able to keep it, and it is better than all else.'"

One of the Japanese war correspondents at the front writes, "I was one day visiting the commander, when word came that the Comfort Bags had arrived and he was expected to go and get a portion for his company. It was a sight to see the big men hold out their eager hands to draw the lots, and then cry out with joy when they opened their bags and saw what they contained. They looked so happy and child-like that it made me feel as if I was myself in heaven."

"These bags were filled with useful articles and interesting literature for their spiritual needs. I can safely say that nothing can surpass those little bags in giving cheer and comfort to those who are away from home and their loved ones" (In each one was a Gospel and Tract by the American Bible Society. Nearly 40,000 of each were thus distributed.)

One of the soldiers writes, "I am a soldier at the front. It was on the 12th of July that the comfort bags were distributed. On opening mine, I found among many useful articles one thing which I could otherwise never have procured. By this I mean the Gospel sent by you; and I write to thank you especially for this book. To read these books is our greatest pleasure; far exceeding all other kinds of happiness."

Another soldier writes, "You can hardly imagine the joy we have experienced on the receipt of the comfort bags. We especially thank you for the Gospels they contain. We are now exposed to danger and there is nothing so good as the Bible for us; for by reading it we acquaint ourselves with the salvation it offers; and it gives us more comfort and courage than a million reinforcements."

A surgeon, (not a Christian) who was for some time in charge of a hospital at the front makes this statement, "While caring for their bodies I have tried to have the patients read religious, and especially Christian books; and we were pleased to see that some of them died in perfect peace; confiding themselves entirely to God; and still more of them returned to the ranks, perfectly cured; for their belief in divine help, in addition to their treatment, encouraged their hearts and hastened their recovery."

In a letter just received from a soldier in the hospital of Osaka he writes: "You have sent us a good many beautiful albums, which are exquisitely colored, and for which I hereby tender hearty thanks. This warm sympathy given to us who are of a different race is the expression of the same kindness that your people have invariably bestowed upon us during the past fifty years in leading us to civilization."

"I am only a private who was wounded at the battle of Mukden and am now being taken care of in this hospital. This building was constructed as a barrack; and is entirely destitute of any ornament of any kind. How great was the comfort I received from the albums sent by you. I wept, indeed, overcome by the feeling of gratitude."

In conclusion I wish to say that it has been a great pleasure to contribute in any degree to the welfare and comfort of these brave men who are so patient and brave in the midst of their sufferings as well as on the field of battle. To witness their joy and gratitude has been a rich return for all that has been done in their behalf.

One interesting and encouraging fact is that at the same time those donations were being made to the men in the army and navy the ordinary sales and circulation have not only continued but steadily increased. The sales during the quarter ending Sept. 30th, 1905, were double those of 1904, and the total sales from January, 1904, to July 30th, 1905, covering almost the same period as the war, amounted to 13,822 yen, and the number of volumes was as follows. Bibles 6,603, Testaments 44,507; Portions 52,302, or a total of 120,083 volumes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ESPERANTO.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In July or August last, I offered through the columns of your paper to teach Esperanto free of charge to any who liked to take up the study of the language. The result was a class of sixty-four, two of whom live in Hong-kong and one in New Zealand. Over half are Japanese, and I am glad to record the fact that the majority did on the average the best work. I am glad to record this, I say, because several people stated most emphatically that Esperanto would be very hard for the Japanese, some even going so far as to say that it would be as hard for them as English. Esperanto is a logical language, and it has been most interesting to answer the sensible questions asked by many of my pupils, both Japanese and foreign.

About the time required to learn the language: I should say that by a correspondence course, such as has just been conducted, three months is quite sufficient. The first lesson was sent out on Sept. 16th, and the last has just been sent. In addition to the lessons, twenty pages of reading matter will be sent, making in all 105 mimeographed foolscap pages. Some of the pupils can already write much better than the writer could when he passed his examination.

A considerable number of people applied for instruction too late, and had to be refused, as I had no time to reprint extra copies of the lessons. For this reason, and also because enquiries have come from other sources, I shall conduct another course, but as the payment of postage alone (which was all I asked in the first course) was not at all sufficient to pay expenses, a small nominal fee will be charged. The course will be for beginners, as the first has been, but will be different as regards method of presentation. Those desiring to join the new class are respectfully requested to apply to the undersigned, care of the office of this paper. The terms of instruction may be seen in an advertisement in this paper.

I am, dear sir, Yours faithfully,

"JAPS."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I beg to assure you that when we used the term "Japs" we intended no discourtesy to the nation amongst which we live, and would like to draw your attention to the fact that a well known writer, Mr. Douglas Sladen (who is supposed to be a particular friend of Japanese) wrote a book entitled "The Japs at Home." Moreover, some of the English illustrated papers we see from time to time have used for their pictures such titles as "With the Japs in Manchuria," etc.

If therefore we have offended, we have done so in good company, having only followed the example of our elders and betters.

I remain, yours faithfully,

A CONTRIBUTOR TO "THE MODERNIAN."

[School-boys cannot be expected to know what kind of authority Mr. Sladen is on matters of taste, but surely their articles are over-seen before they appear in print. As for the vulgarities and absurdities that appear in English illustrated papers surely we who live in the country, while excusing, should avoid them.—Ed. J. M.]

"ROMAJI."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I read with a great deal of interest your comments on the above subject in the Japan Mail of Nov. 11th. You and Professor Chamberlain both have expressed some positive views upon the arbitrary and eccentric system of transliteration used by certain enthusiastic Japanese scholars. Since these men are among some of the leading educators in Japan it would be interesting to have them explain the position they take in writing Japanese words in Roman characters. But more interesting still would it be to have some foreign scholar and philosopher who thoroughly understands the Japanese mind, if there be any such scholar, explain to us the real working process of a Japanese mind that persists in calling the king of beasts sisi when expressing it in Roman characters, yet always writes it down shishi when using native characters. And what shall we say about their trying to make suku naku out of sukunaki? It is even worse than a Japanese in America who spells his name Ohnick, which has some resemblance to Onuki, his real name. In some things the Japanese possess an astonishing amount of self-confidence. How else can we account for the fact that to-day in Japanese public schools thousands of text books for learning English are being used in which faulty sentences are to be found on almost every page. The compilers of these books were perfectly confident that they knew how to write good English, else they are committing a crime against the students who have to pore over them day and night trying to learn our language. This amazing confidence is illustrated in another way. All over Japan Western music is being taught on the organ and in nine cases out of ten the teachers can't play a common hymn through without making mistakes. I have seen Japanese play on the organ and attempt to lead the music before a large audience when every note of voice and organ was an excruciating discord to our ears. Now I venture the suggestion that the real cause of these peculiar eccentricities of transliteration in the Romaji-Zasshi is that these editors and educators are perfectly persuaded in their own minds that they know more about the phonetic use of Roman letters and their application to Japanese than Hepburn, Chamberlain, Brinkley and other authorities. They know that sisi spells shishi in Japanese, and as they are native Japanese scholars how dare foreigners come in and dictate to them in a thing of this kind. If a shirt manufacturer sets up the sign "Shirt-Tailor" over his shop that is his business not the foreign reader. So whose business is it if a Japanese scholar writes sisi for shishi, natsi for nachi, and narbek for narubeku?

Yours truly,

WILL PATTHILO.

DR. BAEZ AND THE "NEW YORK TIMES."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the Japan Mail of Sept. 9th I find a paragraph, saying:

"American papers give prominence to the following telegram, dated New York, Aug. 15th.

"A special to The Times from Berlin says:—Although it is hard for me, as a German, to admit it, I am nevertheless of the opinion that if the war had been between Germany and Japan, instead of being between Russia and Japan, the Japanese would have been victorious, the difference being, that they would have paid more dearly for their victory.

"This admission was made to-day by Professor Baelz, who was formerly medical adviser to the Emperor of Japan, and who is regarded as the foremost German authority on the Mikado's country. He has just arrived from Japan.

"The Japanese victories, in Prof. Baelz's opinion, have been due partly, but only partly, to the domestic troubles in Russia and to the demoralised condition of the Czar's army. He says these are not the chief reasons. The chief reasons are to be found in the character of the Japanese."

So far you quote the New York Times special. You omit—probably and justly as nonsensical—a conversation which I am said to have had with the Emperor of Japan on the necessity of continuing or ending the war after the battle of Tsushima.

I must say, that when I first saw the article in question (it was sent to me by a friend from New York; and I found it a few days ago on my return from a long and distant journey) I was thunderstruck, for the whole thing, from the first to the last word, is a baseless and impertinent fraud.

I have never, not even in a private circle, made any of the alleged remarks about the German and Japanese armies. I have never talked to a reporter of the New York Times or of any other newspaper since my return from Japan. I have never written even one line to any newspaper since that time. On the very day, when The Times Special makes me say those things in Berlin, I was wandering harmlessly in the Austrian Alps, four hundred miles away.

But how to account for such wholesale impostures? I do not know. It may be or may not be that somebody who knew that I was a friend of Japan and that I had often defended the Japanese against what I considered unjust accusations, that somebody like that made use of my name to ventilate his own views and to give weight to them.

Anyhow I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have had nothing to do with the telegram published in the New York Times or with any other political article published in any newspaper or periodical claiming to come from me or to be inspired by me.

I am, dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

E. BAEZ.

MISTAKES IN TELEGRAMS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—With reference to your remarks in the Japan Daily Mail of to-day under the heading of "Local Telegraph Efficiency." I would like to put the following case before you which happened to me last week. The code word "Heraiverot," meaning "Do not remit unless at a better rate," was given to me instead as "Hirriverot," meaning "anxious to receive your report as quickly as possible." This happened in a cable of 19 words of which 6 others as well were as mutilated or undecipherable. It took 7 days to rectify the mistakes. It is hardly necessary to point out what loss, both in time and money, this might cost when big interests are concerned.

Yours,

A BUSINESS MAN,

November 22nd, 1905.

HOW THE LIENCHOW MISSIONARIES DIED.

The Canton correspondent of the China Mail, having interviewed the survivors, tells in graphic detail the story of the tragedy which occurred at Lienchow on Oct. 28. After describing the burning of the hospital buildings, he says:—

About this time the officials suggested to Dr. Machle that all missionaries should get into a boat and go to the yamen, across the river, in the city. But no boat was prepared. The party went down to the river and a ferry boat that had started from the opposite shore stopped in the middle of the stream, the boatman, pretending for a while to be coming to one shore, finally returned to the other shore.

IN A TRAP.

When the party turned away from the river he started again to come across and when they returned to the river he again returned to the opposite shore. The men, who had pretended to be from the yamen, sent to guide the party to the river, then told them to follow him up the river to a temple that was built in front of a cave, saying that they could be protected there. But soon after getting into the temple, "four ki away from the mission house" (about a mile and a third) Dr. Machle saw that the temple keeper was decidedly unfriendly and they realized that they were in a trap. They then considered going rapidly out into the country, but the crowd was too close after them, and they decided to take refuge in the cave.

The rest of the party preceded Dr. Machle. He turned to shut the door to the cave and bar it. Just as he succeeded there was a great noise outside and he realized that the temple was filled with the mob. The only entrance to the cave was through the temple. When he turned to go on into the cave the rest of the party had disappeared. He went on feeling his way as best he could, calling for Mrs. Machle, but "heard nothing of any one," "could hear no voice."

Finally he came to water. In a little while two men appeared and saw him before he realized their nearness to him. They demanded everything of value that he had, and he gave them his watch, some money and other things. They told him that he had better give them all he had, that they could tell the crowd where he was and that they would come and get him and kill him. Then they left. In a moment or so, he heard one of the men say, "No one is in there; we have just been in."

HIDING IN WATER.

He realized that he would be discovered if he remained there and so proceeded a little further. He fortunately found a place where the wall of the passage made a slight circle, and there was sufficient water for him to cover his entire body. He smeared mud over his clothing; used sand to sink his sun hat, and with only his nose and eyes out of the water, he remained there for several hours. Several times search parties got within a few feet of him, but the water being deep, they stopped before getting up to him. Search parties came first from one direction and then from the other, and he could hear them cursing their ill luck at not being able to find him. Finally search parties came from both directions, as if they suspected that he had previously fled from them when they came from one direction or another. These parties came almost together, with only a few feet separating them.

DR. MACHLE RESCUED.

After Dr. Machle had been in the water for several hours and everything had been quiet for a long time he heard some one call him, and in a little while lights appeared. He looked and recognized the garments of the District Magistrate. Reassured by his appearance and the language used in calling him, Dr. Machle made his presence known and went to the Magistrate. He was then told that the mob had dispersed and the people were then all feasting. While he was still in the cave, a short time after he had disclosed himself to the Magistrate, he saw some one creeping towards him through a dark passage. As he feared treachery, he leaped upon the man and seized his arms. Then the man said, "I am your friend; Miss Patterson is alive also and I have come to guide you to her."

MISS PATTERSON SAVED.

Dr. Machle went with the man and some soldiers and rescued Miss Patterson from a well, or pit, that was in the cave. The mouth of the well was very small, but it was some fifteen feet deep and wider at the bottom. It appears that the man came to Miss Patterson in the cave and offered to guide her to a place of safety, telling her that he had been a patient in Dr. Machle's hospital and would gladly do anything he could for her. He let her down in the well and went down with her. Mrs. Machle would have escaped also if the opening into the well had been sufficiently large for her to get into it. While they were in the well, search parties came and into the well, but they hid away under a ledge of rock and so escaped observation. Both Dr. Machle and Miss Patterson were disguised as Chinese soldiers and thus got safely to a guard boat and to the Civil Magistrate's yamen. Later, when it became known that they were there, they were secretly taken to the Military Magistrate's yamen. From there, they were sent by boat down the Lienchow river to the North river, thence to Sam Shui and from there by rail to Canton, being accompanied all the way by a guard of Chinese "soldiers."

ATTACK ON THE WOMEN.

The account of the massacre of the other missionaries are given by Chinese who witnessed the awful atrocities. I shrink from writing all that I have heard. Much must be left for readers to imagine. The women were spared the worst. Innocent little Amie Machle was the first to be put to death. She and Dr. Chesnut were the first ones found by the mob. They were stripped of all clothing and were thrown uninjured into the river. Dr. Chesnut could swim and safely reached a sand bar out in the river. Little Amie caught hold of some bushes growing on the river bank and so kept above water.

STABBED TO DEATH.

For some ten minutes they were let alone by the crowd who were interested elsewhere. But finally a heartless wretch ran a spear through the head of little Amie, and a number of men went out into the river and one ran a three pronged instrument through Dr. Chesnut's body and thus killed her. The two bodies were then brought ashore and were beaten and stabbed by the inhuman wretches, and finally when scarcely recognizable as human bodies they were again thrown into the river.

MRS. MACHLE SPEARED.

Mrs. Machle was the next one discovered. She was stripped and exposed to the ridicule of the crowd, then run through with a spear, beaten, and her lifeless body pierced again and finally thrown into the river.

SHOCKING TREATMENT OF THE PEALES.

After an interval of about half an hour Mr. and Mrs. Peale were found. They were stripped of all clothing and put up on an elevated place in full view of the crowd and made to stay there for about half an hour, enduring jibes and jeers and insults. In vain Mr. Peale made efforts to shield his wife. Finally a miscreant crept up from behind and crushed him to the ground with a heavy stone. While his wife was forced to look on, his body was pierced through and through and beaten until it was a shapeless mass. Then Mrs. Peale was beaten down with a heavy club, her body treated much as the rest had been, and with that of her husband was thrown into the river.

Thus ended the wild orgie, and with loud rejoicing the frenzied, blood thirsty crowd went off to the feast, leaving several scores to search the caves for the two missing ones. Fortunately darkness made it possible for the officials to rescue them in the manner already related.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Yokohama Literary Society held its 309th meeting on Friday evening in Van Schaick Hall and rounded out, as the President observed, its first full twenty years of active life. A most interesting "birthday" programme had been arranged, the principal item of which was the paper, prepared by Mr. W. B. Mason and Mrs. P. S. Hubbard, entitled "An Eye Witness of the Satsuma Rebellion." The President, in introducing the subject, said that in the previous session Mrs. Hubbard had kindly placed at the Society's disposal some letters written by her late husband in the early seventies. These letters were addressed to a sister in New England and were discovered after that lady's death in an old, long forgotten chest. To the first series, they would remember, Mr. J. P. Mollison contributed an introduction in which he drew freely upon his recollections of Yokohama and Kobe in those early days of foreign residence. That evening some more of Capt. Hubbard's letters would be read, the introduction this time being furnished by that very old resident, Mr. W. B. Mason, the joint-editor with Mr. B. H. Chamberlain of Murray's famous Handbook of Japan. Mr. Mason was in this country at the time of the Satsuma rebellion and was therefore familiar with all the events which Capt. Hubbard described, and so was able to supplement them in a very personal manner.

Mr. Mason spoke as follows:—

THE SATSUMA REBELLION.

To the older residents of Yokohama, the graphic letters of Captain Hubbard, dealing with the closing episodes of the Satsuma Rebellion, would require no introduction at my hands. Twenty-eight years, however, have passed by since then, and in a place like this, with its continually shifting foreign population, comparatively few witnesses of the dying struggle of feudalism in this empire remain with us. And yet how vivid still to those who did see it, is, for instance, the picture of the Satsuma men, homeward bound, passing down Honcho-dori, and carrying their swords, wrapped up in bundles, on their shoulders. For the edict had gone forth abolishing the practice of wearing swords, and by none was it so bitterly resented as by the Satsuma samurai. Those were truly days of constant change; but looking back on them and the methods by which the changes were effected, the retrospect reveals more of the orderly progress of evolution than the turbulent character of revolution, a term often erroneously applied at that time. As with the incoming tide, one saw the familiar landmarks gradually effaced, though the impelling force might not have been always clearly understood. The foreign observer, however, had a sufficiently accurate knowledge of the events that led up to the rebellion in Satsuma; he could see the signs in the air as clearly as, without doubt, did the Government itself; what he marvelled at was that more vigorous action was not taken to prevent the dire calamity that every thinking person knew to be inevitable if matters were allowed to drift. The conservatism of the Satsuma people did not include dislike of the foreigner. They were, perhaps, the best-known and most liked of all the men of Japan we then had to deal with. Plain speech between us on current events was common enough, and when the call to arms—for the summons home amounted to such—came for the Satsuma lads amongst our pupils, it was with a tug at the heart-strings that we, their teachers, bade them good-bye. All that is now changed; there is not the same sharp line of demarcation between the different provinces as prevailed in the early seventies.

I shall now briefly recapitulate the events alluded to and the chief incidents of the eight months prior to the stirring episodes described in Captain Hubbard's letters. The Satsuma Rebellion broke out in the month of February, 1877, and was only suppressed by the suicide of the leaders and the death or capture of the remnant of the rebel forces on the 24th September of the same year. The outbreak was popularly ascribed to dissatisfaction with the Europeanising policy of the Imperial Government, and such was undoubtedly the sentiment expressed by Shimazu Saburo, the Daimyo of Satsuma and Saigo Takamori, the great rebel leader. But in social and political upheavals the motives of men are too complex to admit of explanation in a word; disappointed ambition on the part of Saigo and many of his followers, was, at any rate, a potent factor. The Satsuma men saw that the abolition of the feudal system, followed as it quickly was by acts, in their eyes, of unjustifiable spoliation, deprived the samurai of the paramount position in the new government which they had fought for and, indeed, gained. It was not enough for them to hold all the chief military and naval commands; other departments existed to keep them in check. Amongst other things, this check was applied to their designs for an invasion of Korea, that country being then as now a difficult problem for Japanese statesmen. The most threatening factor in the outlook was undoubtedly the Military Academy, which, under the title of "Private School" had been established at Kagoshima, and in connection with which was an arsenal, employing hundreds of skilled workmen. Just before the outbreak of the rebellion, the students at Kagoshima alone numbered seven thousand, while branch schools had been opened in other towns and villages. "A spark alone," says Mr. Mounsey, "was necessary to cause the mine which had been so patiently and carefully laid, to explode. To ensure an explosion, a torch was applied to the mine, and this torch was the story of a plot to assassinate Saigo, which, it was stated, had been conceived by the Government, and was about to be executed by its agents." The true story of this alleged plot will probably never be known as all the revelations connected with it were extracted under torture. At any rate, it effected its purpose. This was in the first days of February. Saigo could no longer hold in his young and ardent commanders, and on the 17th of the same month, he marched out of his native town, proclaiming that he was bound on the legitimate quest of laying their grievances before the Emperor, his nominal retention of the title of Commander-in-chief of the Imperial army giving the assertion an air of credibility in the eyes of the ignorant peasantry. His forces numbered some 14,000 men, all belonging to the so-called "private schools," with 16 guns. By the 22nd February, they had arrived before the castle-town of Kumamoto, the capital of the province of Higo, and laid siege to the castle, which was occupied by a garrison of between two and three thousand men. Meanwhile the Government had sent an expedition under the command of Prince Arisugawa, who made his headquarters at Fukuoka, and who immediately sent two divisions under Generals Miyoshi and Nozu, numbering about 10,000 men, to stop the advance of the rebels. The first encounter resulted in a victory for the Imperialist forces. It may here be mentioned that the army, whose peace footing was then under 40,000 men, proved entirely inadequate to quell the outbreak, and had to be speedily reinforced in a novel way. Policemen from all parts of the country were called in to serve under the colours, the reason being that the new army was chiefly recruited from classes
